ROTHWELL & DISTRICT JOTTINGS.

The best attendance in the county last month was made by Rothwell school area, which had a percentage of 92 as compared with 89.4 for the county. This is very creditable, indeed, and the children, teachers, and attendance officer are to be congratulated. Rothwell has always had a good reputation educationally, and it must be very gratifying to the committee to have such results reported.

Owing to the holidays we were compelled to publish the paper last week on Saturday morning, but this was too early for the postal authorities, who were apparently too busy delivering greeting cards and presents to attend to ordinary correspondence. Letters which should have reached our office on Wednesday and Thursday were not delivered until Saturday morning, and correspondents will, therefore, know the reason why their contributions did not appear in the last issue. It is tantalising to receive a budget of news after the paper has gone to press, but the holidays seemingly upset all work.

The failure of the gas supply in Leeds caused great inconvenience to newspapers. Had the old system of type-setting been in vogue the work would have gone on smoothly, but nowadays newspapers are "set-up" by linotype machines, and as gas is necessary to melt the lead in the casting pot operations were brought to a standstill until a substitute for gas was found. Blow lamps were used for the purpose indicated, and the machines were kept going. The gas failure has, however, meant a considerable waste of time and money.

With the advent of the New Year many people will be looking forward to better times, and it is well that this feeling of hope is the common possession of humanity, because pessimism is the first step on the downgrade. "Better luck next year," the motto of Whitkirk C.C., is not a bad one, and everybody might adopt it, but it would be of little value if all human means to achieve success were not taken advantage of. The element of luck enters into life, just as it enters into games, and that is one reason why things come so easy to some persons, but, after all, each individual can, to a certain extent, shape his or her own life. And if people do their best they can do no more. Usually those who make good resolutions are like the "tope" who, awakening in the morning with a headache, vows he will indulge no more, but as soon as the pain passes he is at his old game again.

Throughout the district trade has been good during the past year. Farmers may be pardoned their little grumble, because they have many disadvantages to contend with, but I believe they have had a fairly good year. Coal-mining, which gives employment to thousands of workmen in the district—Garforth, Micklefield, Bowers Allerton, Allerton Bywater, Woodlesford, Rothwell, and Lofthouse—has been prosperous, and I have no doubt substantial profits have been made by the owners and good wages by the men.

Tadcaster, as a brewing centre, is growing year by year, and if the buying up of more companies goes on, the business will reach enormous proportions. Selby, however, seems to have the most promising future before it. From a small market town it is destined to become a large industrial centre, and the erection of works on both sides of the river is proof that business men realize the value of Selby as a distributing centre.

The suggested building of a railway station at Stanks, Crossgates, has not, I hope, escaped the observation of the N.E.R. officials, because the residents are keenly interested in the question. Stanks is twenty minutes' walk from Cross Gates, and it is a great inconvenience to the people to have to walk so far. If a station were put down at the bridge at Stanks it would mean increased revenue for the Company, because the great majority of the people would use it, and the increased travelling facilities would have a tendency to develop the land outside the city boundary for building purposes and bring a large population to the district. Development, it is patent, must take place in that direction. A petition, signed by the residents, and sent to the Railway Co. would perhaps have some effect.

Seacroft is not the only part of the new ward that has not the benefit of public lighting. Crossgates has its streets illuminated, but why has Stanks been neglected? The residents are without a supply of gas, and surely the Corporation should see that all their ratepayers have an opportunity of using this illuminant. The Crossgates Gas Co have exclusive powers of lighting in this area, and pressure should be brought to bear on them to extend their mains, so that every part of the district may have gas. If that were done, public lighting would follow.

Are the Hunslet Guardians showing preferential treatment to persons in receipt of relief? The discussion at last meeting would indicate that some are given meat and others are not, but if all are equally needy it seems a singular policy to pursue. Because coal can be bought cheaper at Rothwell than at Hunslet is no reason for preferring coal to the poor residents in the city and withholding it from others. The relieving officers apparently see difficulties in discriminating in this way, and it is certain that preference should be shown to any individuals. Before anyone receives relief it is assumed that he or she is destitute, and if all are destitute all should be treated alike.

In keeping with the spirit of the season, the Tadcaster magistrates dealt leniently with a young man who committed the blunder of trying to do what Leeds and other places can do with impunity—annexing other people's property. They were young men of good character, and they were perhaps more foolish than anything else in the circumstances, and it is possible that they might have been given another chance, if it was a serious offence; but they were of respectable young fellows, and the prosecution itself was great punishment to them.

The news that an arbitrator has been appointed to settle the differences between Leeds and Tadcaster District Council is a welcome. Certain motories are owing the District Council owing to the loss involved to the area by the annexation of Crossgates by the city, and a settlement should have been come to ere now, but the parties were unable to agree on all the claims. The District Council have a tidy sum to come in, and the Guardians will get a substantial amount from Leeds Board, too.

Is the Monk Fryston pound public property? As lord of the manor, the Earl of Londesboro' has offered this site to the local authority for a highway improvement, and Mr Hamlet Booth, M.P., who is a member of the District Council, expressed the opinion that the property was not the Earl's to give away. It has been managed by the Court Leet, one of the Courts of the Manor, and the official—the pinder—who has charge of it was appointed by it. Usually in such cases the ground has been given by the lord of the manor, and when it has ceased to be utilized for the purpose it was intended the land reverts to the lord.

A precisely similar case occurred at Templenewsam, where a few years ago the lord of the manor gave a piece of land, included in which was the site of the pinfold—a lane at Hilton bears the name—for the building of a parochial hall, and the question was investigated by the public men. Like Mr Booth, some of them thought it was public property, but they were forced to the conclusion that the pinfold belonged to the lord of the manor, to whom it went when it ceased to be used for temporarily sheltering stray animals. In view of this case, and therefore, one is inclined to think that Mr Booth's contention cannot be upheld. The pinfold at Colton, too, has disappeared, and no one had any protest to make against its removal.

Nowadays when the police discover cattle straying they turn them into a field or take them to an inn and then go in search of the owner. If any cost is incurred the owner has to pay, and, in addition, he is usually brought before the magistrates and fined. Many people may think this is harsh treatment of the poor farmer, but straying horses and cows are a great danger to traffic, and the public must be protected. In the old days the conditions were altogether different—the traffic was very much less, the population was smaller, and the possibility of accident was remote. The destruction of the pound, however, marks the passing of an old institution, and a further curtailment of the work of the Court Leet.

Roundhay, Shadwell, Seacroft, and Crossgates ratepayers, being citizens of Leeds, are presumably interested in the administration of the city's affairs, and they will have observed in the newspapers somewhat surprising information as to the effect of the political system when applied to local government. The introduction of politics into municipal contests has been condemned again and again in this journal, and it is now rather amusing to notice newspapers, which have given wholehearted advocacy to the party system, offering scathing criticism of the very thing they have hitherto blessed. According to these journals the system practically robs the city of the services of the best business men, who view membership of the City Council as no honour, inasmuch as it means the aggrandisement of party only, and, further, it results in inefficiency and waste. All these are very old arguments, used repeatedly in this column years ago, but so long as political chiefs are countenanced, the present rotten system will go on.

Honest men have good reason to be dissatisfied with the administration of their affairs. We are told by these party newspapers that political system is productive of what might almost be called corruption. Men, working for political parties, demand a reward, and it is said that, in consequence, the Corporation departments are not only over-manned, but that many of the employees are "inefficients." Well, that is not for the suffering ratepayers, the employers of labour, and the workmen engaged in the various trades of the city, I would unhesitatingly say that a place that tolerated such a system deserved all the punishment that it has brought upon itself. Officials, it is said, are afraid to dismiss men they have no use for, lest they should receive the kindly attentions of Councillors. How, then, can a business concern like Leeds be properly managed if men cannot apply business principles to it?

The combination of two parties is suggested in order to fight an aggressive third party, but that will not bring about the elimination of the political element. The proposal comes because the men who have had their rewards under the political system are not quite satisfied with the generosity of their masters, who have not opened the city purse on demand. The "fathers" have been ungrateful, but they have been the victims of their own folly, if the statements put forward by their own newspapers are true. If the city is to be managed efficiently the political system must be abolished, and that will mean the retirement of a few of the present Councillors, and even that is preferable to the present chaotic condition of affairs. Appeal to the ratepayers on grounds other than politics. There is a ratepayers' Council but I have been told that its efforts do not confine their energies to trying to put the "inefficients" in the various departments of the city, but to the finding employment for the unemployed, and reducing the number of such applicants is the last thing that the Council desires. I am glad to see that the programme and quite half-a-dozen couple gallantly

CORRESPONDENCE.

GARFORTH ROADS AND FOOTPATHS.

Sir,—Kindly allow me to ask through your columns why our roads and footpaths here in Garforth were so sadly neglected during the storm? On Wednesday all that had been done was just a track cleared by the front ploughs, and one man spread ashes on the Gotsee Hill and the Cliffe Hill with a barrow and shovel, instead of having a van and spreading the ashes therefrom so as to make a thorough trail. I saw some waggons coming down the Cliffe Hill with great difficulty; coming down is worse than going up with four wheels, and I should like to know who is responsible if anything should happen.

The Boys have some long slides across the roads on Moor Garforth and near to the police station, and anyone driving across might have an accident. The very boys who are sliding might be killed or maimed by a motor-car coming along. I should also like to know who is responsible for this—the Council or the police?—Yours, etc.

A RATEPAYER.

LIEUT. BOUGHEY, R.N., AND MR E. H. FOSTER, J.P.

(To the Editor).

Sir,—Mr Martin Harvey rushes in theatrically where apparently Mr Foster fears to tread. He accuses a challenge to me to give instances of Protestants being persecuted for their religious faith. "Just half-a-dozen will suffice to be going on with." How modest! Then he says that Catholics are "prevented from being elected to serve on public bodies or fill any lucrative positions in practically every case where the Orange Party is strong enough to govern results." But does Mr Harvey give us any instances in support of his statement? He does not. Not even "half-a-dozen to be going on with." How strange!

Mr Harvey asks me to deny that a meeting of Protestants was recently held at Ballymoney to protest against Sir Edward Carson's policy. Why should I deny it? I know such a meeting was held, and I have no doubt some Protestants were present, including the two men he names. What does Mr Harvey expect to prove from that? No one denies that there is a handful of Protestant Home Rulers in Ireland, just as there is a handful of Catholic Unionists.

As to the history of the passing of the Union, I could easily correct the impression he tries to convey. But it is not necessary. Even if the Union was carried as bad as alleged, they don't touch the point to-day. It perhaps never struck Mr Harvey as worth considering that, while the eminent authorities he quotes (for this occasion only) condemn the means employed in enacting the Union, they equally agree that its effect has been beneficial, and its maintenance is vital necessity of to-day.

There are whole counties in Ireland to-day where a Protestant has no chance either of election to the local bodies or of any paid appointment under them.

The plain fact is that the case will never be met by putting the Protestants under the Catholics, or vice versa. The only safe and impartial rule is that of the Imperial Parliament, whose government is equally fair to both.

And my belief in this is formed from the teaching of history and personal experience.—Yours truly,

E. H. BOUGHEY, Lieutenant, R.N.

The Cedars, Hasby, York,
Dec. 31st, 1913.

THE YEAR THAT'S GONE.

The year 1913 has gone, and many superstitious people are glad that it has gone, because to them it was associated with an unlucky number. They bemoaned and attributed to it all their illnesses, their losses, and their disappointments, but it was the thirteenth year of the twentieth century. The twelve months just past were no worse for being accorded to the cabalistic, dire, 1913. Luck is not a reality, it has no existence, and is only a phantom fancy of the human mind. There are no unlucky numbers, years nor days, and we shall be happier if we dispel such ideas, and commence the New Year with the resolution to make it the best of our lives.

Someone will complain that coal is now double the price it was twenty years ago, and may be so, but there are always some compensating circumstances to relieve the gloom; gas is down, and warmth and light can be procured at cheaper rates.

We frequently hear the expression, "Oh, for the good old days," a saying almost as ancient as Methuselah, and which is often met with in old records. All down the centuries certain pessimistic people have been wont to think that the days gone were the best. That is a great mistake, for never were any "good old days" the present are the best, and the future years will be better. Who would like to go back to the delightful if halfpenny dips to read by? Who would tolerate, or would keep his temper, if he had to go down by well and bucket, or choose a day in which to wash in buckets? This was a customary duty in the "good old days," and if it was bought at a penny a hogshead from the water-carter who traversed the streets crying, "Water! fresh river water!" Yet to-day we can have pure water laid on for a penny per week per family, therefore compared to the usages of a century ago. If our great grand-fathers desired the luxury of a bath, they went and bathed themselves in the rivers, and frequently they lost their lives in the process.

Many people may think this is harsh treatment of the poor farmer, but straying horses and cows are a great danger to traffic, and the public must be protected. In the old days the conditions were altogether different—the traffic was very much less, the population was smaller, and the possibility of accident was remote. The destruction of the pound, however, marks the passing of an old institution, and a further curtailment of the waste of the Court Leet.

Roundhay, Shadwell, Seacroft, and Crossgates ratepayers, being citizens of Leeds, are presumably interested in the administration of the city's affairs, and they will have observed in the newspapers somewhat surprising information anent the effect of the political system when applied to local government. The introduction of politics into municipal contests has been condemned again and again in this journal, and it is now rather amusing to notice newspapers, which have given whole-hearted advocacy to the party system, offering seathing criticism of the very thing they have hitherto blessed. According to these journals the system practically robs the city of the services of the best business men, who view membership of the City Council as no honour, inasmuch as it means the aggrandisement of wirepullers, and results in inefficiency and waste. All these are very old arguments, used repeatedly in this column years ago, but so long as political chiefs are counte-nanced, the present rotten system will go on.

Honest men have good reason to be dissatisfied with the administration of their affairs. We are told by these party newspapers that the political system is productive of what might almost be called corruption. Men, working for political parties, demand a reward, and it is said that, in consequence, the Corporation departments are not only over-manned, but that many of the employees are "inefficients." Were it not for the suffering ratepayers, the employers of labour, and the workmen engaged in the various trades of the city, I would unhesitatingly say that a place that tolerated such a system deserved all the punishment that it has brought upon itself. If officials, it is said, are afraid to dismiss men they have no use for, lest they should receive the kindly attentions of Councillors. How, then, can a business concern like Leeds be properly managed if men cannot apply business principles to it?

The combination of two parties is suggested in order to fight an aggressive third party, but that will not bring about the elimination of the political element. The proposal comes because the city's political system are not quite satisfied with the generosity of their masters, who have not opened the city purse on demand. The "fathers" think the men cannot help themselves, but they have been overtaken by their own folly, if the statements in this way, and it is unfair that preference should be shown to any individuals. Before the newspapers are true. If the city is to be managed efficiently the political system must be dropped, and that will mean the retirement of a few of the present Councillors, and men must appeal to the ratepayers on grounds other than the politics. When a non-party Council has been elected it will be time then to set about weeding out and reducing the number of men employed to the requirements of the work. People say that the "inefficients" in the various departments are the tangey formed an ordinary item of the programme, and quite half-a-dozen couple gallantly but it would be idle to attempt it, because there would be no guarantee, unless the political system were rooted out, that the evils complained of would not crop up again.

Not very long ago an official was required by a certain public body, and applications for the post were invited, and several men responded. The qualifications of all the candidates were known to the members, and eventually they reduced the number of applicants to two. One had better qualifications than the other, but it was a farce putting his name forward, because, although he was no politician, he was supposed to hold different political views to the majority of the members, and whom would have voted for him had it not been for the party system. The other man got the appointment. If efficiency is to be the test of the best men, no matter their political opinions, should always be given preference.

Was she complaint anent meetings in the market place at Tadcaster intended to produce restrictions against any class? Rather expansive language, it is alleged, is used by people at this rendezvous, and the matter was brought to the attention of the District Council, who very properly would have nothing to do with it. The police in the town are very keen, and it is singular that they have not proceeded against anyone for using words outside the ordinary vocabulary. Seeing they have got the hint, they will now keep their ears wide open. Meetings are held from time to time in the market place, and the custom may give offence to some people, but if meetings are allowed at all there must be no restrictions. On the other hand, if persons in an open-air meeting use offensive language the remedy is not to abolish the right of meeting, but to punish the offenders in accordance with the law.

CHILDREN IN WORKHOUSES—NEW ORDER.

The Local Government Board has issued to Boards of Guardians throughout the country copies of new orders drafted and promulgated for the primary purpose of the consolidation of existing regulations for the administration of Poor Law. This consolidation was recommended by the Royal Commission, and further progress will be made when the Departmental Committee have completed their examination of the existing orders, and it is expected that a comprehensive order will eventually be issued. In an explanation of the orders forwarded with them the Board give detailed advice regarding the administration of institutions under the control of Boards of Guardians, but the principal new feature of the orders relates to the children.

It requires that children over three years of age shall not, except in special circumstances, be retained in the institutions. This exclusion of children over three comes into force from and after March 31st, 1915, thus giving a full year for those Boards of Guardians who have not yet removed children from their central institution to make arrangements for so doing. Where children are now maintained in the Workhouse the Guardians should therefore make the arrangements necessary to provide for them elsewhere.

Another innovation is that which requires medical officers to examine infants under 18 months once at least every fortnight, and children over 18 months at least once a month.

It is also required that a House Committee should be appointed by every Board with a view to more efficient administration. Many Poor Law Unions already have such a committee, with advantageous results.

Other instructions deal with the administration in detail, such as bathing, nursing, mid-wives, and so on, and the Board conclude by stating that they realise the improvement made in the Poor Law administration which has been effected in recent years, and they recognise that in many instances the new Orders only give effect to what has already been accomplished by a number of Boards of Guardians and Board Trust Orders now issued will facilitate still further improvement, and will materially aid the Guardians in fulfilling their responsibilities to the community, and to those who come under their charge as inmates of the institution.

THE VILLAGE POUND.—At Saturday's meeting of the Tadcaster Rural District Council, the Earl of Londesborough wrote offering, in accordance with the request of the jury at a recent Court Leet for the Manor of Monk Fryston, to convey the site of the village pound to the Council for the purposes of a much-needed improvement of the highway which at this spot forms the junction of the Leeds and Selby and the Leeds and Tadcaster main roads. Mr F. H. Booth, M.P., said the pound was public property, and he therefore failed to see how the noble Earl could convey to the public what already belonged to them. The Highways Committee was instructed to inspect the site, and report whether the improvement would be worth the contingent liability for the repair and maintenance of a stone wall which now separates the pound from a deep disused quarry.

BARWICK FESTIVITIES.—The fancy dress dance and party held last Xmas, and in which the village was so interested, were not repeated on the same scale this year owing to a lamentable lack of cohesion on the part of residents. But Mr T. Robshaw and the members of the village Institute stepped into the breach and organised a fancy dress dance, which was held on Friday night with much success. The costumes ranged from the simple "bed effective disguise of "Father" as a "retired Mars" to the more theatrical effects of visitors from town. Amongst the ladies the pincette costume (won by a Potternton lady) and the glass costume (Miss Mosby, Leeds) were especially noticeable and obtained prizes, awarded on the decision of a well-known dancing that it was unanimously decided to promote the gaiety from 2 to 4 a.m. As evidence been that residents do not confine their attentions also gather to the old world dances associated with Christmas, let it be put on record that the Barwick formed an ordinary item of the pro-

GARFORTH ROADS AND FOOTPATHS.

Sir,—Kindly allow me to ask through your columns why our roads and footpaths here in Garforth were so sadly neglected during the storm? On Wednesday all that had been done was just a track cleared by the snow plough, and one man spread ashes on the Goose Hill and the Cliff Hill with a barrow and shovel instead of having a cart and spreading the ashes thereon as to make a thorough track.

I saw some waggons coming down the Cliffe Hill with great difficulty; coming down is worse than going up with four wheels, and I should like to know who is responsible if anything should happen.

The boys have some long slides across the roads on Moor Garforth and near to the police station, and anyone driving across might have an accident. The very boys who are sliding might be killed or maimed by a motor-car coming along. I should also like to know who is responsible for this—the Council or the police?—Yours, etc.

A RATEPAYER.

LIEUT. BOUGHEY, R.N., AND MR E. H. FOSTER, J.P.

(To the Editor).

Sir,—Mr Martin Harvey rushes in theatrically where apparently Mr Foster fears to tread. He means a challenge to me to give instances of Protestants being persecuted for their religious faith. "Just half-a-dozen will suffice to be getting on with." How modest! Then he says that Catholics are "prevented from being elected to serve on public bodies or fill any lucrative positions in practically every case where the Orange Party is strong enough to govern results." But does Mr Harvey give us any instances in support of his statement? He does not. Not even "half-a-dozen to be going on with." How strange!

Mr Harvey asks me to deny that a meeting of Protestants was recently held at Blymhurst to protest against Lloyd George and Carson's policy. Why should I deny it? I know such a meeting was held, and I have no doubt some Protestants were present, including the one I am writing to. What does Mr Harvey expect to prove from that? No one denies that there is a handful of Protestant Home Rulers in Ireland, just as there is a handful of Catholic Unionists.

As to the history of the passing of the Union, I could easily correct the impression he tries to convey. But it is not necessary. Even if the means employed were as bad as alleged, they don't touch the case to-day. It perhaps never struck Mr Harvey as worth consideration that, while the eminent authorities he quotes (on this occasion only) condemn the means employed in enacting the Union, they equally agree that its effect has been beneficial, and its maintenance is a vital necessity of to-day.

There are whole countries in Ireland to-day where a Protestant has no chance either of election to the local bodies or of any paid appointment under them.

The plain fact is that the case will never be met by putting the Protestants under the Catholics, or vice versa. The only safe and immediate solution is that of the Imperial Parliament, whose government is equally fair to both.

And my belief in this is formed from the teaching of history and personal experience.—Yours truly,

E. H. BOUGHEY, Lieutenant, R.N.
The Cedars, Hasby, York,

THE YEAR THAT'S GONE.

The year 1913 has gone, and many superstitious people are glad that it has gone, because to them it was associated with an unlucky number. They bemoaned and attributed to it all their illnesses, their losses, and their disappointments, because it was the thirteenth year of the twentieth century. The twelve months just past were no worse for being, according to the calendar, 1913. Luck is not a reality, it has no existence, and is only a phantom fancy of the human mind. There are no unlucky numbers, years nor days, and we shall be happier if we dispel such ideas, and commence the New Year with the resolution to make it the best of our lives.

Someone will complain that coal is now double the price it was twenty years ago; this may be so, but there are always some compensating circumstances to relieve the gloom; gas is down, and warmth and light can be procured at cheaper rates.

We frequently hear the expression, "Oh, for the good old days," a saying almost as ancient as Methuselah, and which is often met with in old records. All down the centuries certain pessimistic people have been wont to think that the days past were the best. This is a great fallacy, there never were any "good old days"—the present are the best, and the future years will be better. Who would like to go back to the delights of farthingy dips to read by? Who would tolerate, or could keep his temper, if he had to go down to the Aire several times a day to draw his water? This was a customary duty in the "good old days," unless it was the same scale this year owing to a lamentable lack of records. All down the centuries certain bought at a penny a flagon-full from the waterpeople who traversed the streets crying, "Water! fresh river water!" Yet to-day we can have pure water laid on for no end of useful purposes. What a contrast compared to the usages of a century ago. If our great grand-fathers desired the luxury of a bath they went and washed themselves in the river, and frequently they lost their lives in the process.

He carries in his hand a small leather case, which is attached to his wrist by a small steel chain. A GARFORTH RAILWAY CASE.

A HALTON LAD'S OFFENCE.

At the Leeds West Riding Petty Sessions on Tuesday James Walker (15), a pony driver, of Leeds, was summoned for travelling on the North-Eastern Railway and not paying his fare, and Joseph Wilson (15), pony driver, of Halton, was summoned for aiding and abetting Walker in the offence. Both lads are employed at Garforth.

Mr T. Pearson prosecuted for the Company, and said that on the arrival of the 5.15 p.m. train from Garforth at Marsh Lane, Walker gave up a ticket from Garforth to Crossgates.

Alfred Brown, porter, stationed at Marsh Lane, said that he was taking tickets upon the arrival of the 5.15 p.m. train from Garforth. Walker got out of the train and handed a ticket available from Garforth to Crossgates. He walked away unconcernedly and witness went after him, and asked him if he knew what kind of tickets he had given up, and he replied that it was to Marsh Lane. Witness asked to see the remainder of the set of tickets, and defendant replied he had not a set, but the ticket had been given to him by some one who usually got off the train at Crossgates.

Walker did not appear, but was represented by his mother.

Wilson was in Court, and said while in the pit that day, Walker lost his ticket, and to help him out, he gave him one of his set, which was available from Garforth to Crossgates. He understood that Walker would get out and walk from Crossgates.

The Bench fined Walker 5s. and costs and Wilson 2s. 6d. and costs.

A ROTHWELL MAN'S LANGUAGE.

"OF WHICH ANY MAN WOULD BE ASHAMED."

At the Leeds West Riding Petty Sessions on Thursday George Newbould, a miner, of Rothwell, was summoned by Mrs Lilly Court, of 12, Open View, Carlton Lane, Rothwell, for using abusive language.

Mr E. F. Maud represented the prosecutrix, and said the defendant had used language to which any man would be ashamed.

Evidence was given by Mrs Lilly Court, who said that about 11 p.m. on Friday, December 12th, she heard a shuffling in her house with the blind drawn up, and she saw Newbould outside the window. He was using abusive language in reference to herself. He remained outside the house for about ten minutes.

John Edward Horner, of 14, Open View, Carlton Lane, said on the night in question he was standing at his door and heard the defendant shouting out the language complained of outside Mrs Court's house. There were several of the neighbours and their children outside the house at the time. After being there some time he came towards witness and commenced using bad language. The next night, said witness, Newbould came with his wife to apologise, but said he would shoot himself before apologising to Mrs Court.

Defendant, in the witness box, said he had an altercation with Horner and nearly got to fight, ing, but denied giving anywhere near Mrs Court's house.

A fine of 20s. and costs was imposed.

EXCITING INCIDENT AT OULTON.

A COLLISION—SEQUEL.

At the Leeds West Riding Petty Sessions on Tuesday George Hy Stevens, motor driver, of Leeds, was summoned for driving a steam waggon in a negligent manner.

P.C. Abbott stated that about 8.50 p.m. on Friday, December 19th, he received a complaint and went along the Oulton Lane, Oulton, where he found a steam waggon driven by the defendant with the front part in a ditch. The officer asked him why he had boat driving on the footpath, and defendant said it was owing to the poor light he carried. Defendant, said the officer, smelt strongly of drink but was not drunk. In Oulton Lane he had been on the footpath with the engine for over thirty yards.

Percy Carr, pony driver, of Woodlesford, said he saw the defendant driving along Oulton Lane. He seemed to be the worse for drink and collided with a brewery waggon, smashing the lamp.

In his statement to the Bench, defendant said the steam waggon was a new one that day, and the steering gear worked very stiff.

A fine of 20s. and costs was imposed.

LOCAL GUARDIANS AND VAGRANTS.

HOW TO DEAL WITH THEM.

Tadcaster and Selby Boards of Guardians have referred the proposal for the administering of relief to casual paupers by the way-ticket system to committees. The work cannot be done except by combination, and it is a method for enabling Union authorities to do a little more for the genuine out-of-work than for the confirmed vagrant who takes to the road from sheer love of idleness. Those who have seen it in operation in the Southern counties, which have been the first to adopt it, say that it has, to a very large extent, answered the purpose for which it was set up, though it does not pretend to be a solution of the whole problem or what to do with the professional tramp. For him, in the opinion of some investigators, there is no cure but a labour colony, when the ingrained habit of shirking may be scientifically treated.

If the Northern counties adopt the way-ticket system with as much heartiness, and in the same way as many of the Southern counties, it should do something to arrest indiscriminate almsgiving, and reduce the number of professional vagrants by cutting off their supplies from misguided members of the public who give their coppers without calculating that thereby they are increasing the begging nuisance. A way-ticket, which will be readily obtainable by every genuine worker who has to temporarily avail himself of the shelter of the casual ward, will pass him through a county from Union to Union. He is exempted from any task while in the ward, and, getting his discharge immediately after breakfast, he may go forth on his quest for employment with a passport that will enable him to obtain food at one of the several shops open round on the ticket sufficient bread and cheese for a midday meal. If he has a family extra tickets are issued. To obtain a way-ticket he must satisfy the workhouse-master that he has worked at some employment other than a casual job within a recent period, three months or thereabouts, and that he has a reasonable expectation of finding work in the place to which he is setting out.

The duty of deciding whether an applicant for the way-ticket is a real worker or a confirmed "roadster" must be entrusted to the workhouse master. He gets rather expert in distinguishing between the genuine and the counterfeit, and the worker in search of employment is pretty sure to carry with him either his trade union or insurance card, or some letter of recommendation. At present all casuals are treated alike in most Unions, and the policy of the Local Government Board is to obtain a classification that will make it possible to discriminate between the deserving and the undeserving. The number of working-men who apply for relief at the casual ward naturally varies in different parts of the country, but at the present time in the industrial centres it is not a large percentage, and the system is one which will help them to avoid lapsing into a career of habitual vagrancy.

CHURCH FENTON CRICKET CLUB

WHIST DRIVE AND DANCE.

The whist drive and dance held in the school at Church Fenton on Friday night in aid of the funds of the Church Fenton Cricket Club proved both socially and financially an unqualified success. The event was promoted by Mr A. B. Holgreaves, who secured as patrons, the Member for the Division (Abl. G. R. Lane Fox), Abl. E. C. Brook-Shaw, J.P., Mr Ernest H. Foster, J.P., C.C.; and Mr W. Sykes, C.C., and being well supported by a host of friends there is no wonder at the success of the undertaking. The company assembled numbered close upon 90, and it is gratifying to announce that the funds of the club will benefit to the extent of between £5 and £6.

In the whist drive competition four prizes were offered, viz., 2 for ladies and 2 for gentlemen. There being, however, more lady competitors than gentlemen a few ladies played as gentlemen and, singularly enough, two of these were winners, and consequently all the prizes were carried off by the ladies. The winners were:—Ladies—Miss Daisy D. Holgreaves, 2 Mrs Keats and Miss Dorothy Hey (equal). Mrs Keates very kindly waived her claim in favour of Miss Hey. Gentlemen—1 Miss Ella Sissons, 2 Mr Ethel Lamb.

The Vicar, who was one of the players, made the presentations.

After the drive refreshments were served, and then dancing was heartily and merrily indulged in. Messrs W. D. Foxton and J. H. Poulter acted as M.C.'s.

The music was supplied by Mr T. W. Hague, of Ulleskelf, who gave entire satisfaction. Special thanks are due to the ladies who so liberally contributed to the excellent supply of refreshments.

RURAL DEPOPULATION.

A CHECK.

Within the last few days the Census of Occupations for England and Wales in 1911 has become available (writes Mr Chiozza Money), and we are therefore able to throw new light upon the subject of rural depopulation.

The official census makes no comparison with the figures of 1901, but your readers can, I think, rely upon the following statement, which I have got out from the last two censuses:—

	1901.	1911.
Farmers and graziers	203,000	209,000
Relatives of farmers working on farms	80,000	98,000
Bailiffs and foremen	23,000	22,000
Shepherds	25,000	21,000
Farm servants: horsemen, cattlemen, and ordinary agricultural laborers	584,000	622,000
Total	924,000	972,000

This table, it will be observed, relates to England and Wales only, and to males only. In considering it it is necessary to remember that in 1901 a great number of agricultural laborers were serving out of the country, and that there is always a small element of error present in census statistics. When these things are allowed for, however, it remains perfectly plain that the rural exodus was checked in the last decennial period. The number of male persons, farmers and employers, engaged in agriculture in England and Wales increased from 924,000 in 1901 to 972,000 in 1911, being an increase of 48,000, or a little over 5 per cent. The facts will surprise those who have been stating that an enormous migration from the country to the towns is still taking place.

It will be useful to add a comparison of the census figures for male farm servants at the last four censuses:—

1911	622,000

I may remind your readers that the census figures for 1911 are now over two years old, and that during that period the extraordinary efforts made by the British Dominions to persuade British rural workers to leave Britain have continued and perhaps increased. It may be, therefore, that a renewed decline has set in from the 1911 census. Whether that is the case or not, the above figures should bear a lesson for those who are tempted to tell urban audiences of working men that their wages can be raising by stemming a "flood" of rural migration.

ROTHWELL TEMPERANCE SOCIETY.

ANNUAL GATHERING.

The annual gathering of the Rothwell Temperance Society held in the Council Schools, Carlton Lane, Rothwell, on Friday night, proved a great success. The preparations had been admirably arranged by the members of the General Committee, who, in addition to arranging the programme, provided the prizes for a whist drive. The opening ceremony took place in the General Hall of the School, the Rothwell Temperance Band playing several carols, after which Mr Backhurst (President) spoke of the need for an active Temperance Society in Rothwell. He also introduced the host and hostess of the evening, Mr and Mrs G. R. Liversidge of Leeds, who gave interesting addresses. A short musical programme was gone through.

A trombone trio was given by Messrs Newton, Brown, and Lord, and the Hollings Quartette Party (Middleton) contributed a quartette.

The hon. sec. (Mr Field Clark) read his report, and urged upon the members to redouble their efforts to reduce the debt of £400 which stands against the society.

Whist followed, Messrs R. Sidbottom and G. R. Liversidge acting as stewards over thirty-three tables. The prizes were won by the following:—First and special prize for the highest scorer (on all-parting, valued at £6, painted and given by Mr Field Clark), Mr H. Wilkinson; 1st ladies' (tea set and tea pot), Mrs G. R. Liversidge, 147; 1st gent's, (hall dinner set), Mr J. W. Dacre, 140; 2nd ladies' (flower stand), Mrs W. H. Wilson, 141; 2nd gent's, (clock set), Mr Alfred Dolphin, 145; 3rd ladies' (handbag), Miss N. Brown, 140; 3rd gent's, (walk'g), Mr C. Brooke, 143; booby, A. Lamb and H. Hughes.

For the non-players of whist an enjoyable concert was provided in the small schoolroom, those contributing to the programme being the Hollings' Quartette Party and Miss Laura Ellis, of Swillington.

Dancing commenced at 10.32 and was continued until 2 a.m. The tango was introduced by Mr Liversidge, and many present quickly picked up the steps, the dance being repeated three times. The music was supplied by Mr E. Wilson (pianist), and Mr T. Hollings (violinist).

NINE MILES FOR A DOCTOR.

Bowland (Yorkshire) District Council have decided to accept the resignation of Dr. J. J. Smithes, who has been medical officer for over thirty years.

Discussing the appointment of a successor, the Rev J. C. Garnett, rector of Sholdburn, urged that a doctor resident in the village should be given the post. He pointed out that at present the villagers had to go nine miles when they required medical assistance, and double fees were charged.

Mr J. Pinder suggested that the villagers were so healthy that a doctor could eat make a living.

Mr Garnett, however, said the practice was a large one.

A MAN'S LEAP AT DRINGHOUSES.

A sensational affair occurred on Tuesday, a man having, it is alleged, jumped from a railway bridge just outside Dringhouses.

It is stated that the man was seen by platelayers to climb the parapet of the bridge and jump on to the railway lines. The N.E.R. police were appointed, and the man was found lying on the metals in a dazed condition. He was taken to the York County Hospital, where he said he had walked from Hull the previous night.

Subsequently it transpired that the man's name was Thomas Oliver, and that he resided in Manchester Street, Hull. The injuries sustained by the man were not of a very serious nature, and are said to consist chiefly of abrasions and shock. No explanation has been offered of his reasons for jumping from the bridge.

Sums varying from 5s. to 1s. 6d. are offered to soldiers on furlough for each recruit they obtain.

GARFORTH'S CLAIM AGAINST TADCASTER COUNCIL.

REPORT OF COUNTY COUNCIL COMMITTEE.

URBAN COUNCIL AWARDED £209.

Garforth Urban Council and Tadcaster Rural District Council, being unable to mutually settle certain financial differences, the appeal was made to the County Council to appoint a committee to act as arbitrators. The Committee have done their work, and their report is as follows:—

COMMITTEE'S REPORT.

A Committee of Inquiry, consisting of County Alderman A. Hartley (in the chair), and County Councillor J. Harrop, met as the County Hall, Wakefield, on Wednesday, the 5th day of November, 1913, to consider the claim of the Garforth Urban District Council against the Tadcaster Rural District Council with reference to the cost of the water supply of Garforth.

The following were present or represented:—Garforth Urban District Council, by Mr J. A. Green, instructed by Mr A. E. Carr, their Clerk; Tadcaster Rural District Council, by their Clerk, Mr G. A. Bromet; and other persons.

Garforth was constituted an Urban District by Order of the County Council dated the 29th day of July, 1907, confirmed by the Local Government Board on the 9th March, 1908.

By Article 8 of such Order it was enacted that "in default of an agreement being made as to any matters requiring adjustment, the matter should be reserved to the County Council, who should make such Order therein as might seem to such Council to be equitable.

THE CLAIMS.

The claim of the Garforth Urban District Council was in respect of the cost of the water undertaking provided by the Tadcaster Rural District Council for a number of parishes in the then Rural District, including Garforth, at a cost of £2,843, of which cost the sum of £3,800 was charged on the township of Garforth by the original apportionment made by the Rural District Council.

The Tadcaster Rural Council submitted a counter-claim against the Garforth Urban Council amounting to £131 5s. 9d. in respect of a water tank erected for the township of Garforth, but this was withdrawn at the inquiry.

CONTENTIONS OF THE PARTIES.

On behalf of Garforth it was contended:—

(1) That the original apportionment does not now truly represent the true proportion of the cost as measured by the benefits derived by the constituent authorities.

(2) That the cost of the works in the Garforth area was only £2,380, but as Garforth was the last place on the water supply it would be fair to add to this cost some proportion of the pipes in the rural areas.

(3) That the whole of the remaining expenditure is necessary for the supply of the rural area as the population of the rural area is now larger than when Garforth was included.

On behalf of the Tadcaster Rural District Council it was contended:—

(1) That the original apportionment cannot now be re-opened.

(2) That the apportionment was made on the actual cost of the parish in each parish, an additional sum being charged upon Garforth because a larger main was necessary in order to supply Garforth, and a length of main and pipes from Garforth to each of the other townships, Garforth being the last township receiving water from this supply, together with a proportion of the expenses of engineer and general charges in connection with the works.

The Committee heard a number of witnesses as to the expenditure incurred, and the townships benefited by the Garforth works.

CONCLUSION OF COMMITTEE.

Your Committee are of opinion, having regard to all the circumstances, that by way of adjusting the matters above referred to, a sum of £209 shall be paid to the Urban District Council of Garforth by the Tadcaster Rural District Council on or before the 1st day of April, 1914, and in default of such payment interest on such sum at the rate of 4 per cent. per annum shall be paid by the said Rural District Council to the said Urban District Council on the said sum or on such thereof as shall for the time being be owing, and that an Order be issued accordingly.

A CASTLEFORD MINER AND HIS WIFE.

SHOCKING STORY—HUSBAND CENSURED.

Mr P. P. Maitland held an inquest at Osset on Tuesday night on Nellie Kemp (28), wife of Willie Kemp, coal miner, of Durkar, and formerly of Castleford. The woman was found early on Sunday morning at the house of her parents in Castle, with her body resting in a chair, and her head and arms in the fire. She was dead, her head and face being so badly burned that, according to the medical evidence, there was practically nothing but bone left.

Mrs Emma Smith, deceased's mother, said that her daughter had been married nine years, and had two children. She was expecting another child soon. She had had a shocking married life, and had returned to her parents for protection on several occasions. She complained that her husband took too much beer, and kicked and knocked her about. She had complained to the police several times, and twice had taken police court proceedings, which, however, she withdrew on her husband promising to do better.

The Coroner: When you asked her husband what had he to say, what was his reply?

Witness: Well, sir, you cannot expect anything from a pig but a grunt, can you? A week ago, witness continued, her daughter again returned home. She had a black eye, and said "Mother, I have been forced to come, or else I should have been dead. If I had stayed I should have been kicked to death." She was all right until Saturday, when she commenced to have severe pains in the head. Witness attended to her, and got powders from the doctor; and at half-past four on Sunday morning she went to bed, leaving deceased in bed downstairs.

Wm. Smith, the father, described how he found his daughter, two hours later, partly in the fire. He said he had several times spoken to her husband about his misconduct, and had advise deceased to get a separation order. She did so while living at Castleford, but they got together again.

Evidence was given that Mrs Kemp stayed at the house of a neighbour the night before she left Darton, and stated that her husband had turned her out and slapped her face.

Dr. G. Symers Mill expressed the opinion that, while sitting before the fire trying to soothe her pains by the heat, Mrs Kemp fainted or had a fit, and fell into the fire.

The Coroner (to the husband): Do you call yourself a man?

Kemp: Yes, sir.

The Coroner: Well, I do not. I call you a fiendish brute. Your wife was about to be confined, the time of all times when a woman needs kindness, and you slapped her and turned her out. And it is not the first time. All your married life you have been kicking her and knocking her about.

Kemp attempted to say something, whereupon the Coroner said sternly: Silence. I do not believe a word you say. You are totally false—a disgrace to humanity.

The jury found that deceased was burned to death, though falling into the fire, while suffering from faintness and illness, brought about by her husband's inhuman conduct.

SEPARATED AFTER 29 YEARS.

Harry Fletcher, fitter, employed by the Simplex Motor Works, Leeds, in the Police Court at Sheffield, on Monday, under circumstances of an unusual character.

He and his wife had been married 29 years. During the last two years defendant had spent almost every week-end in Nottingham, and when his wife suggested that there was something improper it was stated that he threatened to shoot her.

His son had seen him in Nottingham with a woman, and defendant was posing as a widower. The woman had given birth to a child, and the illegitimate offspring had been named after defendant's son who had died.

When his wife questioned him as to the paternity of the child defendant smashed the furniture, and she had to leave him on account of threats.

A separation order, with 15s. a week maintenance, was made. Defendant said, in evidence, that he was not the father of the illegitimate child.

FOOTBALL.—On Saturday afternoon Rothwell and Normanton St. John's had a Northern Union League game, but as the official referee did not put in an appearance it was decided to play an ordinary. After a long spell of even play H. Brockholme scored for Normanton, and Goodfellow converted from an easy position. In the second half Normanton added a couple of tries, and they won by 11 points (1 goal 3 tries) to nil.

MR. THOS. ISON,
OCULIST and AURIST.
THIS INSTITUTION was ESTABLISHED in 1871. The system of working is the provident one, each patient paying a small periodical fee whilst under treatment, and they may, therefore, justly expect to receive the prompt care and attention which in many instances in charitable institutions is too often omitted. The treatment is of a mild and safe character, without operation or the use of Ear Drums, Ear Cornets or other mechanical or painful appliances. Another advantage appertaining to this dispensary is its system of treatment by correspondence, by which sufferers at long distances, and in isolated positions can have the advantage of Mr ISON'S advice and remedies forwarded through the post. No case is undertaken unless there be a reasonable hope of cure, or benefit to the patient.
Attendance at Leeds every Tuesday, from 10 to 7 on Alternate Saturdays, January 10th and 24th.
Hours 10 to 7. Other days by appointment.
TREATMENT WITHOUT OPERATION, ARTIFICIAL HUMAN EYES fitted from 15s.
SPECTACLES AND PRESSERVERS, 3/6 to 10/6. Gold Frames from 20s.

SPECIAL NOTICE.—There are many cases of failing eyesight which can be speedily remedied by mild local treatment, thus dispensing with the use of glasses.

SATURDAY, JANUARY 3rd, 1914.

In order to induce children of working-class parents to enter the teaching profession the West Riding Education Committee have devised a new scheme of scholarships, and it is thought that, with the additional assistance given, people will be prepared to allow their children to become teachers. At the present time, it is said, there is a shortage of teachers, and the scheme is intended to maintain an adequate supply in the West Riding. Time will prove whether or not the Committee are adopting the best course in order to gain their purpose. The profession, which has not the status it has further north, is not a popular one, and there is no great desire on the part of parents who can afford the expense of training to send their children into it, and working-class people, far removed from secondary schools, are not in a position to put clever children forward. Every year a large number of women leave the profession—the majority to get married—and the vacancies on the teaching staffs must be filled. The Education Committee think they will obtain a never-failing supply by means of their scholarship scheme. The best way to increase the popularity of a trade or profession is to advance the rate of remuneration, but this apparently does not appeal to the Committee, who prefer rather to spend £10,000 on scholarships. One thing must be said in favour of the scheme—it will help working-class children who really desire to become teachers. Nothing was stated as to the system of working these scholarships, but it is hoped it will be an improvement upon the examinations for the county minor scholarships, which, we know, are not always given to the best children. It is advisable, as one member suggested, that the kindly help of the schoolmaster should be asked, and if he is consulted he will give sound practical advice. His recommendation of a promising scholar would greatly lessen the difficulties of examiners. Schoolmasters, as a class, are delighted at the success of their pupils, and they would not put forward any for scholarships whom they thought would do them discredit. The scheme has yet to be approved by the County Council, but it will in all likelihood go through.

Politics, to many good people, are merely a game—a sort of contest in which one side, by means unscrupulous or unscrupulous, tries to worst the other, and consequently they have the utmost contempt for all who style themselves politicians. Well-meaning individuals engaged in religious work think it incompatible with their profession that they should ally themselves with any school of politicians, and, indeed, they regard the discussion of social and imperial questions as something which they should taboo. And these are citizens of the greatest Empire the world has ever seen. Another class of people have no political views, and they believe that all Members of Parliament are tarred with the same stick. This attitude of mind is difficult to understand. It may be the outcome of ignorance or prejudice, but it is wrong. If insincerity had been the chief characteristic of British politicians then neither the nation nor the Empire would be the envy of the civilized world. Why have the eyes of struggling and down-trodden people been ever turned to liberty-loving England? Has it been because of the dishonesty and insincerity of her politicians? An eminent Statesman, the other day, stated that "politicians are the priests of humanity," and without them—the men with ideals—the country would not have made the progress it has. It is impossible for a generation to value the services of the men who work for it; that is left to succeeding generations, who, viewing the whole accomplishments from the national standpoint, are in a better position to say whether or not the achievements are a success or a failure. Language is sometimes used by politicians in criticising opponents that would lead the unthinking to imagine that the persons condemned are the biggest scoundrels abroad, and this is a phase of political life which is regrettable, but when an important question is being discussed the tendency is generally to eulogize upon the good that it will do for the largest number of voters, or to condemn it as being the most harmful measure ever proposed. If people would study politics they would not be so dependent upon politicians and party newspapers for opinions, and they would be able to guide themselves at election times, when partizans become so excited that they utter all manner of exaggerations. Yet these men are sincere enough. They believe that they are right and the other side wrong, and, unfortunately, they sometimes think any measures are justifiable in order to defeat the political enemy, whose proposals they honestly believe are subversive of the best interests of the country. All politicians, however, are not given to unfair tactics; they maintain a high standard of criticism, entirely ignoring personalities, and they believe what they say is true. They may be wrong, but they are sincere. Many years ago the late Mr Forster, who had some connection with Yorkshire, addressed a gathering of University students, and he—a hardened politician—told them that "for personal or party ends" politics were not worth following. He was associated with a party, but he had his ideals, and he accomplished something for the nation which is bearing fruit to-day. The triumphs of party or self-aggrandisement are paltry successes in the long run, but if the success of party is associated with the carrying out of a great national reform then it becomes a historical event. The successful politician—the man who gains any satisfaction from his work—must not be self-seeking; he must have ideals, and must have imagination in order to see the victory of to-morrow beyond to-day's defeat of his desired scheme. Men's actions reveal their ideals, and by these they are judged. Political life is what a man makes it, and no one, however exalted in character, is too good to participate in it. It is national work, calling for the best labourers the country can give, and men of the greatest intellect and highest character are doing it. All parties have their idealists—men determined to legislate according to the beliefs they hold dear, and if men are sincere much may be forgiven them. Politics touch the nation at every point, and in a great democratic community the voters should seek to understand the questions brought before the country from time to time. That is, really a part of their education. If that is so, it lies with no one, whatever his position, to describe politics as a game—it is sometimes styled a "dirty game"—because what is done by the legislature affects the life and interests of every individual, and such work must be regarded as the honest effort of the side that puts it forward.

The Bramham Moor Hunt had their Boxing Day meet at Tadcaster.

A witness in taking the oath at West Ham Police Court swore that his evidence, "shall be life, and nothing but life." He had to begin again.

ROTHWELL & DISTRICT NEWS.

SUCCESS.—At the Leeds Canine Club's Show on Friday Mr W. Schofield took 4 first, 2 second, and 3 special prizes, as well as a diploma, for the best puppy in the show with his miniature pomeranian "Little Dreadnought" and "Revue."

LEEDS WEST RIDING PETTY SESSIONS.—The magistrates at the Leeds West Riding Petty Sessions on Tuesday were Mr J. W. Morkill (in the chair), Mr J. Hird Greed, Mr R. D. Kitson, Col. Sagar-Musgrave, Mr S. Hudson, Mr P. B. Booth, and Mr J. Hirst.

SUCCESS.—In connection with the London College of Music, the following pupils of Mr T. Idle, (Marsh Street, Rothwell), were successful in passing the December examination in pianoforte playing and theory, viz., Millicent Armitage (advanced, senior section), and Harry Ely (senior). Advt.

WHIST DRIVE AND DANCE.—Success attended the annual whist drive and dance promoted by the Rothwell Parish Church Football Club, and held in the National Schools on Boxing Day. Altogether there were about 200 persons in attendance, and an enjoyable time was spent by all. Mr. Walter Wormald had charge of the whist. The prize-winners were:—Ladies:—Mrs Norbury, 2 Miss Edinbro, 3 Miss Edwards. Gentlemen:—1 F. Hirst, 2 T. Banks, 3 H. V. Horst. Refreshments were provided, and dancing was engaged in until the early hours of Saturday morning. Suitable music was provided by Miss Annie Blackburn. The M.C.'s were Messrs J. and A. Lunn. All the refreshments, as well as the prizes for whist, were given by friends.

BOWERS ALLERTON

On Christmas eve the familiar Christmas hymns and carols were taken within the hearing of all in the village by the Mission Hall Choir.

Mr Ted Brooks, who was at one time a very energetic member of the Men's Friday Class, is now undergoing a two years' course on local government at Ruskin College, Oxford.

"National Emblems" was the subject around which Mr C. C. Bellwood entwined an instructive address to seventy members of the Band of Hope Social, recitations, etc., were rendered by members.

AMBULANCE.—In the Mission Hall schoolroom thirty miners, who during the last few weeks have been receiving a thorough instruction in ambulance work from Dr. T. R. Taylor, of Methley, were examined by Dr. Nightingale, of Horsforth, as to their ability of applying the knowledge thus gained. After testing them in the various branches of first aid, Dr. Nightingale expressed himself as pleased with the standard of efficiency to which the men had attained. By this examination six more members will be added to the local Voluntary Aid Detachment section, which is at present attached to Garforth. The section is continually receiving fresh members, when it will then form a detachment of its own.

CHRISTMAS PARTY.—With a determination to enjoy themselves in the true old-fashioned style so of the villagers defied the inclement weather on the evening of Christmas Day and gathered in the suitably decorated Mission Hall School-room. Great enjoyment was drawn from the many games indulged in, and there were also two competitions conducted by Mr Sidgwick. The first was the guessing of "Advertisement Characters," and the prizes for this were won by Miss Alice Parker and Mr J. Silkstone. The prizes for the guessing of the names of "20 different odours" were won by Miss W. Ward and Mr E. Robinson. Substantial refreshments were supplied during the evening, and these were being partaken of Mr J. W. Collinson and Mr J. Robinson kept the company in continuous laughter. A very enjoyable evening terminated with the singing of several Christmas carols.

CHRISTMAS DAY.—On Thursday afternoon a large number of children gathered in the Mission Schoolroom, where a Christmas tree laden with a large assortment of toys, had been erected, and there were also 150 presents to be given away. The room was decorated in a seasonable manner. The proceedings were opened by Mrs Skelton, as Allerton Bywater, who, as Mr Robinson said, "everyone present knew and loved, and had a respect for the good work, as a trained teacher, she had done during many previous years she had been connected with the Mission Hall." In pleasing little speech declaring the treat open, Mrs Skelton expressed the hope that each one would have a happy Christmas, and, judging by the character of the room and the ringing laugh present, they seemed to be the object of all. For an hour a very lively business was carried on, and the tree and bran tub were quickly relieved of their burdens at the popular price of one penny per toy. From every point of view the treat was a success.

CARLTON

BAZAAR.—A two days' bazaar in aid of the trust funds was opened in the Primitive Methodist Schoolroom, Carlton, on Friday. The Rev. W. G. Softby (Rothwell P.M. Church) introduced the members of the choir, who performed the opening ceremony. Afterwards Miss Ann Ward, Miss Butler, Miss Wilson, Miss Newton, Miss Annie Ward, Miss M. Brown, Miss Minnie Ward, and Miss Martha Ann Ward; and Messrs Ellis Ward, R. Ward, T. E. Ward, J. Lunn, R. Brown, and H. Nunns. Miss Ann Ward spoke for the young men and Mr Ellis Ward for the young women. A vote of thanks to the party was heartily carried, on the proposition of Mr G. W. Wilson, seconded by Mr T. Batty, and supported by Mr Eli Ward, of Rothwell. The opening contributed over £5 towards the effort, and the takings of the first day amounted to £11. On Saturday the bazaar was opened by Mr G. W. Wilson, and the day's proceeds amounted to about £10, bringing the total proceeds, together with previous sums collected, up to about £30.

CROSSGATES

On Saturday evening the annual children's treat in connection with the Baptist Church took place.

LITERARY SOCIETY.—On Monday evening at the meeting of the Literary Society the Rev. Edwin Bell, of Crossgates, will deliver a lecture on "A tour in Northern India," which will be illustrated. See advt.

CROSSGATES BAPTIST FELLOWSHIP.—A debating society has been formed in connection with the Crossgates Baptist Church, and Mr F. Hartop has been appointed President; Messrs J. Walker and T. H. Whitaker hon. secs., Mr A. Greenwood treas., and Mr A. Crabtree portfolio editor, the committee being—Miss Batley, Mrs Bowers, Miss Brodhouse, Miss Clayton, Miss Hartop, Miss Rhodes, Miss Whitley, Rev. J. M. Hamilton, Messrs Elliott, Hyde, Jackson, McFarlane, Milford, Morgan, and J. H. Moss. Several lectures have been arranged, and among the subjects to be debated are:—" Has militancy forwarded the cause of votes for women," " Should a living wage be the first charge upon a business," and " Does the Christian Church demonstrate Christianity?" A feature of the programme will be a Parliamentary night, when the King's Speech will be moved by Mr E. H. Foster, J.P. (prospective Liberal candidate for Barkston Ash).

Mr John Taylor, of Station Road, Crossgates, won a second prize with a white Wyandotte cockerel at Ilkley Poultry Show on Friday.

On Friday night a Cinderella dance, promoted by the ladies' section of the Golf Club, took place in the Recreation Hall, and it was well attended.

GOLF.—A competition among the members of the Golf Club came off on Friday on the Crossgates course. Eighteen members entered, and Mr Thomas won the first prize.

WESLEYAN CIRCUIT QUARTERLY MEETING.—At the Richmond Hill Wesleyan Quarterly Quarterly Meeting the Rev. Owen Jones presided, and he was supported by Rev. Edwin Bell (Crossgates), and the Rev. Edward Rees (Garforth). Messrs G. R. Dyson (Circuit Stewards) and Isaac Wrigley (Circuit stewards) and about to members. It was reported that £375 had been raised on behalf of the Centenary Fund for foreign missions, and it was stated that this made one of the highest averages per member in the Leeds district. A debt of £463 due to retiring stewards was wiped out. Mr Bert Wrigley was appointed senior steward, and Mr Tindale Rippon (Halton) junior steward by unanimous votes. It was reported that the membership remains almost stationary. The members of Crossgates Society, it was stated, had raised £330 during the year in reduction of debt on their church premises, bringing the liability down to £550. A bazaar is to be held at Richmond Hill next May on behalf of Beckett Street Chapel, and it is hoped to raise £400. A most hospital tone pervaded the meeting, and a determined effort to increase the membership by at least 50 is to be made during the coming quarter.

GARFORTH

LICENCE.—At the Leeds West Riding Petty Sessions on Tuesday, Edward Smith, miner, of Garforth, was summoned for keeping a dog without a licence, and was fined 7s. 6d. and costs.

FOOTBALL.—On Saturday afternoon a football match was played between Garforth W.R. and Sherburn, and the latter were beaten by three goals to one. On Saturday Garforth are engaged in the West Riding Cup Competition, and will play Clarence Ironworks.

THE LATE MRS. RICHARD BEEVORS.—Mrs. Beevors, widow of the late Mr Richard Beevors, died at Cyprus Villas, Garforth, on Monday. Deceased, who was 78 years of age, was one of the oldest residents in the district, and she had resided in Garforth for many years. She was well-known, and was held in the highest esteem by the residents. The remains were interred at Garforth on Thursday.

ON THE RAILWAY.—The adventure of two Castleford miners, named Joseph Turner and Walter Binns, in returning home after a visit to Leeds on Saturday, December 13th, led to their appearance at Leeds West Riding Police Court, on Tuesday, charged with interfering with the comfort of passengers in a railway carriage in which they were travelling. A quarrel arose about sixpence, and defendants had a fight, and their fellow-travellers had to get out of the way by standing on the seats. The train was delayed nearly a quarter of an hour. They were each fined 20s. and costs.

PICTURE HOUSE.—The programmes submitted at the Picture House this week have given complete satisfaction. The feature of the first three nights of the week was the thrilling story "A Leap of Despair," in which a daring feat of horsemanship was shown. On Friday and Saturday the principal picture will be "A Race to Destruction," and it is exciting enough to satisfy anybody. Other capital films will complete the programme. For the first three days of next week great fare will be provided, and outstanding films promised are "The Tiger Lily," "The gold cross" (pathetic drama), "Barney Oldfield's race for life" (a screamer), and "Wanted a strong hand" (comic). For Thursday, Friday, and Saturday "The call," a fine drama, will be exhibited, and another attraction will be "Hand, kindly light," and the beautiful hymn will be sung. Other pictures will be shown, and patrons of the house are assured of capital entertainment. For times and prices see advt.

GREAT PRESTON

DRINK.—At the Leeds West Riding Petty Sessions on Tuesday James Ponder, miner, of Great Preston was summoned for being drunk and disorderly at Great Preston on Saturday, December 20. He was fined 15s. and costs.

CHRISTMAS TREE AND PARTY.—A large number of children flocked into the Infants' Schoolroom on Saturday, and, with much pleasure, they purchased the toys with which a large Christmas tree was heavily laden. After the toys had been disposed of and the children had gone home a good number of adults spent a pleasant evening playing games, etc.

HALTON

THORP STAPLETON FARMER'S OFFENCE.—At the Leeds West Riding Petty Sessions on Tuesday William Austin, farmer, Thorpe Stapleton, was summoned for failing to send in form C of the Sheep Dipping Act as required. It was stated that there were eighteen sheep on the land. Defendant said the land was not his, as he did not come into possession of it until the beginning of February. However, the form which he handed up to the Bench showed that he came into possession of the land during November. Defendant was fined 5s. and costs.

LICENCE.—At the Leeds West Riding Petty Sessions on Tuesday, Henry Baxter, farmer, of Templenewsam, was summoned for removing a pig without having first procured the necessary licence. P.C. Lyttle stated he saw the defendant on the Leeds and Selby Road, Halton, in charge of a milk float which contained a pig. Defendant said he had been to the sergeant for a licence, but he was asleep, and he could not get one. The magistrates pointed out that the penalty was £20, but as he had made an effort to obtain a licence he would be let off on payment of costs.

KIPPAX

On Saturday afternoon Kippax Woodville and Rothwell W.R. had a football match, and no goals were scored.

KENNY'S WORDS.—At the Leeds West Riding Petty Sessions on Tuesday Martin Kenny, miner, of Kippax, was summoned for using obscene language at Kippax on Sunday, December 21st. He was fined 5s. and costs.

THE OLD CUSTOM.—The choirs of the Nonconformist Churches went round the streets as usual on Christmas Day, singing Christmas hymns. This is an old custom, and one that is appreciated by everyone in the village, but the night carol singers have disappeared.

MEDICAL CHARITIES.—The committee of Kippax and Ledston Medical Charities Society were the promoters of a ball, which was held in the Council School on Thursday evening. Music for the dancing was provided by Mr W. Bellerby (pianist) and Mr J. Prince (violinist), while Mr A. Beeston and Mr A. Sparling acted as M.C.'s.

WESLEYAN SUNDAY SCHOOL.—The teachers connected with this Sunday School were the promoters of a children's social in the schoolroom on Friday. The refreshments were given by Mr Percy Harper, one of the teachers, and these were served to the children. Games and amusements were indulged in during the evening, and a very enjoyable time was spent.

LANGUAGE IN THE HOME.—At the Leeds West Riding Petty Sessions on Tuesday Richard Bond, miner, of Kippax, was summoned for using obscene language in High Street, Kippax, on December 22nd. The defendant was seated in a chair in the kitchen of his house with the door open when he made use of the language complained of. He was fined 2s. 6d. and costs.

CONCERT.—The young people connected with the Wesleyan Sunday School, along with members of the Guild of Help and the Bible Classes, gave a concert in the Schoolroom on Thursday. The programme submitted consisted of solos, duets, quartettes, humorous readings, violin solos, and a sketch, entitled "Who's who." Mr Lewis Logg presided. Refreshments and fruit were provided. The proceeds were for the Sunday School Funds.

PARISH CHURCH.—On Friday evening a Christmas tree was provided at the schoolroom, and, laden with toys, it claimed the attention of the many children who were present. The tree was in charge of the Vicar, Mr H. Smith, and Mr W. Smith. Other attractions were a weighing machine, attended by Mr G. Morley, and a bran tub, in charge of Mr Ed. Fleeman. The refreshment stall was looked after by Mrs A. Cripwell, Mrs L. Plows, Miss Darley, and Miss C. Plows, while the Toy Stall was presided over by Miss Willis, Miss Green and Miss Atkinson. The effort gave every satisfaction to the promoters, and provided an enjoyable evening for the children. A social was held later in the evening. The prize distribution for attendance and merit to the Sunday School children and the teachers has taken place, and many teachers and scholars were made the recipients of prizes. The girls had their prizes presented to them by Mrs Smith, while Mr Veitch distributed the prizes to the boys. Suitable addresses were given by the Vicar and Mr Veitch.

PRIMITIVE METHODIST CHURCH.—In connection with this church a two days' bazaar was held in the Kippax Council School on Thursday and Friday. The rooms were nicely decorated, and the stalls were tastefully arranged. The bazaar was opened on the first day by Mr George Wilkinson, of Kippax, who was supported by the Rev. B. B. Farlow (circuit minister), while the chair was occupied by Mr J. B. Hollis, of Kippax. The Chairman spoke of the usefulness of bazaars for helping the work of the churches and promoting good feeling among the workers. The bazaar was then declared open, and a vote of thanks was accorded Mr Wilkinson and Mr Hollis, on the motion of the Rev. B. B. Farlow, seconded by Mr Thos. Ferrar. The bazaar on the second day was opened by 30 school children, who had been trained by Mr Norman Wheatley. Mr J. P. Walker presided. Mr R. W. Clarkson moved a vote of thanks to the Chairman and the children for their services, and this was seconded by Mr Thos. Farrar, and passed. The ladies in charge of the stalls were:—Drapery Stall—Mrs J. Wilman and Mrs H. Hobson; fancy stall—Mrs R. Firth and Mrs A. Jones; confectionware stall—Mr W. Cripwell, Mr H. Hobson, and Mr A. Wheatley; sweet stall—Mrs Wordsworth Firth and Mrs George Prince; ice cream stall—Mrs Wm. Cripwell; refreshment stall—Mrs J. Prince, Mrs A. Hobson, Miss Gertie Beeston, and Mrs A. Appleyard; advertisement stall—Master P. Wilman and Miss Hilda Beeston; fruit stall—Masters A. Prince, W. Garton, F. Pickard, and J. Varley. Refreshments were conducted by Mr W. Firth and Mr N. Wheatley, and a fine art gallery was arranged by Mr N. Wheatley. The bazaar was well patronized on both days and realized about £60.

LOFTHOUSE

Lofthouse hockey players have so far won 9 out of 12, and scored 50 goals against 25. Their goal-getters on Saturday were H. Hemingway (3) and C. Wright and W. Hall (two each).

BOXING.—On Friday the Empire Theatre, Wakefield, was crowded when a series of boxing contests formed the attraction. The chief encounter was one of 20 two-minute rounds between Harold Littlewood, Lofthouse, and T. Harding, Normanton, for £25 a side and a purse of £70, at 9st. 7lb. As both the men had been carefully trained it was expected that a fairly good fight would be put up, but the contest was simply a three minutes' sensation. In the first round, after the Normanton man had lightly reached his opponent's face, Littlewood made an ferocious attack on Harding's body, and had him down and practically out. Harding rising just in time to be saved by the bell. The contest ended half-way through the second round, Littlewood resuming his strenuous onslaught on the body, and knocking Harding clean out, after flooring him several times. There were also several minor bouts of six rounds duration. A. Littlewood, Lofthouse, beat Young Spires, Castleford, and H. Tipton, Featherstone, was given the verdict over Dando Armstrong, Altofts, the latter being disqualified in the sixth round for clinching.

OULTON

On Saturday afternoon Oulton St. John's football team defeated Normanton Dod. Gym. by three goals to one.

The next monthly service for men to be held at St. John's Church is to be addressed by the curate, the Rev. H. Fox.

The annual Christmas Eve dance held in connection with the Oulton Institute, took place in the Harold Hall, Oulton. There was good assembly of dancers, and dancing lasted from 7 p.m. to 4 o'clock a.m. Mr M.C.'s were Messrs Smith, S. Berry, and J. Butterick. Mr Walter Poole supplied the music.

DRINK.—At the Leeds West Riding Petty Sessions on Tuesday, Alfred Moore, miner, of Leeds, and William Walker, tailor, of Leeds, were summoned for being drunk and disorderly on the Aberford Road, Oulton, on Saturday, December 20th. Both were fined 5s. and costs.

ROBIN HOOD

Mr Gerald France, M.P., has secured the promise of a visit from Mr Herbert Samuel, M.P. (Postmaster-General), to address a meeting to be held at Morley on Saturday, January 24th, under the auspices of the Liberal Association for the division.

P.S.A.—The weekly P.S.A. meeting at the United Methodist Chapel, Robin Hood, on Sunday afternoon was addressed by Mr Smith, of Sandal. His subject was "Our Father," and the address he gave proved an interesting one. Mr E. Joyner presided. The solos "O Saviour Divine" and "Hold Thou my hand," were pleasingly rendered by Miss Pearson (Wakefield Choral Union). Mr. S. Hartley accompanied on the organ.

Over 4,000 fish have been turned into Roundhay Park water, and 1,000 are to follow.

CLERGY AND FREE CHURCH MINISTERS.—Another conference of clergy and ministers of the North Leeds area has been arranged for January 13th, at the Free Methodist Church Hall, Harehills Avenue. The late conference was held in September, at St. Martin's Institute, and a discussion then took place on city problems. This time it is proposed that the subject of the discussion shall be "The Temper of the Age." The members of the conference will meet at breakfast, and the proceedings will terminate about noon. Apart from the benefit derived from the discussion of various problems by representatives of different denominations, it has been found that the conferences were a useful purpose in bringing into contact new Nonconformist ministers and the clergy of the city.

ACCIDENT.—Some of the slopes in Roundhay Park were taken possession of by bands of enthusiasts and turned up at the adjourned inquest held in Leeds on Wednesday. It will be remembered that she was found lying injured in Street Lane on Christmas Eve, and died soon afterwards. In the absence of evidence as to how the injuries had been caused the inquiry had been adjourned. Mr A. E. Masser now represented the Insurance Company, and Mr F. J. Curtis the relatives. Mrs Talbot said her sister went out on the night in question—although warned not to, as it was a dark night and the street lamps were not lighted on account of the strike—in order to post some letters, one of which she was anxious should be delivered next day. Mr Albert Morris, who was cycling along Street Lane on Christmas Eve, said he rode behind a tramcar which was travelling at a moderate speed, for some distance. He kept it in view because, in consequence of the street lamps being unlighted its lights were useful. He saw a person thrown from the side of the car, and on going up found Miss Hepworth lying there insensible. The car stopped a short distance away, the driver and the conductor gave every assistance, and Dr. Hart was sent for. The driver gave evidence stating that he was the only one when some yards away, crossing towards the tram-lines. He rang the bell, and she looked up and stepped back into the roadway. As the car was passing her, however, she either slipped on the macadam, or was taken suddenly ill, and fell against the car. Replying to Mr Curtis, the witness said he could see twenty or thirty yards in front of the car. He was sure he only saw him. She was never actually on the tram-lines. In reviewing the evidence the Coroner said there was no evidence of negligence on the part of any person, and a verdict of "Accidental death" was returned.

STOURTON

CHIMNEY ON FIRE.—At the Leeds West Riding Petty Sessions on Tuesday George Lane, labourer, of Stourton, was summoned for allowing the chimney of his house to get on fire. His wife appeared, and a fine of 1s. and costs was imposed.

PRIMITIVE METHODISTS.—On Sunday the Primitive Methodists of Stourton had a visit from the Rev. W. G. Spencer, the son of the present minister, and he preached to interested congregations both in the morning and evening. He also addressed the P.S.A. service in the afternoon.

SEACROFT

WHINT DRIVE.—On Tuesday evening a successful whist drive took place in the Church School, and there were twenty-two tables. The prize-winners were:—Gents.—Mr E. Johnson, 2 Mr P. Taylor, 3 Mr F. Taylor; consolation, Mr J. Varley. Ladies.—Mrs Kaye, 2 Miss Crow, 3 Miss Ford; consolation, Miss Goodall. Mr J. Townend, jun., was M.C. The proceeds, which were in aid of the Institute funds, are expected to realise between £4 and £5.

LEEDS BOARD OF GUARDIANS.—Mr P. H. Bagenal, Local Government Board Inspector, who attended Wednesday's meeting of the Leeds Board of Guardians, told the members that he was not there to make himself at all unpleasant that day. (Laughter). Their record of pauperism during the last five years was very satisfactory from the view and was at the present moment at a record low level for that period. The latest return showed a total of 3,845 outdoor and indoor poor, compared with a total of 5,783 at the beginning of 1909. That was a very satisfactory state of affairs, and he paid a tribute to the Board's efficient administration. Dealing with other matters, the Inspector expressed the hope that they would push forward with the scheme for building a children's block at the Infirmary, which had been sanctioned by the Local Government Board, and he expressed the opinion that the Board's provision for phthisis and mental cases was not satisfactory. Mr A. Edmanson (Chairman), in thanking the Inspector, remarked that it might be had used the heavy hammer against them, and they were glad that on that occasion he had been able to pat them on the back a little. Mr J. T. Buckton said he did not agree with the Inspector as to the urgency of the children's block, and declared that in view of the surplus accommodation at other institutions such an expenditure would be almost criminal at the present time. He intimated that he would move at the next meeting that the scheme be suspended for six months, and added that it was time the ratepayers could not punish guardians for the way they spent their money. The discussion was not continued.

SHADWELL

LOOKING AFTER THE CHILDREN.—With the advent of the New Year, it becomes obligatory on the Medical Officer of Health of Leeds, within 36 hours, the birth of children in Leeds, of which Shadwell and Roundhay are now a part. This is in accordance with an Order of the Local Government Board, following the adoption by the Leeds City Council of the Notification of Births Act. By the provisions of the Order, it is the duty of the parents of the child, if not actually residing in the house where the birth takes place, and of any person in attendance upon the mother at the time of, or within six hours after the birth, to give notice in writing to the medical officer, by posting a prepaid letter or postcard, or by delivering a written notice within 36 hours. Any person who fails to give the notice will be liable to a penalty of 40s. This notice, it is important to remember, is in addition to, and not substitution for, the requirements of any Act relating to the registration of births.

KIRKBURTON

ACCIDENT.—Dorothy Johnson (17), of Colton, an employee at the Public Benefit Boot Company's warehouse, St. Paul's Street, Leeds, was admitted to the Leeds Infirmary on Saturday, suffering from a fracture of the right thigh, sustained in a hoist accident at the warehouse.

HOCKEY.—On Saturday afternoon Whitkirk Club completed their half-season's fixtures with a successful visit to Headingley, whom they defeated by five goals to four. Whitkirk's record shows no defeats out of twelve games, while one was drawn, with 75 goals against 15. The committee, by the way, are anxious to arrange fixtures for next season with some first-class clubs, feeling that their progress justifies a more prominent part for their club in Yorkshire hockey.

Mr J. W. Houseman, of Selby, has been appointed sub-postmaster at Barlby.

Tom Wilson (18) was badly scorched whilst engaged on a North-Eastern locomotive, at Selby, on Wednesday, and was removed to the Cottage Hospital.

AMUSEMENTS.

LEEDS EMPIRE PALACE.

At the Empire Palace the leading turn is given by La Milo, who has outlived the storm of protest which greeted her first appearance. She appears in some eight poses, the best of which is "Pierrette," in which she is seen borne on the back of an eagle, and "The Spirit of Flight," an ingenious and artistic conception in which an aeroplane takes a prominent part. "Will o' the Wisp" is another excellent creation. Alternating with the poses are shown Cruikshank's lighting caricatures, some of which are decidedly good. A delightfully humorous piece of burlesque melodrama is presented by Athas and Collins, she male partner of whom is a neat sand and step dancer; and Huxter Brothers are a trio of smart tumblers with an original style. Jack Lozarro is a prominent Scottish comedian, and his dance is greatly appreciated. Three very good impersonations of music-hall artists are given by Wilfrid Barnsted, that of George Formby being one of the best that has been presented.

"Mrs Peckham's Carouse" is the title of an amusing sketch which will be brought to the Leeds Empire next week by Fred Irwin, the great American comedy artiste, and her company. Miss Irwin herself, a handsome woman, appears first in the comedienne as an enthusiastic temperance reformer, then she goes off at a tangent to the muddled mood of one who has partaken not wisely but too well. The liquor is administered by means of a champagne bottle filled with lemonade, and therefore no violence is done to the reformer's "principle," and the lapse, together with the several matrimonial tangles that arise, is explained and straightened out in a happy ending. Another very important attraction will be the appearance of America's popular cycling comedian, Will Lacey. "The fellow that wobbles on one wheel." Lacey is a truly phenomenal performer upon a cycle, and the marvellous things that he accomplishes upon two wheels, and later upon one wheel, really have to be seen to be believed. It many years ago since Ralph Temple, the famous cycle racer and a fellow countryman of Lacey's, astounded the wheel world with his trick riding upon the old "ordinary." But nowadays the clever performances of that old-time "Yank" would pale almost into insignificance before those of America's latest champion. The popular entertainer at the piano, Tom Clare; Phil Parsons, light comedian; Mabel Sinclair, the lady ventriloquist; and the Keppels, in a delightful wand entertainment, constitute the chief attractions.

LEEDS HIPPODROME.

At the Hippodrome this week the chief position is held by Con Conrad's Novelty Minstrels, a troupe of comedians attired in kilts and made-up like Jewish comedians. They sit in a half-circle, and in turns contribute a most enjoyable performance. There is a first-rate violinist (Mr Terris), an energetic pianist (Mr Romain), the Scotch Troupe, Four, bunnets and laughable comedians in the persons of Bert Leighton and Matt. McCone. Billy Arlington and Co. are appearing in a comedy sceno. They are newcomers here, but their work is so original that it is to be hoped their return will not long be delayed. Rem-Brandt paint pictures with a wonderful chromatic air pistol, and "The Scarlet Poppy" is the title of a musical scena produced by A. Emmett Adams. Rosie Lloyd, a member of a famous theatrical family, sings a couple of catchy songs, and Will Poluski, jun., is a clever juggler.

Next week at the Hippodrome Messrs Dottridge and Longden's grand Christmas pantomime, "Dick Whittington and his Cat" will be presented. Supporting the principal boy, Dorothy Dorraine, will be a number of well-known artistes, including Arnold Richardson, and specialities will be given by the Astoria Sextette. There will be a matinee on Wednesday afternoon.

LEEDS THEATRE DE LUXE.

At the Theatre de Luxe, Kirkgate, Leeds, the "star" attraction is a splendid adaptation of the famous fairy tale "Cinderella," the transformation scenes being admirably executed. "Ida's Diary," a bright sketch, features the inimitable John Bunny in a new role. "Red and Pete, Partners" is a remarkable study of two crooks, and "Just Kids" is a capital comedy enacted by children. For the week-end are a capital "Mary" film, "The Proposal from the Sculptors," and a splendid Western drama showing "Why Broncho Billy Left Bear Country." "Educated Monkeys" is a very laughable, though instructive, picture.

ROTHWELL EMPIRE.

The principal attraction at the Empire, Rothwell, for the first half of the week was a remarkable series of living shadows in pictures of "Robinson Crusoe." Among the interesting scenes contained in this production were the shipwreck and the casting of the hero upon a desert island, his falling in with cannibals, and the training of his man "Friday"; while the pictures closed with his safe arrival at his home, Dickens' "Cricket on the Hearth" is another interesting film, but it can hardly be said to be a true representation of the story. The happy features of John Bunny were once more seen in "Mr. Jarr Pedicures," a rapidly-moving film, and a second half of the week the principal attractions are "The Black 13," a detective drama, which is a sequel to "On the track of the Spider Gang," and "The Light," another detective film. Several good comics have also found favour. A welcome change so far as the turn is concerned has been provided by "Las Zolmos" a couple of smart continental acrobatic equilibrists.

Next week some first-rate subjects will be submitted. For the first three days the two features will be "The Sea Dog" and "The Glass Cage," an exciting crime play. In addition to these there will be a picture illustrating the iron and steel industry in Bombay. During the second half "The Black Ball," an emotional and sensational drama, said to be of an unusual type, will be shown, and also "The Call," a special vitagraph feature. Chief of the comics will be "A Noise from the Deep." The turn will be given by Manek Shah, Indian necromancer, and a lady snake charmer.

ACCIDENT TO A TADCASTER MAN.

On Tuesday evening an accident befell a man named Kaye, motor wherry driver for Mr Samuel Smith, of the Old Brewery, Tadcaster. While delivering beer in Leeds, with the engine shut off and the helm free, the wherry commenced to skid on the slippery road and down a sharp incline. Kaye jumped to the wheel to try and keep the wherry straight, but one of his legs was caught between the wherry and a set of railings, the latter of which fortunately gave way, but his leg was badly crushed. He was, however, able to be removed home. The wherry skidded until it came to rest over an area, and the work of getting it back on to the road was a very difficult task.

CHILDREN'S PANTOMIME AT OULTON.

A SUCCESSFUL PRODUCTION.

After a four days' successful run the children's pantomime at Oulton was brought to a happy conclusion at the Harold Hall on Tuesday night. The pantomime, which is now an established event in the villages for the Christmas week, is the ninth of its kind. Last year "Cinderella" was the chosen piece, and this year's effort was Dick Whittington and his Cat." All the characters taken were represented by the children of the Oulton National School, who, in past years, were trained by the schoolmaster, Mr E. Boothroyd, assisted by his staff of teachers. All the characters were well represented in a graceful manner by the little folks, and the production surpassed all previous efforts. The scenery was simple but effective, and the stage management was in capable hands.

The principal character, "Dick Whittington," was capitally portrayed by Edna Jones. Her pronunciation was charming, and her songs were sung very sweetly; they were "The Rosary," "The Wishing Well," "You made me love you," and "If I happened to meet." The part of "Patty," cook in the service of Ald. Fitzwarren, and who "was so cross you might suppose she'd forty corns upon her toes," was played with spirit by M. E. Britton. Another bright character was "Jemima Ann," the housemaid, A. Pallfreman. Dick's faithful friend, Queen Barbary, M. Nettleton; Princess of Barbary, I. Mitchell; ladies-in-waiting, C. Penn, C. Robert, and M. Massey; Rum Tit Too, W. Chadwick; Tee Tee Rum, H. Wilson.

The fairies, who had as their queen, "Fairy Silverdean" (M. Thackrah), were as follows: K. Armitage, V. Colley, E. Gale, C. Holstead, C. Miffin, K. Smith, G. Wilson, and H. Wrigglesworth, and Masters H. Morley, W. Jones, H. Atack, M. Wrigglesworth, and W. Chadwick acted as foresters of Sherwood, with the following as their wives:—Misses M. Rackliffe, E. Wright, C. Penn, C. Roberts, and M. Massey.

The stage manager was Mr E. Boothroyd, and Mr J. W. Morley was the conductor. The task of superintending was ably undertaken by Mr Walter Poole.

The public support was unusually good, and a nice sum should be the result of the effort. At the conclusion of Tuesday night's performance, when a vote of thanks to all was passed on the motion of the Vicar of Oulton, the Rev. W. R. Capes-Cure, seconded by Mr G. Wilkinson, Mr Boothroyd, in reply, stated that up to that evening £30 had been raised, and of this sum £20 was profit. The total profits are to be divided between the Institute and the school library.

REMARKABLE REVELATIONS.

Remarkable revelations were made at the magisterial investigation in Dewsbury, County Donegal, into the charge of larceny of £300 against a young woman named Winifred M'Carr. Evidence was given that a fire occurred in the drawer of a dressing table in a room occupied by Michael M'Faul in the house of his brother Patrick, near Clonmany, with whom the accused was employed as a domestic servant. The money, which had been placed in the drawer, was afterwards missing, and there was only a heap of ashes where it had been placed. The M'Fauls took no notice of the matter, believing that the disappearance of the money was due to the intervention of the spirit world, and was to be regarded as a warning to prevent a certain matrimonial arrangement, but the case was taken into consideration, being carried out. A few days after the occurrence the accused visited Derry with three £20 notes in her possession. She was also unsuccessful attempt to get them cashed. Afterwards she was discharged by the M'Fauls, and suspicions having been aroused, a was subsequently arrested and charged with larceny of the money, and also with having attempted to set fire to the house.

Accused was remanded for trial, bail being accepted.

CHRISTMAS'S PARTY.—About 150 children of employees at the Selby Olympia Oil and Cake Mills were entertained at tea at the Olympia Institute on Tuesday. Presents from a Xmas tree were distributed, and entertainment was arranged by the committee. Mr Jos. Watson and Mr Leopold Paget were generous contributors to the fund.

LIBERALITY.—Miss Standering entertained the widow of Selby at tea and supper at the Standering Hall, Selby, on Wednesday. A musical entertainment was also provided. Gifts, including a Christmas hamper, were presented to each guest. Miss Standering distributed during Christmastide 300 parcels of groceries to aged people in the town, and in addition gifts of coal.

SELBY ABBEY'S GREAT WINDOW.—The completion of the work of restoration at Selby Abbey, which was destroyed by fire seven years ago, will be signalled next week by the unveiling of the unique Germanus window, which, at a cost estimated at £2,000, has been placed in the great seven-light perpendicular window of the north transept through the generosity of Miss Standering, the donor of the memorial stained at the Cottage Hospital. The gift is in memory of her deceased parents, and is of rare beauty and historic interest, depicting over 50 scenes in the life of Germanus, who is one of the Abbey's patron saints. The ancient church now possesses three stained-glass windows of great value.

When purchasing a ham, if one of medium quality falls to your lot the following treatment will be found to improve it amazingly, says a writer in the Daily Mail General Cook Book. Soak the ham in water for four days. Prepare the following ingredients: Two and a half pounds of coarse, brown Demerara sugar, quarter of a pound of ground allspice, two ounces of ground cloves, one ounce of cinnamon, one dessertspoonful of cayenne pepper, two ounces of cloves, cinnamon, and peppercorns into a paste with cold water. Remove the ham from the soaking, and while wet rub the sugar thoroughly into it. When this is done cover the ham entirely with the paste. Let it stand for twenty-four hours. Then put it in a fish-kettle with a quart of water to steam. Add a bay leaf, one onion, a carrot, and a stick of green celery if available. The syrup with the juice from the ham and the water that went into the paste will add to the bulk of liquid in which the ham boils. This with the quart of water already mentioned will be sufficient. Keep it simmering continually for six hours. It should just keep on the move, but must not boil quickly. When cooked, remove the skin, which should peel off easily with the crust of spicy paste, leaving the ham ready to be glazed. Brush over with a pastry-brush dipped in glaze or thick brown gravy.

A recent report on the Monk Fryston Day School stated that "All the good features mentioned in a previous report are fully maintained, and there are evidences of progress in the direction of the work, which in a number of classes is above the average."

MOTHERS' MEETING.—On New Year's Eve Mrs William Crosland, of The Limes, South Milford, gave an excellent tea to the Mothers' Meeting of the members of the Mothers' Meeting connected with St. Mary's Church, and there were about 30 guests. Afterwards games, Edith, Lillian and Kathleen Crosland, added greatly to the enjoyment of the evening with Christmas games and a lively little sketch. The pleasant evening ended with the old chorus Sir Roger de Coverley. Mrs Houlden proposed a vote of thanks to Mrs Crosland, and this was seconded by Mrs Joseph Brown and cordially passed.

SOUTH MILFORD WESLEYAN CHURCH BAZAAR.—In connection with the Wesleyan Church a sale of work and Christmas tree were held on Friday and Saturday. The opening ceremony was performed by Mr Job Day, of Stanks, assisted by Mrs Day, and supported by the Rev. S. Mills. Mr Day, before declaring the sale open, made a speech full of encouragement and helpfulness to the large audience. Mrs Day also expressed her great pleasure in being present and was very pleased to recognise the signs of a hopeful future for the church. The residents in the district, regardless of sect, most generously responded to the calls of the two stewards (Mr J. Bennett and Mr J. Bissett) in their solicitation for a very worthy object. A beautiful tree was very kindly provided by Mr Ward, nurseryman, Sherburn. The tree was tastefully decorated in a most seasonable manner. The stallholders were as follows:—Drapery and fancy stall—Mrs Thompson, Mrs Pettinger, Mrs R. Butty, Mrs J. R. Butty, Miss Wilmer Smith, Mr and Mrs C. Butty, Miss Butty, Miss Maud Butty, Mrs Sykes, Mrs Allsopp, Mrs Alf. Atkinson, Mrs J. Benson; refreshment and party, etc. stall—Mrs J. Riley, Miss Evelyn Atkinson, and Miss Hodden; tea room—Mrs Green, Mrs Bissett, Mrs Clarke, and Miss Cross; Xmas tree—Miss E. Sykes, Miss Rosie Barker. Miss borough Hall, but the fixture was abandoned on Olive Green, Miss Butcher, Miss Lily Bissett, account of the frost.
Miss Elsie Newsome, Miss Annie Riley, Miss Nellie Barker, Miss Hirst, Miss Nancy Clarke, Miss Elsie Barker, and Miss Ivy Thompson; book stall—Mr and Mrs Bissett and Mr A. Chilton; weighing machine—Mr H. R. Batty and Mr Fred Hume; door-keepers—Mr Thompson, Mr Walker, Mr G. Riley, and Mr Claud Newsome. Musical entertainments were given during the evenings. The proceeds, over £30, came up to expectations, and are to be devoted to cleaning and renovating the church. The coming of age of Mr Algernon Joseph Rutherford Lumb, only son of Mr and Mrs Lumb, of The Hall, Ryton-on-Tyne, and Goldsborough Hall, near Knaresborough, was celebrated on Wednesday night by a ball at Goldsborough Hall. Mr Lumb, jun., who is a lieutenant in the 2nd Dragoon Guards (Queen's Bays), attained his majority last year, but the celebrations were postponed owing to the death of a relative. For nearly twenty years Mr and Mrs Lumb have resided at the delightful old Elizabethan mansion of Goldsborough, built early in the seventeenth century by Sir Richard Hutton, and have played a conspicuous part in the social life of the county. The concert of Monday evening proved an event of considerable interest to a wide circle of friends. Included among them were many members of the York and Ainsty Hunt, with which the young officer has been a frequent rider, both during vacations while at Eton and Sandhurst, and while at home on leave from "The Bays."

Mrs Lumb entertained about 250 guests at the ball, in addition to the members of the house party, which was, however, of a purely family composition. To accommodate the guests a temporary ballroom was erected on the south lawn, opening from the library, and this made a most handsome and effective apartment. It was 80 feet long by 30 feet broad, with a corrugated roof, and decorated in a colour scheme of mauve and pale pink. Large ornamental gilt mirrors suspended at intervals on the walls heightened the effect, and when dancing was at its height—at 1913 merged into 1914—the scene was pretty in the extreme. Many beautifully shaded electric lights depended from the roof, and these, with the electric sconces on the mirrors, produced an effect of dazzling brilliance. At each end of the room palms and decorative plants afforded a shadowy contrast to the surrounding illumination. Underneath the south gallery was established a confectionery, and here Joyce's Band, from London, was stationed; while an alcove at the other end of the ballroom was furnished for refreshments. The fortnight's sitting-out was, however, was the handsome Tudor staircase—one of the finest in the North of England, with its wonderful mullioned windows and the deeply recessed window seats. A buffet was furnished in the library, a cosy little apartment, with its original Tudor oak panelling, one of the finest architectural features of the house.

Dancing commenced at ten o'clock, and a pause was made at midnight to welcome the New Year by the strains of the Early English church bells, and by signalise the advent of 1914. It is interesting to note that the bells in this church have been in use for more than 600 years. Their ringing on this occasion was also intended to mark a happy event being commemorated at The Hall.

Among those accepting invitations to the ball were:—

The Countess of Harewood and party, Lady Mowbray and Stourton and party, Viscount Lascelles, Mr and Miss Foster and party, Mr and Miss Edward Fox and party, Mrs Fielden and party, Lady Hawke and party, Miss Dent and party, Col. and Mrs Nickalls and party, Mr and Mrs Wilmer Smith, Mr and Mrs C. Butterworth and party, Mr and Mrs C. Charlesworth and party, etc.

OUR GARDENS.

A Weekly Article specially Written for

Amateur Gardeners, Allotment Holders, &c.

By ALBERT CLARKE, Birkenshaw.

THE FLOWER GARDEN.

In most districts the soil is still in splendid condition for planting. Usually at this time of the year it is cold and wet, and totally unfit for the reception of plants, trees, and shrubs. Roses may be planted providing no heavy rainfall occurs before these notes appear. When importing new trees from the fakers the roots should be examined on arrival, and if they appear at all dry they should be soaked in water for an hour or so before planting. The importance of lifting and replanting established rose trees is not generally recognised. They should be lifted carefully, with the object of preserving all the fibrous roots. Any long fibreless roots may be cut well back, and in the case of new trees any bruised or broken portions should be removed with a sharp knife. It is advisable to work some more loam about the roots when planting, and in every case the soil should be trodden firmly. When all are planted, prick the surface over with a garden fork and unless the soil is of a stiff heavy nature give a good mulching of half-decayed manure. Spring-mulching is best for heavy soils. Many rose trees are crippled at planting time by having their roots crowded into a small hole. In all cases the roots should be spread out in natural position. About four years may elapse between each replanting.

LILY OF THE VALLEY.

Lily of the Valley may be lifted and replanted now. This charming little flower prefers a moist, partially shaded position. Thoroughly decayed manure and leaf-mould may be dug in before planting and the crowns may be split up singly or planted in clumps of about four. Beds which do not require disturbing should have a light topdressing of thoroughly decayed manure and fine soil. Anyone who has not tried it will be surprised to find how readily home grown crowns will force. The roots should be lifted with a fork, retaining as much of the soil as possible. They should be allowed to remain outdoor, roots uppermost, for a week or two before being removed to the forcing house. They may then be packed close together in boxes with a little fresh soil about them, and stood in a temperature of about 65. Watering will have to be attended to, and a light spraying overhead once a day will hasten growth. It is customary to keep the crowns in darkness until the flower buds appear. Afterwards they may be gradually accustomed to light.

CLIMBERS.

Unsightly buildings and bare walls may be covered and made beautiful by the introduction of some suitable climbing plants. There is nothing better for the purpose than the rapid growing varieties of ivy. The soil should be dug two feet deep and a generous supply of rotten manure, leaf-mould, and crushed lime rubble should be worked in as the digging proceeds. First planting is essential and if the soil is not moist good watering should be given. The shoots should be made secure against the ravages of wind.

The Jasminums are also suitable plants for planting against a wall. The variety nudiflorum is a very interesting subject. It is now in full bloom and has only to be seen to be appreciated. The flowers are of a pale yellow shade and are borne in long sprays. Jasminum officinalis is a white variety and is very sweet scented.

Another pretty climber is the amplopsis veitchii, or as it is often called, the Virginian creeper. The leaves assume some gorgeous tints during the autumn and are very useful for table decoration.

The clematis family also provides many pretty varieties for wall covering.

All or any of the above may be planted now or at any time during the next three months when the soil is in suitable condition to receive them.

LAWNS.

Continue to sweep and roll lawns, whenever the turf is dry enough to allow the work to be done without blackening the grass. The absence of heavy rains has made it possible to continue this class of work much later than usual this year.

Levelling and relaying may be continued so long as the ground keeps dry enough to allow the work to proceed. The listners of the season will have little effect upon the turf, and there is less likelihood of the grass suffering from removal now than would be the case when spring comes round.

VEGETABLE GARDEN.

Light soils should not be manured until the spring, or most of the food would be washed away before the crops are got in. Heavy soils should be trenched and manured as soon as conditions permit. The surface should be left as rough as possible to allow the sun, wind, and frost to penetrate freely. There is no better way of improving the texture of heavy land than to get it well frozen and it is obvious that a smooth, level surface would hinder the frost from penetrating deeply.

Rhubarb, mint, scalkale and asparagus will force readily now. Asparagus is very easy to force. A three feet deep bottled should be built in a house heated to about 60 degrees. A few inches of soil should be placed over the fermenting material, and roots packed close together on this. They require a six-inch covering of fine soil, which should not be pressed down. If the soil is moist no water will be required for a week or so. The first cutting can usually be made within a fortnight. Water warmed to the temperature of the house should be given before the soil gets dry. The roots packed in a box, covered with soil, and stood in a warm house will commence to grow immediately.

PLANTS UNDER GLASS.

Chrysanthemum growers should make a point of securing as many cuttings as possible during the next few weeks. Exhibitors on the look out for good Japanese novelties should obtain the following:—Queen Mary, Mr. H. J. Jones, Mrs. R. C. Pulling, Miss A. E. Roope, Bob Pulling, Mr. Bob Stevenson, Master Rex, His Majesty, Daily Mail, Thomas Lunt, and Francis Rowe. It is more than probable that the next few years will see a great change in regard to the method of cultivating the chrysanthemum, especially for decorative purposes. The practice of striking cuttings in April and flowering them in six-inch pots is becoming very popular. Suitable varieties for the purpose are: Vivian Morel and its sports, Source d'or, Yellow Cap, Mrs Roots, Reckless Thompson, Felton's Favourite, Le Pactole, Market Red, Western King, and Nivus. The two latter are late varieties.

PLEIONES.

The pleiones—or, as they are often called, Indian crocus—are easily-grown hothouse orchids, and are both pretty and interesting. They are just now sorting into new growth, and should be either top-dressed or repotted. They like a light position, and should be freely watered until their growth is completed. Dry treatment must follow, and they should then be given a cooler position until the flower-buds commence to show. They may then be returned to the stove, and watering may be resumed. The flowers are produced in the hearts of the young growths, and if required for cool flowers may easily be plucked out. Any attempt at cutting them off, would probably result in the young growths being injured, as the tips of the leaves are showing before the flowers open, and the flower stalk is very short.

ODONTOGLOSSUM GRANDE.

This is another easily-grown orchid which is often ruined by being kept in too high a temperature. It may be treated as a cool-house variety, and will give good results if grown alongside O. Crispum. It requires a rather long period of rest immediately after completing its growth. Whilst resting water is needed only when the pseudo-bulbs commence to shrivel. Watering should be resumed when new growth commences.

GENERAL MEMS.

Cinerarias require room to develop their leaves or they will get drawn and spindly. Syringe them on bright days.

Calendarias should be kept near the light, and should not be watered until approaching dryness.

Cyclamen may be fed with weak liquid manure once a week. This will help them to develop their flowers.

Chrysanthemum cuttings must be protected from direct draughts.

Bulbs should be removed from the plunging material when an inch or two of top growth has been made.

Viola frames should be ventilated freely and the cuttings have any decaying portions picked off. Weeds must not be allowed to exist there, and if the surface of the soil gets caked it should be stirred with a pointed stick.

EARLY TOMATOES.

The cultivation of the tomato has been taken up so extensively that during the summer months the supply is often above the demand, and the fruit has to be sold at very low prices. Early supplies invariably command good prices, and the demand is well above the supply. Seed should be sown now in a temperature of about 65 degrees. When the seedlings appear they may be stood on a shelf within a foot of the roof glass, and as soon as large enough should be potted into small pots. A sandy compost should be used, or damping off may occur. During January they make very little headway, but when February comes in they move freely, and must be potted on as the pots fill with roots. As the days lengthen a rather lower temperature will satisfy them, but they must be kept with the tops close to the glass, or they will get drawn and spindly. When-inch pots are large enough for the final potting, and daily attention should be paid to fertilising the blossoms. Shaking the rods about midday usually suffices, but some growers brush the blooms over with a camel's hair brush.

HAUNTED BRIDGE IN JAPAN.

There is a bridge in Tokyo over which no bride will pass. They call it the Bridge of the Strange Disappearance, and any woman crossing it at the time of marriage will surely be divorced.

A few days ago, however, the spell which overhung the mysterious bridge was officially removed. Shinto priests in procession came to do battle with the forces of darkness. Duly robed and equipped with potent charms, they formed themselves into two parties. One recited prayers, while the other passed to and fro over the bridge, striking with long staffs at the spirits which they alone were empowered to see. This done, the bridge was pronounced "open," and safe for the most timid bride.

The incident to which the bridge owes its ill-omened reputation dates from the thirteenth century. In the neighbourhood, says tradition, lived one Nakano, a wealthy but unpatriotic man, whose constant free was that his goods would be seized to swell the national war-chest. So he hauled his treasure in boxes by the river, slew the servant who had assisted him, and cast the body into its dark waters. His sin was visited upon his daughter, who, three married, was thrice left a widow. Distracted, the unhappy girl fled from her father's house, but in crossing the bridge she suddenly disappeared and was never seen again.

Since then her spirit and that of the murdered servant have haunted the scene of their ill-fate, but now the Yodo-bashi (to give the bridge its modern name) knows them no more.

Two oldage pensioners, one aged eighty-three and the other seventy-two, were married at St. Saviour's Church, Brockley Rise, Forest Hill.

Dr. Francis Ward, who had been engaged by the Essex Agricultural Fishery Committee to report on the feeding habits of gulls, states that the birds are increasing on the land, and the crops of the specimens examined were found to be full of seed-corn.

PROFITABLE POULTRY CULTURE.

A SUCCESSFUL BREEDING-SEASON.

INTRODUCTORY.

"It's been such a bad breeding-season," is a remark one frequently hears, and I am afraid often makes use of as a consolation when failure appears.

Overhearing this expression so constantly, and feeling absolutely convinced of its fallacious self-deceptive nature, it occurred to me that a treatise thoroughly dissecting and subjecting to critical examination the many details which conjointly make or mar a breeding-season would not only be most acceptable to many, but also assist them to avoid the pitfalls (which otherwise only experience, at a great expense of both money and time, could teach them), and thus eventually abolish, or at all events minimise, the use of this most objectionable and illusive observation.

The increased interest in poultry culture has naturally attracted both brains and capital to the industry, causing rapid development in fowlhouse, management, stock, and appliances, and in my opinion, founded on practical experience, is due to perseverance and an intelligent application of the information at our disposal, we are in a unique position, almost if not entirely independent of nature. With us, then, is responsibility of success or failure, and as we willingly accept the pleasures of the former, let us equally be honest and acknowledge our errors when the latter obtains. Occasionally failure may be caused by circumstances over which we have no control, but in the great majority of cases a careful perusal of the information contained in this treatise, practically carried out with that indomitable energy so essential in poultry farming, will ensure success.

It is not my intention to write a scientific book, nor to give the why and wherefore's such works abound. I am simply desirous of placing before you certain facts of commission and omission, which militate against success, and details which must receive attention to command success.

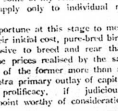
The suggestions are divided into three parts, the first extending to the time we have obtained our eggs, the second devoted to the incubation stage, and the third to rearing the youngsters.

My New Year's wish to you is that my thesis may be of practical assistance, and that you may enjoy and experience a more successful breeding-season than hitherto.

A DEFINITE OBJECT.

There are so many different departments in poultry culture that unless one possesses a definite policy and strictly adheres to it he may be compared to a rudderless ship—he may land safely, but the law of averages is decidedly against him. Whether exhibition or utility, fattening birds or selling eggs, or even the day-old chick industry attracts your attention, the determining factor of your enterprise is a successful breeding-season. The preliminaries to be carefully considered before the final decision is arrived at.

SELECTION OF STOCK.



Having decided your plan of campaign the selection of breeding stock to suit your requirements becomes the first necessity. The selection may be made from stock you already possess or acquire by purchase. It is not my province to attempt to influence you to any particular branch of poultry culture, simply to assist you when that determination is made. I am attempting to cater for all, so that some of my remarks will be general and some apply only to individual requirements.

It is, however, opportune at this stage to mention that, beyond their initial cost, pure-bred birds are no more expensive to breed and rear than mongrels, whilst the prices realised by the sale of stock and eggs of the former more than remunerate for the extra primary outlay of capital. Their increased prolificacy, if judiciously selected, is also a point worthy of consideration.

(Any enquiries concerning poultry-keeping addressed to our expert, Ralph R. Allen, Sawbridgeworth, Herts, will be answered through these columns free, but those requiring a postal answer must, or sending birds for post-mortem examination, must remit half-crown postal order).

At Killeggam, Co. Westmeath, while returning home from a local market, Michael Leogue, farmer, of Killeggam, was fired at from close range, and his right arm blown off. Leogue, who was concerned in a land dispute in the district, was removed to hospital. His recovery is regarded as doubtful. So far the police have made no arrest.

A FOOD THAT DOES MAKE HENS LAY

YOUR HENS will be healthier; will require less attention; will give you more eggs; will pay you about 100 per cent. profit; will WILL LAY MANY MORE EGGS and incidentally return you more profit, if you give them only a fair chance; will assist them to stand the strain of laying. For this purpose there is nothing like

FOOTBALL JOTTINGS

BARKSTON ASH CUP.

In the first round of the Barkston Ash Cup Competition on Saturday afternoon Cawood defeated Barwick Rising Sun, and Church Fenton went under to Selby Olympia by three goals to one. Tadcaster Old Boys should have played Sherburn, but the former withdrew.

BARWICK R. S. V. CAWOOD UNITED.

The match between Cawood United and Barwick Rising Sun was played at Cawood, and the homesters won a hard-fought game. The teams were:—Cawood—Saunders, goal; Foxton and Dilnock, backs; Lund, Leggott, and Barker, half-backs; Lofthouse, Grieveson, Grieveson, Smith, and Curtis, forwards. Barwick Rising Sun—Mosdy, goal; Pulleyn and Peggott, backs; Scargill, Markham, and Oldfield, half-backs; Walton, Robshaw, Lowett, Robshaw, and Back, forwards. Cawood kicked off against the wind, and were not long in opening the score. Lofthouse forced his way through, and the ball cannoned off the custodian into the net. Cawood continued to have the better of the game, and Curtis made a run half the length of the field, but shot wide with only the goalkeeper to beat. Both the forwards had hard lines with good shots. Shortly after this Barwick broke away, and scored. Saunders saved a good shot at the expense of a corner, which was cleared. Lofthouse, for Cawood, and Robshaw, for Barwick, afterwards netted. Half-time:—Cawood United, 2; Barwick Rising Sun, 2. The game restarted at a good pace, and, considering the cold wind which was blowing, good football was played by both teams. R. Grievsom soon scored another goal for Cawood. The game was fought out in semi-darkness and a blizzard, and nothing further was scored. Cawood won by three goals to two.

BRIGHTON SHIELD—A SURPRISE.

Wetherby got a surprise on Boxing Day, when they played Wetherby and Corinthians. The game was keenly contested, and the Corinthians managed to win by two goals to one. Garforth W.R. were in good form against Alverford, and scored the points by three goals to nil, but Milford had a hard tussle for points against Monk Fryston, who were only beaten by the odd goal in five. In the match at Harewood, where Boston Spa were the visitors, the referee did not put in an appearance.

Sherburn appear to be a coming team. On Boxing Day they went to Whitkirk and beat the homesters by two goals to one, and they gave a creditable display. Garforth W.R. on Saturday, losing by two goals. Garforth scored three to one.

WEST RIDING CUP—SATURDAY'S MATCHES.

The first match between South Milford and Wetherby was drawn, and the replay should have taken place at Wetherby, but the Milfordians did not make the journey, and Wetherby go forward to next round. They have a rather stiff task, however, as their opponents, the New Wortley Gasworks are their opponents,

---

The second round will be played on Saturday, kick-off at 2.30, and the following competing are:—Rothwell White Rose v. Allerton Bywater Colliery. Referee, M. Joel.

Horsforth v. Ripon City. Referee, W. A. Osborne.

Fryston Colliery v. Methley Perseverance. Referee, Corporal Bainbridge.

Clarence Iron and Steel Works (Leeds) v. Garforth White Rose. Referee, W. Milburn.

Wetherby v. New Wortley Gasworks. Referee, E. Pullan.

Glasshoughton Colliery v. Rothwell Parish Church. Referee, A. Rowbottom.

LOCAL CLUBS AND LEEDS DISTRICT CUP.

A meeting of the Leeds and District Football Association Cup and Emergency Committee was held at the Green Dragon Hotel on Monday night, Mr W. Howe presiding. The action of the secretary in ordering Allotts White Star and Oulton St. John's to play their qualifying round on January 3rd was confirmed. For arriving late at East Hunslet on December 20th, thereby causing the game to be unfinished, Kippax Woodville were removed from the competition. The draw for the first round of the Leeds and District Senior Cup Competition resulted as follows:—

Rothwell Parish Church v. East Leeds. Referee, R. H. Stead.

Waterloo Main Colliery v. St. Anthony's. Referee, J. T. Lawson.

New Wortley Gasworks v. Allotts White Star or Oulton. Referee, H. Fitzpatrick.

Clarence Ironworks v. Leeds University V.M.I. Referee, R. H. Smithers.

East Hunslet v. Allotts West Riding. Referee, H. Milburn.

Beeston Hill Parish Church v. Great Preston White Rose. Referee, A. Holmes.

Methley Perseverance v. Leeds Harehills. Referee, M. Joel.

Allotts Albion v. Leeds Churchville. Referee, W. Pratt.

To be played on the grounds of the first-named clubs on Saturday, January 10th.

ROTHWELL W.R. v. ROTHWELL P.C.

A League match, between these teams was played on the Rose enclosure on Friday before a good number of spectators. The Churchmen kicked off uphill, facing the wind. The Rosesites got possession, and Hughes making a fine run down the wing, scored in the first few minutes with a cross shot. After a long spell of uneven play the Rosesites again took the ball down the field, and Wrigley netted. The White Rose were leading by two to nil at the interval. On resuming, play was very keen, the Churchmen having the advantage of the wind. On one of the Rose players being penalized, Pickersgill scored for the Churchmen with a capital shot, Heaton making a fine attempt to save. After disheartening the Rose goal for some time, Hirst netted, the ball bouncing off the cross-bar against the upright, and into the net, making the totals equal. The game was drawn—two goals each.

ROTHWELL P.C. BEATEN.

On Saturday afternoon Rothwell Parish Church were at Methley and lost to Methley Perseverance by two goals to one. The match was a disappointment to the Rothwell eleven, who were weakened by the loss of their accustomed custodian, Nunnes, who, it is pleasing to record, is making satisfactory progress in his illness. His place was taken by George Woodhead, who made a good show. In the first half Rothwell were disallowed a goal, shot by Hitchin during a melee. Methley obtained a lead by a goal, Woodhead, in attempting to clear, letting the ball slip out of his hands. In the second half Hitchin equalised with a neat shot. Rothwell lost the services of Boyes during the game, he being compelled to retire owing to an injury. The referee (Mr G. Marsh) was also hurt in an unfortunate manner. Wrigglesworth, the Methley right half, was taking a shot at goal, when the ball hit Mr Marsh, who was dodging out of the way at the time, on the back of the neck, causing him to fall forward. He was stunned by his fall for a few moments. There remains before time Methley netted their second and winning goal.

RUGBY NOTES.

HALTON C.S. v. BEESTON HILL.

An ordinary match was played between these teams at Halton before an enthusiastic crowd. Burman kicked off for Halton, who immediately rushed to their opponents' line, Speight opening the homesters' account with a good try after beating several opponents. Beeston Hill then adopted vigorous tactics, and made a determined assault on the Halton's line, but Lacy and Collis saved the situation with determined cackling. After magnificent passing by the homesters, Hayes was put in possession, and showing a clean pair of heels, rounded the opposition in fine style, and scored under the posts, the same player converting. From the kick out A. Killerby fielded, and, after a run of nearly the whole length of the field, passed to R. Jackson, who scored at the corner. Burman picked up in the loose, and after a strong run, lost the ball over the line, but owing to the set-art following up of Kenney the latter scored, Hayes goaling. From a scrimmage W. Killerby gathered, and passed to Kenney, who, in turn, gave to A. Killerby. Hayes received the final transfer and romped over. Half-time:—Halton 2 goals 5 tries (19 points), Beeston Hill nil. Upon the resumption the visitors improved considerably, and Halton had a hot time of it keeping them out, but relief came through Wilson giving a good kick, which found touch near the half-way line, Hayes picked up smartly and scored his third try. Burman scored a good try just before time. A feature of the game was the unselfish way in which W. Killerby and Kenney worked together, and Kenney especially, who repeatedly broke away and beat several men, gave beautifully timed passes. In the forwards Speight, Caine, Collis, and Lacy were outstanding, and Burman worked well in the loose, but would have scored his side still further if he had been so selfish when in possession of the ball. Result:—Halton C.S. 2 goals 7 tries (25 points), Beeston Hill nil.

EIGHTEENTH CENTURY MALINGERING.

Malingering, it appears, is as old as the friendly societies themselves, though happily it has never affected any but a small proportion of the members. A quaint declaration was required in the eighteenth century by a Lancashire friendly society. It ran:—

"I do declare that I will not complain of sickness, so as to be troublesome to the box; without a just cause, and if it should please God to visit me with sickness or lameness which obliges me to have recourse to the box for support, I will, to the best of my judgment, use the best means possible to regain my strength; and, as soon as it shall please God to give me health and strength, so as to become capable of following my business or occupation, I will immediately declare off the box."

The secretary of one of the large Orders, writing on this question a few days ago, said:—"So far as I am able to judge at the moment, the sickness in the voluntary section has been far greater than in 1912." Though some cases of malingering are bound to be brought to light, there is, it is stated, no expectation of widespread operation on either the State insurance funds or the voluntary funds. Sickness is not only seasonal, but to a considerable extent geographical in its incidence.

2 YEARS' SCHOOLING Lost Through SCALP SORES

Alice Carnall, Manchester, cured by Zam-Buk.

Medical Officer Confirms Splendid ZAM-BUK Cure.

"ALICE, our youngest daughter, was sent home from school with a sore head," says Mr. J. Carnall, 3, Levens St., Pendleton, Manchester.

"The child's hair fell out in bunches practically all over her head. Besides ointment from the school doctor, we tried home-made remedies, but Alice didn't get better.

"We then took her regularly for 12 months to the Manchester Skin Hospital. To our dismay, however, Alice's head broke out with inflamed pimples, which the doctors described as eczema. Alice was in great distress because of the itching and soreness. We got tired of taking her to the Hospital, so we tried private doctors. The sores continued to spread, however, and Alice was a terrible sight.

"Alice had been suffering quite two years without showing the least sign of ever being cured when we were pursuaded to try Zam-Buk.

"Zam-Buk's effect was really astonishing. The balm seemed to sink into the child's scalp. Besides soothing the itching and inflammation, Zam-Buk rooted out the disease. All bad matter was drawn from the sores, which died away.

"We persevered with Zam-Buk until Alice's scalp was quite clean and sweet again. Then she returned to school, where the Medical Officer passed her as completely cured. Alice's head is now quite healthy, thanks alone to Zam-Buk."

Zam-Buk

Zam-Buk owes its great success to its very herbal and scientific composition, and its complete freedom from the lard and other animal fats which destroy the value of ordinary ointments.

Sold by all in sealed boxes at 1½d. and 3½d. Of all chemists and drug stores.

A WOMAN'S FLIGHT

SHORT STORY.

Like a grey sopping mantle, the fog wrapped in its clinging mist the ship that crept along cautiously, so slowly that at times it seemed as if there were no movement at all. Two figures stood side by side on the deserted deck, and neither knew the other was there. They were a young man and a girl who had found the cabins and saloon unendurably stuffy, and felt that any air was better than none.

Presently the girl moved abruptly; everything was unbearable, and with her sudden movement knocked up against her fellow passenger.

"I beg your pardon. I didn't know anybody was there," she said apologetically.

The man's face flushed and a thrill stirred his heart with almost a pang of pain. He knew the voice, was sure it could belong to no other girl, and it was the very person he was fleeing from, whose presence had become a sweet torture to him, for he loved her madly, would always love her, yet could never have the hope of winning her. Why, her wedding day was fixed! She would probably marry by now, since he had fled from England as from a danger, anxious to put the seas between himself and Phillipa Loring.

The police had been offered him to go out to Ceylon, tea planting, and he had eagerly accepted it. But this woman whose voice resembled Phillipa's could not be she; he was dreaming, haunted as he ever was by her presence. She was married to Lord Chalmers. He had seen in the papers that the wedding would shortly take place, and had heard all the talk and chatter, and of how lucky the girl was.

"My name is Haughton—John Haughton," said the man.

The girl gasped and her head slipped from his arm and gripped the wooden rail of the deck.

"And mine is—Phillipa Loring."

"How did you come here? Ah, I understand your husband is with you, you are on your wedding trip," answered the man huskily.

"No, oh no, I am alone. Didn't you know that is all off? I am not going to be married at all—not at all!" emphatically.

"For God's sake, what do you mean?"

His hand fell on her in the gloom, and touching her arm held it.

"I've been very badly, shockingly; I broke it off on the eve of the wedding day. I just couldn't when it came to the point; everyone was angry with me, and there—Mrs Carson helped me, she was a friend of mine, she had to send a maid out to her sister in Colombo. The girl fucked going at the very last, and I am taking her place. I can dress hair, make blouses, and things; I've had to, you know, so she helped me to get away, and—here I am. But you—what are you doing here?"

"You can't be going out as a lady's maid, the thing is impossible; you, Phillipa Loring—how could you think of it?" he cried.

"It came upon me all at once that I could not be Lord Chalmers' wife. I am not the sort of girl I thought I was. I found that I just had to love the man whom I married. Riches and position would not make up to me for—well, you know—for other things, and I was an awful coward, for I ran away. Of course, this going out to Colombo came as a chance to save me. Mrs Carson advanced me my passage money, and my name is booked on the ship as Jane White."

"Jane White," repeated Haughton drily. He felt astirred by the suddenness of things and the unseen situation, inconceivable it appeared to him. Mrs Carson, too, what did it mean? Phillipa evidently knew nothing of the fact that Mrs Carson was an old and intimate friend of his, that she alone knew of his love for the girl, and she had actually sent her on the same ship with him. It is true, Jane White was travelling second class and he was first, but he had wandered down to the second class to wile away the time, but he knew that the first-class would not see much of him now.

Clouds seemed to be rolling away from him; there was light and hope, and his heart leapt at the thought that Phillipa was free. Why should he not woo her? And then he remembered Ethel Carson's last words as she clasped his hand in farewell.

"Who knows? Fate may be kind after all. I have a feeling that your luck is changing, Jack, old boy. Write and tell me if it does."

Her words rang in his ear. She was a splendid friend, a chum of the right sort and could keep a secret. He knew that when one day he had blurted out the truth, the cause of his moroseness, his hopeless love story, and she had talked to him, said but little perhaps, but helped him as only a woman can—sometimes.

And now he learned that she was Phillipa's friend, too. How strange!

"I believe the fog is lifting! Why, I can see you!" said the girl, and he saw the shine of her eyes through the vanishing mist.

* * * * * * * *

They had had bad weather through the bay, but both were good sailors and had been able to meet every day on deck, one side only, for the ship was at such an angle that only one side could be available for a walk for those who possessed sea legs and good macintoshes. However, the worst was over now, and instead of wearing an ugly, shapeless waterproof, Phillipa appeared one morning in white serge and a shady hat that was most becoming, the folds of soft blue silk round the crown matched her eyes, and the man who loved her wondered if it could be possible that he should have the luck to win such a lovely girl whom every man turned his head to look at.

"How nice you look!" was her greeting when he came towards her in flannels, looking smart and cool and delightfully English.

"I was about to say the same thing to you, but now I suppose I mustn't. You would think me too unoriginal. Isn't the sun delightful?"

"Heavenly! Do you know I am sure I'm not dressed as Jane White would be, this is one of my trousseau garments; I picked out the plainest and most useful and brought with me. I shall have to put on something more dowdy before we reach the end of the voyage. How fast the time has gone!"

"Too fast!"

"We have become quite friends," she said in a low voice, fluttering the leaves of a magazine she held.

"Have we?"

"Perhaps I ought not to have said that," she murmured.

"Why not?" replied Haughton gravely.

"Well—you seemed to have a doubt about it."

"There are various kinds of friends, some are content with little in the way of friendship. I want a great deal."

He looked at her then, and their eyes met. Hers expressed a sweet confidence that answered his questioning look.

They sat down on a heavy coil of rope and were apart from the many passengers, who were glad to be out on this brilliant morning.

"I would be friends with you and have your love," quoted John Haughton, and laid his hand over hers on the magazine.

She made no reply, but a warm colour rose to her face, her eyes were lowered and her lips quivered.

"Phillipa!"

"Jack!"

He had not thought to tell his love so soon, he had been afraid of so short a wooing, but now it was over, and there, in the sunshine with the song of the dancing waves in their ears, he told her all she was to him, and how he would work for her to make a little home where she would reign as queen.

"You'll fetch me soon, won't you, Jack? I don't mind being poor, and I am quite a useful sort of girl, really, but remember, you'll be marrying a maid, for I shall be Jane White when we land, you know," said Phillipa, and then as she snuggled closer to him, she whispered:

"Don't you know it was because of you that I broke with Lord Chalmers? I kept comparing you two men, and wondered why I felt so different with you, how you made my heart beat, how I—I thrilled when I heard your name mentioned."

"I just want to take you in my arms little girl, and never let you go. Yes, I understand, Darling, we must be married as soon as we reach Colombo. We'll fight our way together."

* * * * * * * *

"Well, of course, I guessed what would happen, and was prepared after receiving Ethel's long cable, which must have cost her a month's dress money to send, Jane White was a myth. I am not in want of a maid at all, and you are to make use of my house and home until the wedding is arranged, so that's settled, and you are to go right here in my husband coming along to add his welcome to mine," said Mrs Carson's sister after shaking hands warmly with the engaged pair.

And a little later the woman in England who had brought them together so cleverly, received news of their marriage that rejoiced her heart, for they were both very dear to her, and she was bent on making them happy—as indeed she had done.

Dr. Robertson, the Bishop of Exeter, has been given a motor-car, subscribed for by leading laity in his diocese, as a Christmas present.

During the Boxing Day meet of Lord Middleton's hunt at Skelmere hounds killed a fox in a farm kitchen pantry,—where the fugitive had taken refuge.

It has been reported to the Dulverton (Somerset) Board of Guardians that an old lady at present receiving parochial relief will not apply for an old-age pension, although according to her marriage certificate her age is more than 70. She says that when she was married she was under 21 and misrepresented her age because her parents objected to the marriage. The Guardians decided to stop the relief in order than the old lady may apply for a pension.

A THORNER LADY'S DEATH.

WIDOW OF THE LATE VICAR.

The sudden death of a clergyman's widow, Mrs Jane Gertrude Mascroft, wife of the late Rev. James Wilson Mascroft, formerly vicar of Thorner, was investigated on Monday afternoon by the Leeds Coroner (Mr J. C. Malcolm).

The deceased lady, who was about sixty-five years of age, and resided at 16, Shobbroke View, Chapeltown, Leeds, had suffered for some time from a weak heart. On Friday last she was returning home from a visit to a friend shortly after nine o'clock at night, when she was taken ill.

She knocked at the door of a house in Shobbroke Avenue, but Mrs Lyder, who was the sole occupant, did not immediately open the door, owing to the darkness of the night. Instead she summoned a neighbour, and when Mr Rhodes, a wholesale clothier, of 61, Shobbroke Avenue, went into the garden of the next-door house he found Mrs Mascroft lying dead on the path near the gate.

The medical evidence showed death to be due to heart failure, and a verdict of "Natural causes" was returned.

PRESENTATION TO A BARWICK TEACHER.

A SCHOLES LADY'S WORK.

A very interesting ceremony took place last before the Barwick-in-Elmet School broke up for the Christmas vacation. Miss Emma Crosland, who had been connected with the school for over twenty years, first as scholar, and then as teacher, had tendered her resignation prior to being married. In order to mark their appreciation of Miss Crosland's work, both teachers and scholars had joined together to present her with a pair of pewter vases.

In making the presentation Mr A. Booth, the headmaster, referred to the good example set by Miss Crosland in her devotion to her school work. Though living at Scholes, Miss Crosland was invariably first at school. She had covered nearly two miles in her journeys to and from school. Many of these miles had been walked in bad weather, with snow deep on the ground. Though both teachers and scholars were sorry they were to lose Miss Crosland, they were most sincere in their wishes for her future happiness.

Miss Connie Lumb, the youngest subscriber, on behalf of go of the scholars, handed Miss Crosland one the vases, while the other was given by the teachers.

In her reply, Miss Crosland said she felt it very hard to say what she wanted to say. Telling a fairy story or giving a history lesson would have been far easier. Nevertheless, she thanked them all for their kindness, and hoped that as a visitor she would yet pay several more visits to the school.

Before being dismissed, both children and teachers joined hands and sang "Auld Lang Syne."

In addition to the vases, Miss Crosland received some eight or nine presents from individual scholars.

BARWICK-IN-ELMET INSTITUTE.

A billiard handicap, in which there were 40 entries, has just been finished at Barwick Institute.

In the semi-final rounds E. Backhouse received 70 beat T. Robshaw one 25 by 150 to 110, while H. Walton received 20 defeated T. Bowman received 50 by 150 to 123.

The final match between Walton and Backhouse proved very exciting, the latter eventually proving the winner by 2 points only—150 to 148. In playing off for third and fourth prizes T. Robshaw beat T. Bowman by 150 to 109.

The prizes went to the following:—1st prize (turkey), E. Backhouse; and prize (goose), H. Walton; 3rd prize (hare), T. Robshaw; 4th prize (couple of rabbits), T. Bowman.

For making the highest break (33) in the handicap T. Robshaw received a couple of rabbits.

At the conclusion of the final beak the prizes were presented to the winners by Councillor Lumb, who spoke of the good feeling which the players had shown in their games. The handicapping had been most carefully done, as was shown by the close finishes in most of the games. The final had proved a genuine match, for after passing the 100 mark together, it was practically a head-to-head battle between the finalists until the winning stroke.

The thanks of all the members were given to the donors of the prizes, viz., Mr H. S. Childe (Potterton Hall), Rev. R. H. Harvey, and Mr Geo. Schofield (Potterton Grange). Mr T. Robshaw suitably replied on behalf of the winners.

AN ADEL LADY AND INEFFICIENCY

CONCERNING THE LAZY.

Helen G. Grantham, M.D., of St. Helen's, Adel, in a letter to the "Post," says:—In reference to the present controversy about the position of Leeds Corporation employees and the strike, may I be permitted to draw the attention of those who advocate an all-round increase in rates of wages, to an aspect of the question hitherto almost ignored?

It is obvious that the over-paying of the inefficient and the lazy puts a premium on inefficiency and laziness, and increases the opportunity for the perpetuation of such people. It is equally obvious that there would be a stimulus of weakness to the nation, and their increase in future generations a growing menace.

It is true that there are much unhappiness among the inefficient, for there are none so unhappy and discontented as the inefficient and the lazy. Consequently, by indirectly doing anything to increase the number of the inefficient, we are directly responsible for a larger amount of human unhappiness in the future than the withholding, in the present, of more wages than a man is worth can possibly produce.

"Profiteering" and "social wreckers," together with others who should have a wider outlook, appear so desirable to exploit their intellectual horizon that they would try to diminish the present unrest and discontent at the cost of unhappiness to countless numbers of the unborn.

At the present day the joy of living which springs from using every faculty to the utmost is being crushed out of existence by the unnatural (and immoral) selection instituted by the hyper-sentimentalist, and the efforts of the Socialist to restrain each worker from doing his utmost.

The Vicar of Mellor has, in the December issue of his parish magazine, some remarkable comments on the use of the burial service. "The burial service," he says, "is meant for Christian people. It is not meant for the unbaptised, nor suicides, nor excommunicated persons."

CORRESPONDENCE

INCOME TAX DEMANDS.

(To the Editor).

Sir,—The collectors' cards are now making their annual distribution of demand notes for the current year the tax for which is payable on or before the 1st January. Before paying the amount demanded your readers should be careful to ascertain that the amount is correct, and that they have been allowed all the deductions to which they are entitled. Particularly they should see that they are not paying inhabited house duty and land tax for which they are not liable, as it is generally impossible to obtain any repayment of these duties. Repayment of incometax overpaid can now be claimed for the three years ended 5th April last; this applies, of course, more especially to income derived from investments, house property and annuities, and also claims in respect of life assurance premiums and the allowances for children under 16.—Yours etc.,

MISSING POTTERY AT FERRYBRIDGE.

POLICE MAKE A RAID—SEQUEL.

In consequence of the reported disappearance of goods from the warehouses of Messrs Poulson Brothers, West Riding Potteries, Ferrybridge, the police made a raid upon the houses of a number of suspected employees, and the result was the appearance of five persons at Pontefract Police Court on Saturday, charged with stealing a quantity of pots, plates, dishes, etc., which occupied the greater portion of the collieries' table in several large potters' crates.

Among the goods were many special potteries, bearing Yorkshire mottoes, of which, it was said, only four were made to a certain order, every one of which disappeared before delivery could be effected, and a quantity of pots for shipping orders, and therefore unattainable locally, besides quantities of goods made for and bearing the name of the West Ham Guardians.

Sarah Jane Smith, married, manageress of the warehouse from which most of the articles had been stolen, was fined £2 and £1 4s. 6d. costs, and the Bench describing her breach of trust as a bad feature of the case.

Alice Hall, who was said to be the only support of a husband crippled with a broken back, and had been in custody for 28 days, was fined £1 and £1 7s. 6d. costs; W. H. West and Charles West, labourers, and Carter Hedley, chainer, Ferrybridge, were fined £2 and costs each, and the first-named was further fined £1 6s. costs only for stealing last March a horse-collar, the property of Robert Padgett, which he pawned for 1s. 6d.

Thomas Pearson England, potter, Knottingley, was charged with stealing ten copperplates, the property of Messrs Been Brothers, potters, by whom he was employed. The plates were nominally valued at £2, but it was said that they could not be replaced under £20. In view of previous convictions he was committed for three months' hard labour.

HUNTING IN THE DISTRICT

IN ASKHAM AND BILBROUGH.

Following their usual custom, the York and Ainsty Hunt met on Acomb Green on Friday. Public interest in the event was again widely manifested by the York people, who to the number of five or six thousand made the journey to Acomb, despite a heavy drizzle which prevailed all the morning. The spectators lined the Church Road on the green, and occupied the steep banks which surrounded the green (on which were hounds and a fair sprinkling of the followers of the Hunt), giving the scene the appearance of a vast amphitheatre.

The order was Askham Bogs. Cumpstone had great difficulty in getting his hounds through the crowd of traps and horses when leaving the Green. They went Gale Lane way to draw to give the foot-people time to reach the high ground over-looking the Askham Bogs. The line of traps was fully half-a-mile long, and the crowds were always in evidence.

It began to rain, but this did not damp the keenest from following on. Getting to the Bogs hounds drew the cover from the Chancer Wing and they found, and rattled their fox with a breast-high run over a good cover. Once they got into the open, after ten minutes' cover work, the fox was hallooed away at the Askham end, going over Mr Handley Taylor's farm.

Going over the lane the line was forward. What a grand sight the hilltop people had; though fog hung about they could see all the fun from Gale Lane. The hounds checked by Mr Taylor's farm, crossed the road, and ran pointing for the kennels. The fox got turned about at every point. Cumpstone cast to the left, and went over the Acomb road, to lose the line on Mr Arthur Thomlinson's farm.

Mr Preston went on to Mr Wall's-Fairbairn's preserves. They had a long draw in Askham Whin, and it looked very much like a blank day. Reynard, however, had gone, and some said it was a dog, while others said it was a hare. Hounds told a different tale—it was a fox, without a brush, and a very lanky fox he looked. Getting over Mr C. Wilson's ploughed field, hounds could not drive along, and kept checking. Cumpstone made a run of it by going forward and keeping near to Mr Fox's, making £22, £21 10s., £20 12s. 6d., £19 12s. 6d., £19 10s.; Messrs Ireshboard Bros., of Ribston, sold four bullocks at £23 5s., £22 5s., £16 12s. 6d., and £15 15s.; four good bullocks from the Auctioneers made £26 10s., £25 10s., £23, and £23 15s.; Mr S. Elvidge, of Headley, had two good bullocks, making £25 10s. and £24. Mr J. W. Atkinson, of Walshford, had two pens of sheep, making up to 68s. each; a pen of choice sheep from Mr H. Holmes made 70s. each; two pens of choice sheep from Mr C. Jones, of Ingbarrow, to 51s. each; from Mr J. Robinson, of Bilton, to 47s. 6d. each; from Mr Kendall, of Bickerton, to 45s. 6d. each; from Mr J. H. Hoole, of Bickerton Grange, to 55s. each; from Mr Feerby, of Stockeld, to 44s. each; prime Cheviots from Mr H. Elvidge, of Walton, made to 43s. each; from Mr S. Elvidge to 35s. 6d.; from Mr B. Greaves to 36s. each. Store pigs made to 38s. each; etc.

ARCHBISHOP TO PREACH IN A PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH.

Some comment, says the "Scottish Chronicle" (the organ of the Episcopal Church in Scotland), has been provoked by the announcement that the Archbishop of York is to preach in the Presbyterian Church of St. Giles, Edinburgh on the 18th of January. It has been recognised for some years that the University Chapels are common ground; but the Church of St. Giles is not a University Chapel, and the fact that the Archbishop of York is to address a gathering of students does not, in the opinion of many churchpeople, alter the situation one little bit. This sort of policy may be right or wrong; it may be a good thing for our clergy to come out in Presbyterian pulpits. We express no opinion on this question meantime, but what we do hold most strongly is, that if such a principle is to be admitted, then it should be admitted by the voice of the whole Church, and not on the initiative of individual diocesans.

THE WEEK'S MARKETS.

CORN.

SELBY, Monday.—Rather quiet, the following prices being quoted:—Wheat 31s. to 33s., black oats 18s. 6d. to 20s. 6d., white 18s. 6d. to 20s. 6d., barley 29s. to 30s., feeding barley 24s. to 25s., and rye 24s. per qr.

LEEDS, Tuesday.—There has been so little business during the past week that the position is unchanged. Shipments are moderate, but not excessive. Speculations are few and millers operate with caution for immediate requirements only. Both foreign and British meals remain to late rates. Malting barley unchanged. Maize firm. Beans steady. Oats quiet.

PROVISIONS.

SELBY, Monday.—Eggs—Per 120, fresh 2s. 3d. and 2s. 4d. per lb.; chickens 5s. to 10s.; rabbits 2s. 6d. per couple.

POTATOES

SELBY, Monday.—Little doing, prices remaining about the same. Sand Up-to-Dates 45s. to 47s. 6d., sand King Edwards 50s. to 52s. 6d., warp King Edwards 60s. to 65s. per ton; retail 2s. 6d. per hamper.

CATTLE

LEEDS, Tuesday.—A small supply of cattle and sheep, which met a dull but firm demand, but no change in prices. Quotations:—Beef 53d. to 57d., sheep 6d. to 10½d., calves 9d. per lb. Pigs in good demand at 8s. 9d. per stone. At market:—Beasts 310, sheep 19,057, calves eight, pigs four.

WHITKIRK AUCTION MART, Monday.—Messrs Bartle and Son had a light entry of stock at their fortnightly sale. Newly-calved cows met a dragging market, except for the very best, and these made £22 to £24 10s.; medium and secondary kinds, £18 2s. 6d. to £21; February calvers, to £21. The trade for in cattle ruled similar to last sale, the best bullocks and heifers making 73d., secondary kinds 70., and cows to 69d. per lb. Bullocks, to £21 12s. 6d.; heifers, to £20 10s.; cows, to £21 12s. 6d. Choice shortlegs and hoggets made 10d. to 11d., and ewes 8d. to 9d. per lb. Owing to swine fever restrictions very few pigs were penned, and prices ruled:—Bacon pigs, to £7 17s. 6d. Breeding calves made to 27s., and veal calves to £3 each. Numbers sold—54 newly calved and calving cows, 50 fat beasts, 104 sheep, 30 pigs, and 5 calves.

SELBY, Monday.—At this auctions mart to-day Messrs Richardson and Son disposed of 25 beasts, 4 sheep, and 23 pigs. There was a good attendance of buyers, but owing to the wintry weather a very short supply of stock, not nearly sufficient for local requirements. A sharp trade for best at 9s. per stone; small pork making 9s. and 9s. 6d. a score. Prices:—Fat bullocks made up to £21 12s. 6d., fat heifers £17 2s. 6d., small store beasts £10 12s. 6d., including cows £21 2s. 6d., fat ewes £2 14s. 6d., pork pigs £3 5s., small store pigs £1 17s. 6d. each.

WETHERBY, Monday.—At this auction mart to-day Messrs Thomlinson and Son had a splendid show of well-finished beef, but a smaller show of sheep than usual, the stormy weather no doubt preventing many lots coming to the sale. The attendance of buyers and dealers was about an average one. Competition was spirited for all the best class of stock, which realised about 6d. per stone more money, making from 56s. 6d. to 57s. per stone. Medium sorts from 8s. to 8s. 6d. per stone. Sheep met a good demand from 10d. to 11d. per lb., ewes about 8d. per lb. Numbers sold:—69 beasts, 101 sheep and lambs. A grand weight pen of cattle from the Exors. of Jno. J. Thomlinson, Tockwith, topped the sale, making £31 2s. 6d., and another grand bullock from the same feeders sold for £22 15s.; Mrs Otter, of Hunsingore, had two bullocks of choice and well-finished bullocks, realising £28 7s. 6d., £27 7s. 6d., £26 10s., and £24 10s.; Mr J. H. Hoole, of Bickerton Grange, had a pen of grand quality bullocks, making £24 12s. 6d., £24 7s. 6d., £22 7s. 6d., £21 15s., £21 7s. 6d., £19 7s. 6d., £18 17s. 6d., and £17; ten grand fed bullocks from Mr J. H. Atkinson, of Highfield, made £24 10s., £24 2s. 6d., £22 15s., £22 12s. 6d., £22 5s., £21 12s., £21 7s. 6d., £21, and £21; Mr W. Atkinson, of Kirk Deighton, had two useful bullocks, realising £27 7s. 6d. and £21 12s. 6d.; two useful bullocks from Mr D. Robinson, of Bilton, sold for £23 17s. 6d. and £23 12s.; nine bullocks from Mr T. Dawson, of Walshford, made £25 10s. and £21 17s. 6d., £21 5s., £21, £20 15s., £19 5s., £18 17s. 6d., and £18 10s.; Mr R. Dearlove, of Walton Lodge, had three bullocks, realising £25 12s. 6d., £21 7s. 6d., and £21 5s.; Mr J. T. Dearlove, of Walton, had two bullocks, which made £19 17s. 6d. and £19 12s. 6d.; Mr A. Goodworth, Linton, had two bullocks sold for £21 and £20 17s. 6d.; Mr J. W. Watson, of Wighill Manor, had two bullocks and two heifers, making £24 2s. 6d., £23 5s., £20 12s. 6d., and £20 5s.; two useful bullocks from Mr Wall Tomlinson, of Wighill, made £28 2s. 6d. and £23 17s. 6d.; Mr Lumley, of Bilton, sold a very choice bullock at £26 15s.; Mr Hy. Watson, of Newton Kyme, had two bullocks, making £22, £21 10s., £20 12s. 6d., £19 12s. 6d., £19 10s.; Messrs Ireshboard Bros., of Ribston, sold four bullocks at £23 5s., £22 5s., £16 12s. 6d., and £15 15s.; four good bullocks from the Auctioneers made £26 10s., £25 10s., £23, and £23 15s.; Mr S. Elvidge, of Headley, had two good bullocks, making £25 10s. and £24. Mr J. W. Atkinson, of Walshford, had two pens of sheep, making up to 68s. each; a pen of choice sheep from Mr H. THE LADIES' COLUMN

HINTS FOR THE HOME.

A lump of sugar placed in the bowl of a paraffin lamp will prevent the lamp from smoking.

To stiffen muslin dresses, dissolve a tablespoonful of gum arabic in three quarts of water. Use instead of starch; dry, sprinkle, and iron in the usual way.

When washing glass or earthenware, place the articles in warm, salted water. They will clean more quickly.

When boiling clothes, place an unpeeled lemon, cut into slices, in the copper with the clothes to boil. This will remove all stains, and make the clothes beautifully white.

When making an apple tart bruise the pips and add to the tart. This will greatly improve the flavour.

When making baked custard, pour boiling milk on to the beaten eggs. It will then bake beautifully firm.

When making a pie the juice from the fruit very often soaks through the undercrust, and spoils the appearance of it. This can be prevented by brushing the crust over with the white of an egg.

To remove the smell of cooking, take a basin of boiling water and pour into it about five drops of oil of lavender. In a few minutes all smell of cooking will have disappeared.

The bread-pan should be washed out weekly, dried, and thoroughly aired by keeping the lid in a fully open state. Thus the bread will never get a musty, mustv taste. To keep it from becoming too dry, place a well-washed potato in the pan. Moisture is given off by the potato.

To clean gilt mirror frames, mix powdered whiting to smooth paste with methylated spirit. Allow the spirit to evaporate, and brush off the powder before it becomes hard. Polish with a leather.

A glass water-bottle, when discoloured by hard water, can be easily cleaned and made to look bright by putting a little vinegar and a pinch of salt into the bottle, letting it stand for about two hours, then rinsing out with clean water.

After polishing the brass in the usual way, rub it over with a soft cloth dipped in vaseline, and then polish it with a dry duster. In this way brass will not tarnish quickly, no matter how bad the weather may be, and the extra trouble is small.

If, in spite of care, a bed sore is formed through the cracking of the skin, the spirit or lemon applications must be stopped at once. The sores should be kept covered with linen on which is spread either lead, zinc, or tannic acid ointment. If through much movement, the linen is likely to crease and roll up, the best plan is to bathe the sores frequently with lead lotion. The attention of a doctor should always be called to the redness which precedes bed sores.

The following mixture is excellent for polishing:—Linseed oil, 1 tablespoonful; methylated spirit and oxalic acid, 1 teaspoonful each. The oxalic should be thoroughly dissolve, and then apply with a soft flannel. The polish will remain on the linoleum even after is has been washed.

WINDOW SASH CORDS.

The life of a window-sash cord can be doubled by a periodical application of tallow or, lard. The window should be thrown up, and the sash cord greased with any old-fashioned tallow-dip slightly heated; the window then shut, and the same process applied to the rest of the cord. If tallow candles are not to be had pure lard should be rubbed sparingly on. Do not accustom any fat with salt in it, as the salt would rot the cord quicker than the damp.

LIGHTING THE COPPER FIRE.

Place a little paper in front of the stove, cross with a few sticks. Set alight. Add some more sticks and some small lumps of coal lightly with the hand. When the coal has caught take the kitchen rake and push all gently to the back. The fire will now be clear and bright and the dangerous practice of throwing on oil will be avoided. Inexperienced people nearly always find the copper fire difficult to light because they first block the back of the stove with fuel. The flue being small, this prevents a draught through, and fills the place with smoke.

CLEANING WATER BOTTLES.

Pour in a little vinegar, add two tablespoonfuls of salt, shake well, and rinse with clean water. The same remedy applies to a clogged pipe in a lavatory basin as to a sink pipe. In this case, instead of the grease, the congealed soap does the mischief. The hot water will soon speak for itself by refusing to let the water run quickly away, telling you it requires boiling water and soda to cleanse it. If neglected, possibly a plumber will be needed to put it right. When the water is very hard which is used in toilet jugs a sediment settles at the bottom, and in time becomes quite black. Soda and water is no use for this, it will require spirits of salts. Mix a little with water, tie a cloth on to a stick, and stir well round until all the marks disappear, being careful not to touch the cloth with your hands.

CASTOR OIL.

Castor oil is one of the safest and most efficacious medicines that can be given for colic. To prevent griping and to allay the pain of the colic, the chemist should add a few drops of laudinum, according to the age of the patient; but the laudanum must on no account be given to infants. A simple method of taking castor oil is to half fill a wineglass with cold water and to flood the dose of one or two tablespoonfuls of castor oil on the surface. Then, if a table-spoonful of brandy is gently added, the dose will remain surrounded by brandy and water, so that not only can it be swallowed easily, but the flavour will be disguised. For children the best plan of giving castor oil is to beat the dose in a teacup, just like whipping an egg, and to pour over it half a teacupful of hot milk.

VALUE OF BARLEY.

Barley is one of the most nutritious of our cereals, but it is not employed as extensively in cookery as it might be. The great point about barley served whole in soups, stews, or as gruel, is that it should be well boiled with sufficient water to allow it to swell considerably. A nursery dish which is much appreciated is made by adding sugar, stoned raisins, and milk or cream to well-boiled barley, flavouring it with grated nutmeg, if liked.

A GLOVE CLEANER.

To clean chamois leather gloves, make a good lather of warm water and soap-flakes; or soap shredded into water and boiled till dissolved, then allowed to get cold, when it forms a jelly. Wash them well in this, squeeze out, and rinse in warm water and with every trace of soapy lather removed. Press between the hands to get rid of as much water as possible. Shake well and pull them into a good shape, then hang up in a draught to dry, not in the sun or before the fire. Whilst drying pull them out with the fingers to soften them.

SELBY BOARD OF GUARDIANS.

The fortnightly meeting of the Selby Board of Guardians was held on Monday at the Selby Union, Mr R. L. Walker presiding.

The Clerk reported that he had received from the Local Government Board a communication sanctioning the Board giving the Carlton and Barlby District Nursing Association and Selby Nursing Association a subscription of £2 2s. each.

A scheme relating to the way-ticket system on the terms and conditions recommended by the Executive Committee of the York-shire Poor Law Conference, was submitted by the Clerk, and it was decided to refer the matter to the House Committee, to report upon it at a future meeting of the Guardians.

The Clerk reported that he had received from the Government officer a copy of the provisional valuation of the children's cottage home, Selby Street, Selby, belonging to the Union. The original gross value was put down at £500 and the original assessable site value at £160.

The Chairman remarked that the Board could take no exception to the valuation, whereupon it was approved.

Durham Miners' Association have accepted a tender amounting to £31,375 for the erection of a new miners' hall at Red Hills, on the city boundary.

Rothwell Wesleyan Circuit.

QUARTERLY MEETING.

A large number of officials and others of the Rothwell Circuit assembled at Normanton on Friday, where they were hospitably entertained to dinner by the Normanton friends. Every effort had been made to make the visit thoroughly enjoyable, and the appreciation of the ministers and gentlemen present was cordially voiced by Messrs. Walter Hargreaves, C.C., W. McAdam, and A. W. Stones.

The interval between dinner and the meeting was pleasantly occupied in social intercourse, and the quarterly meeting was opened with other three o'clock with worship and prayer. The Rev. N. W. Thorntharpe presided, and there were present—Rev. M. Phillipson, B.A., Mr. W. Hargreaves, and Mr. M. Nixon (stewards), and some of the other members (including the Local Preachers). Congratulations were offered to three members of the meeting, whose birthdays occurred on the 29th inst.—to Mr. Hargreaves, who was 70 years of age; to Mr. Nixon, who was 60; and to Mr. Phillipson, who was 50. Congratulations were offered to three members of the meeting, whose birthdays occurred on the 29th inst.—to Mr. Hargreaves, who was 70 years of age; to Mr. Nixon, who was 60; and to Mr. Phillipson, who was 50.

The financial condition of the circuit is very satisfactory, the ordinary income, more than covering the ordinary expenditure, while the special collections incurred in the erection of A.'s in the Rothwell house will be cleared in the next meeting.

The balance-sheet in connection with the "coming of age" celebrations surprised everybody by showing £21 to the good, for the benefit of the circuit funds. It was also reported that the first collector of the "Shilling-a-month" was practically sold out, and that the booklet had been much appreciated. A resolution was passed warmly thanking Mr Stephenson for his splendid work in organising the celebrations, to Mr Marshall for preparing the "Souvenir," and to all the friends who had entertained the visiting ministers.

The Chairman gave the membership statistics, which are slightly less than last quarter. The Special Committee recommend evangelistic services in three or four of the churches.

Hearty thanks were passed to Mr Hargreaves and Mr Nixon for their services as stewards. The latter gentleman having declined another year's office, Mr M Bellby was appointed with Mr Hargreaves.

Votes of appreciation were carried in connection with the quarterly meeting secretary (Mr Marshall), and the Circuit choir secretary (Mr A. W. Stones), and this were re-appointed.

The matters of Foreign Missionary accounts (Messrs. Nixon and Ward, and of the circuit accounts (Messrs. J. Kidd and A. W. Stones) were audited and passed.

The present delegates to the Leeds Methodist Council and the Ecclesall Council were also re-elected re-elected.

Rev. M. Phillipson reported that the circuit's contribution to the Missionary Centenary Fund would be over £50.

The continuous financial assistance of the various Ladies' sewing meetings, and the self-denying labours of the local preachers were warmly acknowledged by several gentlemen.

Mr Stephenson, who is a member of the Homes Committee, and secretary of the Hemsford Committee, for the forthcoming Conference in Leeds next July, gave interesting information on Conference arrangements. There will be twelve Conference missionaries staying at "Thornes" in the circuit.

Several matters in connection with the Circuit Sunday School Council were discussed. The next meeting will be held at Carlton, by invitation, on Wednesday, March 11th, 1914.

A SENSATIONAL WHITWOOD CASE.

At Castleford on Thursday William Dobson (47), of Waterloo Row, Whitwood, was charged with a criminal offence against Agnes Speight, a girl under 16 years of age.

Mr. T. A. Davison, prosecuting, said the prisoner, up to Saturday last, was superintendent of the Whitwood Wesleyan Sunday School and Society Steward. He was a widower, and through his position at the Sunday school, when this girl was left an orphan, he undertook to look after her. This husband done for some years.

Twelve months ago the girl left Whitwood, and was now residing at Lockwood, Huddersfield. The prisoner had induced her to visit him on many occasions, and the unfortunate girl was now in a certain condition. He asked for a reward, as beyond evidence of arrest he did not propose to call further evidence then.

Police Constable Murray said he arrested the prisoner on Wednesday at his house, and, after being cautioned, the prisoner said, "Yes, I've been expecting this."

Mr R. C. Williamson, for the prisoner, asked for bail, saying up to now the accused had borne an irreproachable character. He had been employed by one firm for over twenty years.

Mr Davison said that having regard to the peculiar circumstances of the case, he must object. He was instructed that after the arrest of the prisoner became known in Whitwood the whole village was in an uproar, crowds of women parading the place threatening to duck the accused.

Replying to the Magistrate (Mr Crowther), the constable said a large crowd of women behaved very threateningly towards the prisoner when he was removing him.

Eventually bail was granted, the prisoner in £25, and a surety of £25 for his appearance in court next Wednesday.

CHRISTMAS AT TADCASTER.

At Tadcaster there was service at the various churches on Christmas Day. On Friday the meet of the Bramham Moor Hounds was held in the Market Place and drew a large crowd of people, but hounds had not much sport, scent being bad.

On Christmas Day the inmates of the workhouse had their usual extra fare. The entertainment and treat will take place later.

A social in connection with the St. Joseph's Roman Catholic Church took place in the Parish Room on Friday night. The social was attended by about 140 persons, and dancing was engaged in. Mr J. Yeadon was the M.C., and the Quidcille Band supplied the music.

HOW TO TAKE CARE OF RINGS.

"Don't wear your rings under gloves unless you remember to have them thoroughly examined twice a year," is the advice given by a jeweller. The constant friction wears out the tiny gold pins that hold the stones in place, and unless strict attention is paid to them they become loose in a very short time.

Small purses of soft leather are useful for the purpose for rings, or any soft pouch of skin or chamois may be used to place the rings in when desiring to carry them about with one. They should never be put into the ordinary pocket-book, as the rubbing against coins is also bad for them. Diamonds can be cleaned at home to look as well as when done by a jeweller, if only a little trouble is taken. They should be thoroughly cleaned in alcohol, and then polished with buckskin. Fine sawdust is not silly for this purpose.

SKILLED WORK IN THE COUNTRY.

CONCERNING THE HEDGER.

I record him in advance for a few minutes; and really interesting work has won to watch, though possibly ordinary people who see hedgers at their work seldom give much thought to the skilled nature of their occupation.

Here is a man, for instance, hedging gawsticks, shedding his hands from cankers, shedding spikes and thorns. He was working a hedgerow with consummate skill, slashing off boughs here and there from the tall, ragged hedgerow; then, bending down wards he gave a deft cut now and again, until some stout leaders were released to hedging upon more thereof. As it were, made a gap in the span for the spring cut to succeed, that he leaned forward, twisting them in and out in basket cut, an upright growing stem which he had left by merely lopping off their tops. Between these his great hands, seeming the various growths, interlaced and entered them in a partly weaving manner, till at last a sort of wicker-work barrier of living boughs stood in the place of the old straggling and unruly hedge. It was really skilled labour, yet labour with which machinery has, as yet, declined to interfere—and a man's work that no layman might try to imitate, for with the certain result of fading miserably. Up and down, in and out, went the bright willow and the leafless gawsticks, keeping a curving, pleasing twining. Every now and again he would pause and step backwards to look critically at his work and judge have the still growing material by the eye. Then to the power he had thus won to be utilised for the next spell, just as an artist steps backwards to take stock of his growing picture.

"You know your work, Bob," I observed.

"Should do anyway—been brought up to it—and father and grandfather afore 'im—me grandad lived to over 90, he did. Ye'll find, with the art of a hedger in heredity."

"It's clever work, after all, this hedging, I guess," I said. "I've often admired it."

"Couldn't do it anyhow, if you paid me more'n wages."

"No, sir, the likes of you be clever enow with their 'eds, perhaps, but they 'eads wants practice to this sort of work. Now, I hear it's a challenge, though I make shift to read and write a bit, but I can do a bit o' hedging, and I can drive a straight furrow when it's wanted, too."

"You couldn't do that, master?"

"Oh, no, that's quite beyond me; I couldn't do it any more than I could fly."

Bob paused, took off his sweet cloth cap to wipe the sweat from his forehead, though there was a nasty clinging November drizzle falling, and said, looking straight at me with a serious twinkle at the corners of his mouth, "Now, I'm more could throw silver beggars in Brummagem—skilled artizans they calls 'em—slaves to the machines, I says."

He was a comely specimen of the labourer class; a man or perhaps this other or forty, dark-haired, rather grim-looking, with a sullen skin and a short-trimmed fringe of whisker running from ear to beard, and here and there inclining to iron grey. His legs were fortified with stout leggings, and his boots were massive, patched, and caked with mud. There was plenty of generous life in the fellow, and a evening relish of his labours.

"I begin to understand me how you work, Bob. You leave those upright pieces to grow, and then—"

"Yes, sir; but first of all I lops out of the hedge all I doesn't want, this way, and leaves in the useful; them's the sticks as I leaves, and they make the foundation like, to work round."

"I see that. And then?"

"Well, sir, —— bends down one of these here pleachers" (taking hold of a tall sapling and forcing it downwards, giving the usual rick on the one side, and turning it in an oblique direction through the upright stakes)

"Then, you see, sir, I finishes off the top, like with the beathering," and as he spoke fashioned a rude sort of rim to his great basket by twining a long, slim briar straight along the top.

"Oh, you call that 'beathering,'" I said, 'quite a new word to me."

"Dare say, sir. Well, some 'edgers in some parts trains the pleachers up as well as me, sir, and makes a regular network—what they calls 'cross-wubbling'—'cos it's the way in our parts. Squire Brooks had an idee for this extra superfine 'edging, and he brought a South country chap down to did it for him proper—you can see it on the side of the deer park."

"But you could do the same?"

"Well, you see, it takes a lot o' time, and this sort o' work is good enow. You see, I keeps the outside as plain as I can, and turns the rough inwards, towards the fields, to keep in the cattle."

"Pay good?"

"We works by the job mostly, so much a perch and I can earn about two bob a day."

"Do you get the sweet pea cut off?"

"Well, sir, the custom about here is 'hurdens'—and has been for 'undreds and 'undreds of years, as my father said."

"Burdens and hurdens?"

"Yes, every 'edger has the right to carry his day's cuttings home on his back, no more nor no'mpled, as much as he can carry, one faggot a day, and that's his perquisite, and is to pay for the racket and wear and tear from the thorns, you see."

"Oh," I said, "then you get plenty of firewood; some of the town-folk would like to have the chance, for they have to buy the sticks for lighting their fires."

"Ah, sir, I couldn't abide a town, nohow. I've my garden in the 'bitment, and I 'as my bed, and my food, and there ain't no easy smoke about, and what does I want more?"

"Not a married man, I think, Bob?"

"No, I ain't got no missus—don't want none. There was a gell once, though——"

Here Bob paused, looked straight past me, and said no more. I could see that I was on the verge of a sorrow. What, I wondered, did his wistful eyes see, beyond the misty drizzle that was seemingly made for me to look into the dense mists of the past years? Was it a loss by death, or had some fickle country wench broken Bob's heart? As I did not care to ask him, for his presence forbade me.

"You've lodged with Tomkins and his wife for years," I said.

"Yes, and bin werry comfortable. Don't want no missus; them as 'ems often 'as trouble and kids. A man is best off by hisself if he can arn his way—here's Tomkin's gell a'coming with my dinner."

N.E.R. CO.'S NEW CARRIAGES.

Following upon the suggestion of Major Pringle, the Board of Trade Inspector, as a result of the Hawes Junction and Aisgill disasters, the North Eastern Railway Co. are about to introduce in their trains a feature hitherto unknown in England. The company propose to build steel kitchen cars—cars which will be entirely, and not partially, of steel.

In addition to this, all the new passenger coaches are being fitted with electric light. Gradually, therefore, gas will entirely disappear as a luminant. It will be impossible to entirely dispense with gas for cooking purposes, but it is understood that the gas will be protected from the rest of the train by effective precautions, which have never been employed before.

Miner Charged with Perjury.

At Castleford on Wednesday Robert Taylor, miner, was committed by Robert Ager, also a miner, for committing perjury in Castleford Court on December 10th, when Ager was convicted on a charge of assaulting Taylor, and fined 20s. 6d.

Mr T. A. Davison, for Ager, said that in the case Taylor stated that on November 29th he was in a certain place when Ager struck him without provocation, and knocked him senseless. The defendant denied that he struck Taylor, and Ager makes as the result of a game of cards for Taylor, giving evidence, said he had never played a game of cards with Ager, and, in fact, did not know how to play cards. That statement constituted the first charge of perjury.

R. L. Cuffe, clerk to the magistrates, for Mr Leatham, clerk to the magistrates, gave evidence that he was in court on the 10th Dec. and heard the evidence given.

Ager gave evidence, and deposited that he had heard Taylor state that he had never played him at cards or anything else, and did not know how to play. That was not true, as ten or eleven weeks ago he played Taylor a game of "all fours" for 2s. a-side.

On a second occasion Taylor asked him to play for 2s., but he declined as he was out of work. The first game he played was a pint of beer, and Ager said, but was paid in another money nor kind.

He asked Taylor for the stakes in the club on November 29th, and Taylor replied "You won't——well get it. I once were then all turned out of the club, a fight ensuing on Taylor's provocation" replied.

Cross-examined by Mr Kemp, Ager said he had played cards for 2s. a-side, and he never got his money back. He admitted that the Bench had cautioned him for an assault on Taylor. Three weeks previously.

Mr Kemp submitted that the statement as to any previous games of cards taking place was not material to the case, and a legal argument ensued between the two advocates.

The Bench ruled that the case must proceed.

Accused was committed for trial to the Assizes, bail being allowed in his own recognisances of £20.

WETHERBY EDUCATION DISTRICT.

The school attendance returns for Wetherby district for last month showed an aggregate percentage of 91.4, as compared with 89.8 in November, and 73.18 in December of 1912.

The figures for the various schools were:—Wighill no per cent., Linton 96, Little Ribston 94.89, Clifford Roman Catholic 93.45, Wike 92.30, Long Marston 92.10, Thorner Church 91.80, Thorparch 91.52, East Keswick 91.22, Bilton 90.88, Kirk Deighton 88.75, Harewood 88.36, Scholing Hall 87.74, Bardsey 85.89, Boston Spa 85.03, Spofforth 83.80, Collingham 83.33, Clifford Council 82.50, Wetherby Council 80.58, Tockwith Weslevan 80.55, Bramham 79.78, Tockwith Church 75.68, Thorner Council 72.04, and Wetherby Church 70.68.

MONK FRYSTON.—On Wednesday at the Philosophical Hall, Leeds, Mr H. Crowther (the museum curator) gave the second of a series of lectures on "Wild Nature in Leeds Lanes." With the lingering tenderness of a true nature lover, he dwelt on the nature facts that may be discovered in an observant stroll across the public footpaths on the outskirts of the city, and with the enthusiasm of the student he explained their true significance. The picture of the Adel neighbourhood was particularly interesting, and one learnt for the first time that the celebrated Adel Crag, beloved of picnic parties, should really be called Alwoodley Crag, since it is in Alwoodley parish.

NURSING ASSOCIATION CHRISTMAS PARTY.—The annual Christmas gathering held in connection with the Monk Fryston and District Nursing Association is now looked upon as one of the most attractive functions of the year at Monk Fryston. On Friday night a very large gathering, comprising upwards of 350 people, assembled to show their appreciation of the deserving object. This year the event was much talked about, and for several weeks 48 children had been trained to give exhibitions of old-time Morris and country dances, and the people were anxious to see how the young folks would acquit themselves. The instructress was Miss Daisy Harvey, of York, and she did her work very creditably. At the commencement carols were sung by members of the Monk Fryston Choral Society, and songs were creditably rendered by Miss Jessie Hill and Mr T. Kirkman. Subsequently, at intervals, the children performed the dances in a very pleasing manner, and their efforts were appreciated by the audience. Much very valuable assistance was rendered by Mr Victor Bailiff, of Burton Salmon, a promising young humorist, who created a most favourable impression as an entertainer. Miss Daisy Harvey danced a Morris jig. The names of the children taking part were:—Misses C. Athorn, H. Tomlinson, O. Heptonstall, C. Pettinger, R. Ward, A. Longbottom, D. Pettinger, R. Kirkman, Y. Heptenstall, E. Longbottom, L. Lupton, D. Archer, B. Shepherd, A. Baker, C. Lafford, M. Coldwell, L. Waterson, D. Newby, E. Kirkman, B. Lewis, and D. Wilson; Masters R. Stockdale, R. Holey, G. Longbottom, H. Collins, R. Watson, Eric Longbottom, J. Ward, E.I. Longbottom, S. Shepherd, C. Pettinger, R. Goodenough. W. Coldwell, E. Timm, J. Briggs, G. Kirkman, C. Carless, H. Tomlinson, W. Stephenson, J. Chadwick, and F. Stephenson. The decorations and the dresses of the children were charming, having been artistically arranged by Mrs. Hemsworth. During the evening Father Christmas, in the person of Mr George Wardess, appeared on the scene. His appearance caused much amusement, and he played the part well. Supper was afterwards served in the Alpine Hall, and a large number partook of the Christmas fare. Some of the refreshments were given by the villagers, and many thanks are due to them for their kindness and generosity. The following ladies looked after the wants of the people:—Mesdames Morris, Balliff, Hill, Lister, Fidler, Heptonstall, Baugh, Schofield, Hester, Cocker-lem, Lewis, Harrison, Nelson, Deeble, and Misses Holdridge, Thorpe, and Lewis. Subsequently dancing was engaged in from 9—11.30 until 2.30 a.m. Mr Lightowler's band (Brotherton) supplied the music, and the M.C.'s were Messrs T. Kirkman and J. T. Atkinson. On Saturday evening there was a special gathering for the children, and upwards of 180 were present. Tea was served in the Alpine Hall, and subsequently part of the previous night's programme was gone through. The children gave exhibitions of dancing in good style. The proceedings were a great success and the takings were in excess of those of previous years. The arrangements were admirably carried out, reflecting great credit both on the workers and the hon. secretary, Mrs Hemsworth.

SUPERSTITIONS ABOUT WITCHES.

Though some people still believe in witches, there is no longer any use for the witchfinder in this country. In former generations we gave this person abundant employment, sometimes fetching the real expert enormous distances to exhume an afflicted town. In 1556, for instance, the magistrates of Newcastle sent into Scotland for one who could find witches, agreeing to pay 20s. a head for all that he convicted. His particular method consisted in pricking the suspects with pins, and fifteen old women were duly executed as the result of his visit.

There are countries in which the execution of women as witches is only a thing of yesterday. The last instance of witch burning occurred as recently as 1888 in Peru, and in other parts of South America cases continued to occur until well into the second half of the nineteenth century. England's own last conviction for witchcraft took place at Hertford in 1712, and Scotland condemned a witch ten years later, while Spain and Germany refrained a judicial belief in witches and the justice of killing them until 1782 and 1786.

In many parts of the modern world the believer in witchcraft still gets hold of hair, nail parings, and so forth from an enemy's head and hands, and burns, buries, or does something cow with them in order to exhibit unpleasant consequences upon that enemy. And universal folklore reveals the concern of savages to dispose of their own hair and nail clippings to prevent an enemy from getting at them. Australian native girls who have had a lock of hair stolen from them expect speedy death as a certainty.

A LADY'S ROMANCE.

A boy and girl romance, the consummation of which was delayed ten years through a proposal being lost in the post, but which now promises to end happily, is reported, following the arrival here from Europe or Mrs Frances Thompson, a Scottish widow.

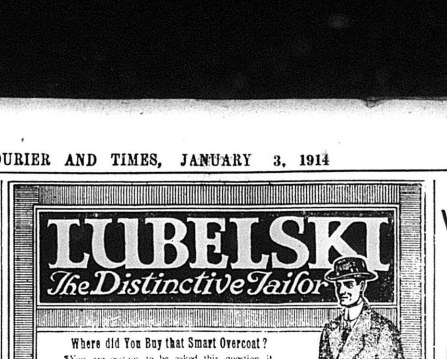
It was the up-to-date wireless telegraphy that repaired the error of the old-fashioned mail system, for during her passage across the Atlantic Mrs Thompson received a Marconigram which proved to be a proposal of marriage from an old suitor, Mr F. MacIntyre, who is now living on Superior, Wisconsin.

Mrs Thompson and Mr MacIntyre were boy and girl lovers in Scotland, both being residents of Leith, and the latter went to America to make his fortune. Ten years ago he wrote proposing marriage, but the letter was evidently lost in the post, for Mrs Thompson did not receive it.

Not hearing from her girlhood's companion, she married, but lost her husband a year or so ago. This Christmas she decided to go to America in order to visit friends and relations, and, her old suitor being informed of this, lost no time in repeating his proposal of marriage.

Mrs Thompson blushingly admitted that she would accept the proposal, as she had not forgotten the old days in Scotland.

A QUAINT OLD ENGLISH CUSTOM.



Though many forms of wedding ring ceremony have been in use in various counties most marriage was made a solemn ceremony, perhaps there is none so curious as the Gemmel Ring. This was in use in the south country in early times, and the day for the engagement and wedding ring. The curious part about it was the fact that it was made in three parts, hinged together. On a man and a woman being betrothed, the three parts of the ring were separated, one being worn by the man, another by the woman, and the third given into the keeping of a mutual friend who acted as a sort of guardian or umpire to the happy pair. At the wedding itself the three parts of the ring were re-assembled and put together again to form one triple ring for the bride.

DIET.

Our diet is apt to be one-sided, says a writer in the Family Doctor. It often does not contain the different nutritive ingredients in the proper proportions. We consume relatively too much of the fuel ingredients of food—those which are burnt in the body and yield heat and muscular power. Such are the fats of meat and butter, the starch which makes up the larger part of the nutritive material of flour, potatoes, and sugar, of which such enormous quantities are eaten. Conversely, we have relatively too little of the proteine or flesh-forming substances, like the lean of meat and fish, and the gluten of wheat, which make muscle and sinew, and which are the basis of blood, bone, and brain.

TO CLEAN FEATHER BOAS

It is possible to wash your soiled boa with good white soap and water, and the results, you will find, will be perfectly satisfactory if the work is done carefully. In the first place, the boa should be well shaken out before any water is put on it. Next make a lather of hot water and white soap. In this put the boa, lifting it up and down in the water until you feel perfectly satisfied that all dirt is washed out; then wash the boa in a second water, just to make assurance doubly sure. Rinse in clear warm water twice, then shake the boa out and hang up, being very careful that the strands of the boa are not twisted. Dry as quickly as possible, shaking frequently while drying. If the boa happens to be an ostrich boa, while it is drying shake near the stove. The heat will help to curl the feathers. Then the rest of the work can be accomplished with a silver knife, taking each strand of the feathers and drawing it lightly over the blade of the knife. If these directions are implicitly carried out the result will be as good as though the boa had been cleaned at the cleaner's.

ROTHWELL & DISTRICT JOTTINGS.

Rothwell is the "happy hunting ground" of the amateur poet of recording all the movements of village life. Every village has its "bard," and Rothwell is no exception to the rule. If a machine were fixed to the pump which has been the cause of so much trouble to residents, it would have to unfold when the pump is working, for the simple reason that the inhabitants would have no time to talk by the Council.

Monday, January 19th, 1914, will be a red-letter day in the history of Rothwell. On that day the Rothwell Pantomime Company will present their production of "Aladdin" at the Theatre de Luxe, Leeds. In addition to the usual company of pantomime artistes, there will be a number of local amateurs who have been specially trained for the production. Rehearsals have been in progress for some weeks past, and the performance promises to be a very good one. Special matinées will be held on Wednesday and Saturday afternoons, when the Lottie Stone Troupe of Dancers will appear. The Rothwell Pantomime Company is under the able management of Mr. Edward Lauri, who has had a wide experience in the production of pantomimes.

Why should Rothwell always be last to start things? Rothwell is the only township in the district which has not a public library. Why? It was suggested several months ago that the working classes should be invited to subscribe to the establishment of a working men's institute, but nothing came of it. Then it was suggested that the authorities should open a telephone exchange, but this was never started. It is a fact that at Barwick, the men at Scholes were in favour of the telephone, because they considered it would help the masters, whilst the masters were dead against it, because they considered it would help the men. Now, what with make-or-a telephone call office at the Co-operative Stores, has happened at Rothwell? The District Council "passes" it not." Now, mark the sequel. A public meeting was held at Barwick, and by a unanimous vote it was decided to ask the District Council to grant a quarterly bonus to all workmen on the Council's staff, and to increase the wages of workmen who have worked regularly during the previous quarter. Workmen over 21 years of age, 10s. per quarter; workmen under 21 years of age, 5s. per quarter. The first payment will be made in April, next.

LILIAN DELOMOSNE, ward of Sir Herbert Armadale.
CHARITY WRAYE, a typist in Sir John Bedford's office.

CHAPTER XVI.

For perhaps the first time in his life Sir John Bedford sat silently pursing himself for his own stupidity and precipitancy. He had rarely that he ever did anything without a considerable amount of thought and consideration; he believed in looking before you leap, and he seldom entered upon any plan of action without thinking all its eventualities over. Yet in this instance, taken off his guard, he had allowed Herman Groot to walk into Laurence Workman's presence when he, Sir John, ought to have known very well that his flat was the last place on earth where they should meet. He knew from one glance at Laurence's face that he was thunderstruck at Groot's entry; he had half risen from his chair, and was staring at the German as if he could not believe the evidence of his senses. And from him he turned to Sir John, as though to seek some explanation of this meeting. And Sir John, striving to keep an appearance of unconcern, cursed himself for his foolishness more heartily than ever.

If it had been left to Laurence's host to explain anything just then, there might have been an impasse which would have formed a barrier to many things that followed. But there was a cleverer man in the room than Sir John Bedford—a man clever enough to take in the situation in one lightning-swift glance and to save it. In spite of his stolid Saxon countenance, his expression of almost infantile innocence, Herman Groot was sharp as a weasel and cunning as a fox. He had gone through a fine school of training under Francis Armadale. Mere chance had revealed to that astute gentleman that in Groot he possessed a man who could keep a countenance as blank as a dead wall while his ears were as keen as those of a lynx and his eyes as watchful as those of a hungry kestrel hovering over a hill-side. And when he first found that his very promising young assistant, Laurence Workman, was engaged in something which he, Francis Armadale, was farseeing enough to know would be epoch-making, it was Groot whom he suggested to him as a mechanical helper, knowing that Groot could be trusted to see all that went on and to report on it. And so Groot had trained eyes and ears until he was as widewake to all possibilities as a Red Indian.

Groot rose to the situation now. From the very instant of his entry into Sir John Bedford's dining-room he had recognised that no message respecting him had arrived from Francis Armadale. Otherwise, Laurence Workman would not have been there. It was obvious that Sir John Bedford did not expect him; just as obvious that Sir John was sorely put to it to explain his presence. Very well, then, he, Groot, would himself explain it. And to give his quickly-moving brain sufficient time to act he remained quite passive in the place which he had taken up by the door, having first made a polite bow to Laurence, as his employer, and then to Sir John, as his employer's host.

"Why, Groot!" exclaimed Laurence. "Whatever brings you here?"

Groot wore his air of extreme innocence. "I came to see Sir John Bedford, sir," he answered.

"I'm Sir John Bedford," said the predominant partner in Armadale's, who began to see that the man was deeper than he looked. "Take a seat."

Groot took a chair near the door, and turned the slouched hat round in his hands as he studied the ceiling.

"But why didn't you come straight to me—I telegraphed the address!" asked Laurence.

"Because I lost the address, Mr. Workman. I drew some papers out of my pocket on the boat and a sudden gust blew them away—it among them," replied Groot. "And so when I arrived in London—only an hour ago—I did not know how to find you. But I knew that Sir John Bedford lived somewhere in town—I have seen you at the works in Berlin, sir, often—so I procured a directory and sought Sir John's name."

"Very wise thing to do," said Sir John, who admired Groot for the ready way in which he put together this—to him—apparently palpable lie. "Here, help yourself to a glass of wine, You'll feel tired after your journey."

Groot accepted this offer of hospitality with a bow, which he repeated as he glanced over the rim of his glass in the direction of his entertainer.

"This fellow wants to see me privately," he thought. "He's got something to tell me, I'll message from Francis Armadale, no doubt." Then he said aloud: "Have you made any arrangements for your assistant, Workman?"

"Yes," replied Laurence, "I have got rooms for him close to mine. And now that Groot has arrived and found me, I shall ask you to excuse me, Sir John, so that I may take him there. We must be at work early in the morning, Groot."

Groot took another mouthful of wine and nodded. To anyone who did not know him it would have seemed that in his opinion words were things to be used with the strictest economy. He replenished his glass at a further invitation from Sir John, and continued to sip its contents while his big blue eyes stared around the dining-room, at pictures, ornaments, at the glass and flowers and fruit on the table.

"Crafty—deuced crafty!" said Sir John to himself.

A sudden idea struck him. Laurence was plainly longing to get away; it was just as plain that Groot desired some conversation with him—Sir John. And so, as if he had only just remembered his duties as host, he said, with great geniality:

"I say, Workman, I'm your assistant has only just got in he must be hungry. You haven't had supper, have you, Groot?"

Groot thought a glance at Sir John's eye, and responded to it. "No, sir," he replied.

"Then you shall have it here," said Sir John; rang the bell, and gave some orders to the confidential servant, who appeared in person to answer it. Then he turned to Laurence. "When Groot is supping," he said, "I'll show you those drawings and diagrams we were speaking of. Come into my study."

Impatient as Laurence was to get away with Groot and to be alone, he wanted to talk about the work before them, he was too much of an enthusiast about any mechanical matters not to be interested in anything relating to them, and in five minutes he was completely absorbed in a magnificent portfolio of drawings which Sir John laid on a table in his study. Sir John lingered at his elbow for a while, discussing this and that, and then left him with the remark that he would just see if Groot was getting on all right.

"The poor chap must have been hungry," he said, "and he'll no doubt feel shy in a strange land."

"It's very kind of you," murmured Laurence, and went back to the drawing which he was just then absorbed in. He had already half-forgotten Groot's existence.

Sir John found his strange guest eating and drinking of the good fare set before him at a sideboard and steadily as he had munched at his sausage and bread in his Berlin lodgings. He closed the door gently, and went up to the German.

"You have some message for me—from Francis Armadale, eh?" he said.

Groot nodded—his mouth was full. "Yes," he said. "To come here as soon as I got to London, and the future to report to you instead of to him."

"Good—keep your eyes open. But don't come here, and don't ever speak to me alone at the works. Understand?"

Groot gave him one of the nods which were more eloquent than words.

"That's right," said Sir John. "I like men who say little and think much—and who keep their thoughts to themselves, too," he added, in an undertone.

He went across to a small escritoire, and picking up a blank card scribbled a couple of lines on it.

"Take this," he said. "You see—Café Victorine, Soho. You'll easily find it. Meet me outside on Sunday at seven o'clock."

Groot, who had now finished, rose from the table, and wiping his big moustache with his characteristic gesture—that is, by complacently stroking it with the palm of his hand—took the card and examined it carefully. Then he walked over to the open fireplace, and, tearing the card in two, dropped it into the flames.

"What's that for?" asked Sir John.

"It had your writing on it," replied Groot. "I never carry writing. I have the address here"—he tapped his forehead. "I shall be there."

Sir John nodded his admiration of this ability, gave Groot a cigar, and returned to Laurence, who was just completing his inspection of the portfolio.

"Groot is a man of few words, and slow in thought," answered Laurence. "No initiator, you know, but well capable of executing mechanically whatever is given him to do. He has always served me well. And now, if you please, Sir John, I will take him away, for I mean us to be at work early in the morning."

"You're evidently a glutton for work," said Sir John.

"I've wasted so much time," replied Laurence, gravely.

Five minutes later he and his man were gone, and Sir John was left alone. He spent some little time walking up and down his study, apparently deep in thought, then, going into the dining-room, he mixed himself a glass of whisky-and-soda at the sideboard and drank the contents leisurely. That done, he rang for coat and hat.

"I'm going out, Shepheard," he said to the confidential servant, "and perhaps I may be back late, and perhaps not at all. Leave the usual things out, in case I come home."

Mr. Shepheard replied to this behest in his usual respectful manner, and presently saw his master out of the house. This done he came back to the dining-room, and did exactly what Sir John had done a few minutes earlier—mixed himself a very satisfactory-looking drink, and, placing himself with his back to the fire, proceeded to consume it with every appearance of enjoyment. When the glass was half-empty, he put it on the mantelpiece behind him, selected a cigar from a cabinet which stood in the centre. With this fairly alight, and after another calling upon the glass for refreshment, Mr. Shepheard began to clear the dinner-table, fetching a tray from some inner region for that purpose, and going about his subsequent performances with the deliberation characteristic of a man who knows that he is not at all pressed for time. The table cleared, the white linen replaced by a soft, velvet-surfaced cloth, and the latter decorated with china bowls full of fragrant roses, Mr. Shepheard returned to the mantelpiece and once more warmed his back.

"These June nights, Thomas, my boy, are chilly when all is said of summer," he remarked to himself. "A little fire is welcome. So, after the heat and burden of the day, is a quiet drink."

It proof of this statement Mr. Shepheard again repaired to the decanter and the syphon, and with a replenished glass once more reclined against the mantelpiece.

"Nothing very striking to-day, Thomas," he said. "No interesting letters or callers. What about the German chap, though—he's never been here before. Something to do with the other fellow, no doubt. Well, I shall I go round to the club or do an hour or two at one of the halls?"

Undecided as to which of these methods of spending the remainder of the evening would be best Mr. Shepheard, cigar in mouth, and hands beneath the tails of his coat, began to pace round and round the dining-room, appearently in deep thought. And in thus progressing his eye suddenly fell on the blotting-pad which lay on his master's escritoire. The blotting-paper had been freshly put in that morning—two or three words only marred its whiteness.

"That's the best of always seeing that he uses clean blotting-paper," thought the confidential servant. "What's he been writing?" With a dexterity plainly born of long practice Mr. Shepheard whipped the top sheet out of the pad, and, going to the centre table, held it between himself and the strong light of the electric lamp. The words written on the card given by Sir John Bedford to Groot came out clearly—Café Victorine, Soho, 7, Sunday.

"Café Victorine, Soho," soliloquised Mr. Shepheard. "Why, that's an eighteenpenny shop with vinegar thrown in! What's he know about that, Sir John—he up to now? Some underground business, I expect. Café Victorine, 7, Sunday, eh! Right O!"

Mr. Shepheard replaced the blotting-paper in the pad, and, having returned to his glass again, observed that he thought he would stay at home that night and be comfortable. Having thus decided he chose the easiest of the easy-chairs, put his feet upon another, and picking up a newspaper proceeded to read the news of the day.

If anyone had been rude enough to lean over the back of the chair in which Mr. Shepheard reclined at his ease, and had looked over his shoulders to see what he read, they would have observed very quickly that the world-wide fabulum afforded by the highly-respectable journal which he held was not quite suited to his tastes. The leading and special articles were to him arid deserts of print; the "turn-over" was a thing to be avoided; the foreign news was meaningless. He turned instinctively to the racing news; then to the cricket reports; then to turning the paper listlessly over, as if in search of some intellectual tit-bit more to his fancy.

"Dry as dust, this," said Mr. Shepheard, not troubling to stifle a hearty yawn. "Give me——"

What he was about to desire he did not say, for at that moment his eye caught a name in a brief paragraph at the foot of a column, and he hurriedly uttered a sharp exclamation as he jumped to his feet and held the paper nearer to the light. And he read aloud—slowly—these words, evidently of great import to him:

"Jacques Durand named Edward Penrose, who was undergoing a long term of penal servitude, effected his escape yesterday morning from Dartmoor Prison, and has, so far, not been recaptured."

Mr. Shepheard stood staring at this sentence for a full minute. Then, with a curious exclamation, he turned to the mantelpiece, and seizing his glass emptied its contents into the soil of a jardiniere in the window. After that he threw his cigar into the fire, and going to his own room took off his coat and vest, and plunged his head into cold water. Ten minutes later he left the flat, and hurried away into more spacious regions.

Lamps should be filled every day, and the chimneys washed once a week. If you want to have a good light, let every lamp have a new wick once a month, and just before lighting rub the stand of the lamp over with a dry cloth to remove any traces of oil.

THE SUPPOSED UNLUCKY NUMBER.

SHORT STORY.

It must have been quiet for a very long time. The windows were thick with dust, on two long poles at the gate were the boards of the local house-agents, announcing in large capitals that the house was "To be Let." There was also a notice to the same effect on the front room windows. The notice was soiled and ragged.

I am a lonely bachelor, living in lodgings, with few friends or acquaintances. My name is Wilfred Wallace, and I am over thirty-five. The house had a sort of attraction for me. It was prettily built, with a small balcony, on which ivy was climbing luxuriantly. Over the porch was a straggling rose tree. There was a green gate, and a strip of grass in front. The rent would probably be about thirty-eight pounds a year, for this was a cheap neighbourhood of suburbia.

One day I saw a man coming out, he was the house-agents' assistant.

"Pity this nice little house isn't let," I remarked.

"It would have been let long ago, only for the Number 13," he answered gruffly.

Some days afterwards, on my way back, I saw him again, and this time he was smiling, as he opened the door of No. 13. He was conducting two ladies over the house; one was elderly, in a long black mantle, the other was young and fashionable, with high-heeled shoes and a blue serge coat and skirt. I heard the strident voice of the house-agent saying:

"Yes, ladies, you couldn't find a better built house than this anywhere. Only for the humbug-gin' nonsense about 'thirteen,' 'twould have been let months ago."

"I don't like going into a house with this number," said the plaintive voice of the elderly lady. "Do come away, Daisy."

"Oh, let's chance it, Aunt Caroline," said the other voice. "We're generally unlucky, and we can't be much more so than we have been. The house is certainly the best we have seen, and there's a nice strip of grass at the back for the dogs. Let's take it."

The next day the bills were still up, but on the fourth day signs of animation were visible.

Ladders and paint pots made their appearance, the house was evidently in process of being done up for the new tenants, who were probably coming in at half-quarter day. It was early summer, when everything was awakening to new life, and the dust-coated little "13" soon began to look out that greasy, the straggling ivy was clipped, and the Virginian creeper was putting forth fresh shoots. One day a furniture-van stopped at the door, and a green aperon carried in various well-worn chairs and tables. Next morning, as I passed, I noticed the slight figure of the girl in blue serge, standing at the gate with a dog-whip in her hand. Around her frisked three—no—four dogs of different breeds, a black Pomeranian, a Scotch terrier of the Dandie Dinmont variety, a small Blenheim spaniel, and a nondescript evil-looking dog, that showed his teeth and growled at me viciously. He was the owner of a handsome brass collar, the others had only pink or blue bows attached to their necks.

"Be quiet, Tartar!" cried the girl, flourishing her whip, but not touching any of the dogs. "Do be quiet! You needn't mind him," she added, lifting her grey-blue eyes to mine. "He doesn't mean any harm."

"He looks as if he did," for Tartar's lip was lifted, displaying a perfect row of formidable white teeth. "He has a good dash of a bull-dog about him."

"He may have, perhaps," said the girl, whom I had heard called Daisy. "He certainly has a temper, but he has such a good heart, haven't you, Tartar?"

Tartar answered by a wag of his tail, and a meaning look which said "You are right, I have a good heart!"

With a pretty little nod of her head, the new occupant of No. 13 gathered up the leads of her four dogs and went on towards the common. It was the favourite exercising ground for all the dogs of the district. Everyone keeps a dog in suburbia.

I could not imagine why my new friend Daisy had so many dogs, and they seemed valuable ones, too, which was all the more surprising because the house had been taken on account of its cheapness. The puzzle was soon to be solved in an unexpected way.

One Sunday afternoon I was taking a walk on the common, when suddenly I heard a succession of piercing screams. They seemed to come from a group of people who were standing round two dogs, engaged in mortal combat.

One of them I recognised as the redoubtable Tartar, his teeth were firmly fixed in the neck of a white fox terrier, and he was shaking it for all he was worth, giving a vicious snarl of fury now and then.

"Leave go, leave go, Tartar!" screamed the agonised voice of Daisy. "Leave go, this instant!"

But Tartar paid no attention. He went on shaking with brutal tenacity. All his bull-dog instincts asserted themselves.

An inspiration came to me. I had been smoking. I had a box of matches in my pocket. I struck one, and held it to Tartar's tail. He snarled angrily, he yapped, then as the match burns into his skin, he turned fiercely round, the other dog was set free, and ran, yelping with pain, back to his delighted mistress, who caught him up in her arms.

Daisy, pale and terrified, looked up at me with a world of gratitude in her blue-grey eyes.

"How can I ever thank you?" she whispered.

"By letting me see you home," I answered. "Let me take Tartar, he is too strong for you." I took the string out of her unresisting hand, and we walked along together. I saw she was still trembling.

"I don't know what I should have done if Tartar had killed that other dog," she said. "Do you think he's very much hurt?"

"No, he's not much the worse. There is his mistress carrying him, she is going to get a cab and take him home."

"Would you like to know what my profession —my business, perhaps, I ought to say—really is?"

"Very much indeed. I have not the slightest idea what it can be."

"It is one of the new openings for women's employment. You must know that I have always been devoted to dogs. Some months ago I saw an advertisement from a lady who is an invalid. She wanted someone to take her dog out every day for exercise. I answered it. Tartar was the dog, he was my first client; now I have four, that is the reason we took No. 13, to be near the common. They don't live with us, I call for them, exercise them, and take them home. In fact, I may be said 'to have gone to the dogs.' I know this, that I love them, and they love me."

"I am not surprised at that."

I got to know the hours when she took the four dogs out on the common, and I used to meet her wherever I possibly could. I held in Tartar when he was in a fighting humour, and he grew more obedient. He only fought now to defend his companions, but his chivalry sometimes led to trouble.

"I don't know what I should do without you," said Daisy one evening.

"And I don't know what I can do without you," I replied. "We are two lonely people, why not join the two together?"

"You couldn't think of such a thing. Do you know what people call me?"

"I don't know, and I don't care."

"A dog's nursery maid. What do you think of that?"

"I don't think anything about it. I am just dying to go and live at No. 13 with you, and see if it is really unlucky."

"What if it should be?"

"I am prepared to risk it. Love, real love, takes all risks."

She looked at me, such a wonderful, pleading, searching look—that I stooped down, gathered her up in my arms, close and warm, and kissed her then and there under the trees. Only Tartar was a witness to the happy scene that embrace. Tartar is a very reticent dog, he did not growl or give any mark of disapproval. I fancy he had seen how things were going. His intelligence is quite remarkable.

There was never a happier married couple than Daisy and I were, when we took up our abode at No. 13. Aunt Caroline had departed to live with another of her nieces, and we reigned undisturbed in our little house, except for the daily visits of Tartar and his three companions.

He only fights very occasionally, and generally in defence of others. So far from the number "13" having been unlucky for us for being unlucky, that it is the very luckiest number that exists.

So does my little Daisy, who is the supreme joy of my life, and the blessing and comfort of our home.

Harry Ferguson, who was murdered by his father, left a fortune of £60,000.

SELBY, Monday.—Eggs 8 and 8½ for 1s.; butter 1os. 3d. per lb.; chickens 4s. 6d. to 6s. per couple.

As the address on a parcel sent to Athenry, Galway, could not be found, it was opened by a clerk, and found to contain the body of a baby.

Gustav Reske was fined £5 by a New York judge because he had tried to persuade his six-years-old son that Santa Claus was a myth.

To remove grease-spots from wallpaper, sprinkle a piece of blotting-paper with carbonate of soda, and press it against the wall with a moderately warm iron. The blotting-paper will absorb the grease, while the soda preserves the colour of the paper.

Every housekeeper should know how to detect margarine from butter. Draw the blade of a knife across the suspected butter. If it is margarine the place where the knife was pressed will look shiny and streaks of the blade will be marked with little beads of water. When the test is made with genuine butter the white look does not appear, but the butter holds its colour. Another test is to drop a piece of the suspected butter into a well-heated frying-pan. If it is spurious it will sputter, because of the water in it; if it is genuine it will melt and bubble or boil, but not sputter.

DISTRICT BREVITIES.

Is there to be an amalgamation of the Church Fenton cricket clubs?

• • • •

Tadcaster had a case at the Quarter Sessions on Monday, and a conviction was recorded.

• • • •

The business at the meetings of Tadcaster Guardians and District Council was transacted in half-an-hour.

• • • •

Not a single defendant was dealt with at Tadcaster Petty Sessions on Monday. Five magistrates attended.

• • • •

Monk Fryston's party for the Nursing Association is undoubtedly the most popular parochial gathering in the district.

• • • •

Bitter complaints are heard anent the arctic conditions at Tadcaster Station. It is a very cold place and no mistake.

• • • •

What does Barwick say? Lady Helmsley says the tango is quite graceful in its original form. Barwickers have taken it up.

• • • •

It is rumoured that a number of houses for miners are to be built at Colton. A new pit is being sunk in the neighbourhood.

• • • •

About a dozen years ago there was not a house on Whitkirk hill. Now the residents are agitating for a school for their children.

• • • •

Garforth's methods of dealing with snow and ice on roads and footpaths do not meet with the approbation of, at least, one ratepayer.

• • • •

Why has Templenewsam, with the same population, only about half as many children attending local schools as Outwood-with-Woodlesford?

• • • •

Our Councillors are not up-to-date. The members of a Council on the Continent voted themselves a turkey each at the ratepayers' expense.

• • • •

Burton Salmon and Monk Fryston folks will learn with interest that the Pontefract Guardians are to build a home for nurses at a cost of £1,700.

• • • •

At Garforth precautions are being taken against typhoid fever. Ashpits are being turned on the off-chance that microbes may be disporting themselves there.

• • • •

The engagement is announced of the Rev. Philip Stamp, late curate of Selby Abbey, and now curate of Stillingfleet, to Miss Jennie Walker, of Selby.

• • • •

The people of Whinmoor have a grievance. They cannot get their stiles repaired by landowners, occupiers, or Council. Why not tackle the work themselves.

• • • •

In Barkston Ash Division, which is the smallest in the West Riding, the electorate numbers 11,452—an increase. There are 265 lodger voters and 1,466 ownership electors.

• • • •

Mr Reginald Parker has kindly given the money to cover the expenses of repairing the old brass lectern at Selby Abbey, which was damaged in the fire of five years ago.

• • • •

In a village recently annexed by Leeds, it is said, the men employed by the District Council had their wages raised by the Corporation from 22s. to 26s. They came out on strike!

• • • •

Has the fancy dress ball, which was so popular at Garforth and other places, no longer claim on public support. The popular picture house at Garforth has probably greater attractions.

• • • •

Can any teacher in the district equal the record of the Scholes lady? Every day she walked to Barwick School, and she is said to have covered, in the course of her journeys, about 20,000 miles.

• • • •

What would the ratepayers say if the Tadcaster and Wetherby District Councils confessed they were throwing away £1,000 annually on unnecessary labour? Would there not be a clearance?

• • • •

Can any in Barkston Ash compete? It was said of a Bethnal Green woman, married at 20 years, that she had never had an angry word with, nor gave angry looks at, her husband. She's dead!

• • • •

How many will Crossgates, Garforth, and Kippax contribute? A determined attempt is to be made to increase the membership of the Wesleyan circuit by fifty during the present quarter. The chapels are by no means full.

• • • •

Where were they? Working-men were invited to attend the meeting of the Ratepayers' Association at Halton, but they were conspicuous by their absence. Another instance of the apathy of workers on questions that concern themselves!

• • • •

R-ply to an Addi lady. A writer says:—According to Dr Helen Wrinbaum, Leeds strikers are inefficient and lazy; therefore they are unhappy and discontented. Also to increase their wages would be an eugenic blunder. Queer logic, it seems to me! Dr Grunbaum, of course, belongs to a profession that never makes out its bills until it has considered the taxable capacity of its clients. This is a mark of extreme efficiency. We are worth all you can afford—in effect.

The business at Tadcaster Petty Sessions on Monday was over in ten minutes.

Long hours! For a dance at Tadcaster an extension to 6 a.m. has been granted. Surely by that time the dancers will be tired.

• • • •

Lieut.-Col. Charles Frederick Hoyle, The Grove, Oulton, managing director of Bentley's Yorkshire Breweries (Ltd.), left £10,217.

• • • •

In Osgoldcross Division there are 20,545 Parliamentary electors. Only 36 are described as lodger voters, and 1,680 are ownership electors.

• • • •

Following the request at Halton, will the allotment-holders at Garforth now make a demand for water to be laid on to their allotments.

• • • •

Everybody is wondering how the Leeds authorities have not before discovered that they can save £36,000 a year on labour. Poor, deluded ratepayers.

• • • •

Encouraging! There is a prospect of Great Preston having a Voluntary Aid Detachment of its own. The ambulance men are working to some purpose.

• • • •

The magistrates at Selby Petty Sessions on Monday were the Rev. R. Hemsworth (Chairman), Messrs H. Scott, W. N. Chessman, and T. S. Ulthorne.

• • • •

Seeing that Crossgates is now a part of Leeds, is it not desirable that a road should be driven through the Bridle Path in order to link up the village with the York Road?

• • • •

Micklefield, Barwick, Rothwell M.E., Stourton, and Oulton will compete for the billiard championship of Leeds and district. The competition opens on the 19th inst. in Leeds.

• • • •

Rothwell circuit Wesleyans must get to work. The membership is slightly down. Counting of heads is, of course, not the main thing, but a strong, healthy church will progress.

• • • •

It is estimated that about 10 per cent. more wheat was sown in the Wetherby district last autumn, the weather having been favourable. The young wheat looks extremely well.

• • • •

In Normanton Division (which includes Rothwell, Stourton, Oulton-with-Woodlesford, and Methley) there are 17,619 Parliamentary electors, including 2,273 owners and 16 lodger votes.

In reference to the laying on of water to Whitkirk Cemetery, a gentleman said that complaint had been made that there was too much water in the ground. That may be, but people would not be allowed when needing water for flowers to dig for it.

• • • •

The local magistrates at the West Riding Quarter Sessions at Leeds on Monday were Mr J. W. Morkill, Mr E. H. Foster, Mr E. Parkin (Rippax), Mr H. S. Childe (Potterton Hall), Dr J. Eddison (Adel), Mr D. B. Wilson (Scarcroft), Mr Harris Anson (Hambleton), and Mr E. A. Brotherton (Roundhay).

• • • •

Generosity (writes Mr C. F. Ryder, of Scarcroft), is the privilege of the individual, justice is the prime function and duty of the State. If we forgot this, we get deeper and deeper into the mire of political philanthropy and platform sentimentalism, until the sweated taxpayer revolts and points out that the State can never give until it has first taken, and that for a public body to pay more than the market price for labour, or any other commodity, is to favour one section of citizens by the exploitation of the rest.

ROTHWELL URBAN COUNCIL.

The monthly meeting of the Rothwell Urban District Council was held at the Council Offices, Rothwell on Monday night—Mr. J. Hirst (Chairman) presiding. Other members present were Messrs G. Bramley, Blakey (vice-chairman), S. W. Chadwick, G. Armitage, J. B. Hindle, S. Dobson, T. Ellis, J. Armitage, A. McCullough, H. Kirkby, and J. Horner, with the Clerk (Mr W. Dodgson), the medical officer (Dr H. Stevenson), the public health visitor (Miss Stoney), the sanitary inspector (Mr E. F. Moorhouse), and the surveyor (Mr J. Southwart).

HIGHWAYS COMMITTEE.

At the meeting of the Highways Committee the provision of a sidewalk was considered, and the committee decided in view of the narrow footpaths that the surveyor should employ any applicants for work and get the footpaths cleared by manual labour. It was resolved, that the matter of an old well adjoining a footpath at Lower Goodin be notified that it is in a dangerous state, and that notice be served on the owner to repair the footpath alongside the street leading to Stroud Well.

The surveyor reported a letter from Mrs. Charlesworth as to the footpath improvement in Town Street, Carlton, and he was instructed to interview her and report to the committee. It was resolved that the surveyor prepare an estimate for repairing the footpath from Town End to Rimsdell Gate. He was also instructed to send to the County Council further estimates for making up the Pontefract Road with granite and with close jointed granite.

It was agreed that in pursuance of section 6, sub-section 2, of the Private Street Works Act, 1892, the following streets be sewered, levelled, paved, metalled, flagged, channelled, and made good, and the expenses apportioned on the premises fronting, adjoining, or abutting thereon, namely:—Clement Terrace, Tallow Terrace, the Cross Street between the two, Greenfield Avenue, Holbrook Street, Pennybank Street, and Oper View.

The surveyor reported that he had measured the width of the 5 properties having a right of way on to Windmill Lane, and the committee decided to base the benefit charge on these amended measurements. It was resolved that the following 5 properties be charged as below as the provisional apportionments of the expenses of Private Street Works in Windmill Lane, namely:—Miss Hammill's house £6 8s. 9d; Mr James Ellis's house £6 8s. 9d; Miss Arundel's houses £12 15s.; trustees of Mr W. Hargreaves' house £16 10s.; Messrs G. H. S. and H. Armitage's house, £16 12s. 6d.

A letter was read from the postmaster asking for name plates and numbers for the streets. The surveyor was instructed to put the matter in hand.

The Clerk reported that he had informed the Board of Trade that the Council were dissatisfied with the answer of the Tramways Company with regard to workmen's fares, and asked the Board to consider the original objections of the Council. The Board had sent a formal acknowledgment.

TRAMWAY CO. AND FARES.

The Chairman called attention to the paragraph in the minutes relating to workmen's fares and the Tramways Company. They would see, he said, that the attention of the Board of Trade had been called to the revision of fares, and as a formal acknowledgment had been received, they must assume the Board of Trade were considering the matter.

Mr Kirkby said he could not understand why the Tramway Co. allowed workmen's fares in the morning, and refused to pass them in the evening.

Mr Chadwick: They are evidently not going to take a penny penny way, they can get a penny, and in that respect they are very much like ourselves.

The matter then dropped.

ASHES OR SAND?

Mr Dobson remarked upon the use of ashes on roads and footpaths during the recent fall of snow. He thought sand would answer the same purpose, and would be far better and much cleaner than ashes.

Mr Chadwick stated that they got the ashes for nothing when as they might have to pay from 10s to five shillings for sand. He travelled up and down the country perhaps more than any or those present, and he was of opinion they would have to be very clever to meet the uncertainties of the weather.

The Chairman said no doubt the Highways Committee would consider Mr Dobson's suggestion, and the same time he hoped the permanent inspector, Abraham Hill, which he had up to the Hospital, and which was in a deplorable condition.

The minutes were passed.

FINANCE COMMITTEE.

The minutes of the Finance Committee showed that a letter was read from the postmaster at Wakefield refusing to extend money order and savings bank business to the Carlton Post Office, but offering to reconsider the matter in a year's time.

An application from the West Riding of York County Association asking the Council to help in verifying claims in respect of soldiers of the Territorial Force was agreed to.

The surveyor was instructed to improve the ventilation of the Council Chamber.

CARLTON'S CLAIMS.

The minutes were moved by Mr S. Dobson, and seconded by Mr G. Armitage. The latter called attention to the reply of the postmaster of Wakefield.

The Clerk said the matter would be again considered in another year.

Mr. Dobson: It is a case of shelving it.

The Chairman moved that the Postmaster be again written to, as he thought if facilities were possible the trade would grow.

Mr Kirkby seconded and said he would go one further. If the reply was unsatisfactory, he would suggest that the Postmaster General be written to.

The minutes, along with the resolution, were passed.

SANITARY COMMITTEE.

At a meeting of the Sanitary Committee it was resolved that slaughter-house licenses be renewed in respect of certain premises in the occupation of S. Hartley, A. Tattersall, F. Kitrel, M. Lake, and E. Clayton, and that notices be given to occupiers of slaughter houses to comply with bye-law No. 15 for the provision of a receptacle for offal. The public health visitor presented her report and informed the committee of the progress of her work. It was resolved, that notice be given of a meeting of the Council to adopt the Notification of Births Act, 1907. The Local Government Board acknowledged the receipt of the application from the Council for the Provisional Order for the formation of a Statutory body for the purposes of a joint cemetery. The Clerk reported that he had referred the question of a joint committee or a joint board by the Local Government Board, and asked for their opinion. The Clerk reported that he had again applied to the County Council suggesting co-operation with regard to the work of the public health visitor.

The Chairman stated that the health visitor, Miss Stoney, had been well received, and welcomed in the homes in Rothwell and the district.

HEALTH OF THE DISTRICT

The medical officer presented his report which showed that during the past four weeks there had been ten deaths and 22 births (eight males and fourteen females).

Asked by one of the members as to the infectious cases in the district, Dr Stevenson said things were very much better.

WATER COMMITTEE

There were no minutes of the Building Committee, which, said the Chairman, did not speak well for the district.

In moving the adoption of the minutes of the Water Committee, Mr James Armitage said the Hunslet Guardians had offered charges for the supply of water by the Council to the Children's Homes, Rothwell Haigh, which were unsatisfactory.

The minutes showed that the average daily consumption for the month ending December 11th, 1913, as against December 12th, 1912 was at Rothwell, 192,000 gallons; 173,000 gallons; Thorpe, 96,000 gallons, 85,000 gallons; Stourton 47,000 gallons, 47,000 gallons; a total consumption of 313,000 gallons as against 305,000 gallons. The Midland Railway used 98,000 gallons as against 108,000 gallons last year.

The surveyor reported the cost of a three-inch main to John O'Gaunt's would be £615, and it was resolved that the consent of the owner be asked to cross the field.

The solicitor was instructed to take an opinion on the water charges.

The minutes were adopted.

LIGHTING

At a meeting of the Lampe and Gas Committee the meter readings which were as follows were considered:—Rothwell gas 265,700 cubic feet, Leeds gas 65,400 cubic feet. The inspector was asked to take a comparison of the lighting at the old and new schools at Stourton. A lamp is to be erected near Clayton's Buildings.

The minutes were passed.

NOTIFICATION OF BIRTHS.

The Chairman stated that at the next meeting of the Council a resolution would be passed adopting the Notification of Births Act.

Mr G. Armitage asked if by so doing they would have to pay any extra cost in regard to appointing an additional officer in order to carry out the duties.

Mr Chadwick said they were told by the medical officer that no extra cost would be entailed. In fact it meant extra work for the doctors without extra pay.

The Chairman pointed out that the County Council had been asked to co-operate with them in regard to the work of the public health visitor.

SUNDAY DELIVERY OF LETTERS.

Mr McCullough asked if Mr Chadwick had allowed the question of a Sunday delivery in Rothwell district to drop.

The Chairman said Mr Chadwick had not given notice of a resolution, but if he wished to move the resolution he was quite in order.

In support of his resolution, Mr Chadwick said there were few places where a Sunday delivery was not in vogue. The extra work entailed was practically nothing, and he thought it would be better for the postmen to spend two or three hours than for several hundred people to have to go to the post office for their letters. He had himself received a letter that morning asking him to attend a meeting which was held on Saturday night. To have a Sunday delivery would not entail any hardship upon the postmen. They were behind the times in Rothwell.

Mr G. Armitage seconded, and Mr McCullough supported. The latter said there were Sunday deliveries at Robin Hood and Stourton.

Mr Hindle, in supporting, said although he lived close to the post office at Rothwell he did not receive his letters until about 9.30, sometimes at 5.30, but more often at 9.30. They ought to be able to get their letters at 7.30.

Mr G. Armitage said it was the old adage, "Nearer to church, the further from God." They at Robin Hood could get their letter at 7.30.

The resolution that the postmaster be asked to grant a Sunday delivery was passed.

DANGER ON THE ROAD AT HALTON.

TEAMERS' DEFENCE.

At the Leeds West Riding Petty Sessions on Tuesday, John Wade, farmer, of Hunslet, was summoned for driving a vehicle at Halton without a light.

P.C. Taylor stated that about 8.20 p.m. on Wednesday, December 24th, he was on the Selby Road, Halton, when he saw two vehicles coming down the hill, the one driven by the defendant being minus a light. He stopped the defendant, who stated that he was unaware that the lamp was unlighted.

Defendant told the magistrates that the driver of the other vehicle had been taken ill on the road, and he had to see to both. At the time the officer came up he was releasing the brake of his companion's vehicle.

P.C. Taylor: Over the chain. That one true, as defendant was against his own vehicle when he came up. The driver of the other vehicle was asleep.

Merrill was fined 1s. and costs.

Benjamin Walsh, carter, of Leeds, and the driver of the other vehicle, was summoned for being asleep while in charge.

P.C. Taylor proved the case, and said Walsh was asleep under the chain. When awakened defendant said he had been taken ill, and lay down, falling asleep.

The defendant was not at the court, but his wife appeared and said that day her husband had been out 19 hours, and had covered 22 miles. He was taken ill on the road with cramp in his stomach.

Asked by the other case defendant was fined 1s. and costs.

At South Cave Mr and Mrs Geo. Thornham have celebrated the sixty-eighth anniversary of their wedding. They were married at North Cave in 1845.

Mr James Body, who was on a visit to his daughter at Pinner, died suddenly after leaving the family party which had been welcoming the New Year with the usual rejoicings.

THE LATE MRS H. BARRAN, SHADWELL GRANGE.

THE FUNERAL SERVICE.

After an illness extending over many weeks, the death took place on Friday, at Shadwell Grange, Moor Allerton, of Mrs Henry Barran, wife of Mr Henry Barran, head of the firm of John Barran and Sons (Limited), Leeds. She was the daughter of the late Mr Edgar Flower, of Stratford-on-Avon, and Middle Hill, Broadway, Worcestershire.

Many in Leeds will mourn the loss of this gracious and winning personality. Although of a retiring disposition, she was never weary in doing good, and took infinite pains in mastering the details of any work to which she gave her sympathies.

She studied social problems, and her desire to help the child life of Leeds, as well as her interest in her husband's work as Chairman of the Women's to Children's Hospital, and, more recently, in the Red House Settlement, were not mere passing enthusiasms, but were dictated by a deep desire to show how by love we can best serve one another. In opening the Babies' Welcome in East Leeds she quoted with entire approval the saying that it is better to put a fence at the edge of a precipice than to supply the ambulance to those who have fallen over it.

Happily she could gratify her love of flowers, and of all things beautiful in her own home and in the gardens attached to it, which every year, under her skill and personal supervision, afforded pleasure not only to her inner circle of friends, but to the large body of workers associated with her husband's business.

Amid many manifestations of sympathy and sorrow the remains of the late Mrs Henry Barran were laid to rest on Monday afternoon. There was a service at St. John's Church, Moor-Allerton, where the deceased regularly attended, and afterwards the interment took place at Lawnswood. The Vicar of Leeds (Dr Barnes-Lawrence), the Vicar of Moor-Allerton, the Rev. G. Birch-enough) conducted the service at the church, the former also officiating at the graveside.

The family mourners from Shadwell Grange included Mr Henry Barran, Miss Elaine Barran, Mr Vernon Barran, Mr Flower, Lord Ebsleie, Sir John and Lady Barran, Major Flower, Mr and Mrs Sanford, Mr Alfred Barran, Mr Rowland H. Barran, M.P., Mr and Mrs Manfield, Miss Lorna Barran, Mr Town, Mr Claud Barran, Mr Hugh Barran, Mr Aurelyn Barran, Miss Sybella Barran, Mr Foot, Mrs Shaw, Nurse Coulson, and members of the household.

There were also present Mrs Bickerseth, Mr H. I Bowring, Mr W. H. Spice (Headingley), Mr Sydney D. Kitson, Mr Cecil Atkinson, the Rev. W. H. Draper (rector of Adel), Mr Robert Armitage, M.P., Mr Gerald C. Verle (Harrogate), Mr Leonard Hawkesworth (secretary to John Barran and Sons, Limited), Mr R. Cecil Nickols (Moor-Allerton), Lady Fox, Mr F. G. Mayne, Mrs Kitson Clark, Mrs Wickstead, Mrs Towys, the Rev. E. H. and Mrs Dykes, the Misses Baines, Mrs and Miss Maude, Mr and Mrs Vyner, Mrs Copeland, Mr and Mrs G. C. Hayes, the Rev. A. Robert George (South Parade Chapel), Mr F. W. Dresdler, Mr G. Blackwell (secretary of the Women and Children's Hospital), Mrs W. A. Howgate (representing the Committee of the Victoria Institute, Y.W.C.A.), Mrs Edmund Robinson, and many others.

The floral tributes were displayed in the chancel of the church. The contributors included the directors of John Barran and Sons, the workpeople of the firm, members of the cutting-room, Hanover Lane, the Charity Lane staff and travellers, the Ellerby Road Babies' Welcome Mothers, the Leeds and District Boy Scouts' Association, the members of the "Little Owl" Literary Club, the Leeds Fire Art Club, the Leeds Clothworkers' Association, the staff of the Leeds Hospital for Women and Children, also Mr Henry Barran, Miss Elaine and Mr Vernon Barran, Mrs Edgar Flower, the Dowager Lady Barran and her four sisters, Miss Dennis, Lady Flower, Mr and Mrs Rowland Barran, Lady Beckgreen, Mr and Mrs. Charles Barran, Mr and Mrs Manfield, Lord and Lady Ebsleie, Sir John and Lady Barran, Miss Lorna Barran, Mr and Mrs Alfred Barran, Mr and Mrs Claude Barran, Mr and Mrs Aurelyn Barran, Mr and Mrs A. H. Mepsey-Thompson, the servants of Shadwell Grange, Captain and Mrs Bartlett, Mr and Mrs Richard Nickols, Mr and Mrs Tetley, Lord and Lady Airedale, the Dowager Lady Erskine, Mrs Oliver Lupton, Mrs Currer Briggs, Mr and Mrs C. F. Ryder, Mr and Mrs H. Shann, Mr and Mrs H. I. Bowring, Mr and Mrs Sydney Kitson, Mr and Mrs Richard Robinson, Mr W. A. Howgate, Mr Gordon Thomson, Mr and Mrs W. H. Hudson, Mr F. B. Brooke, Mr and Mrs Mayne, Mr and Mrs Constable Hayes, and Mr and Mrs Arthur Holmes. Carriages were sent by Mrs George March, Mrs F. J. Kitson, Mr J. R. Flitch, and others.

TEMPLENEWSAM, SWILLINGTON, AND WOODLESFORD.

WILD NATURE IN THE DISTRICT.

You can go in almost any direction that the tram car will take you (said Mr H. Crowther in a lecture in Leeds), and at once find yourself in the region of Nature in its wild aspects. Take, as an example, the district approached from York Road—east, on the face of it, a very promising locality. You are soon on the banks of Killingbeck pond, with its overgrowth of water plants and the tracks along which, when drained, the waterhen has travelled, clinging, with its large, sprawling feet, to the submerged plants, and from its subaqueous hiding-place gulping its breath by extending its bill above the surface of the water. The waterhen is the commonest wild aquatic bird in this district. It is a useful scavenger. Its summer nest was found near the fountain in the Canal Gardens at Roundhay, a waterhen's nest built of reeds, part of a copy of a newspaper, and a number of tram tickets, which showed the route from which carefully collected from the surface of the canal.

Halton, Whitkirk, and Colton, are rich in wild Nature's work. On the Templenewsam estate unusually large specimens of witch's broom—so called from a legend that a witch once cursed the tree—is seen growing on wild cherry trees, and a delightful little wood—the Wilderness—is remarkable for its profusion of the bird cherry, a peculiarly twisted tree, with an equally peculiar snake-like bark. Another small wood beyond is overgrown at some seasons with the white anemone and goldilocks, and at others by purple veils of wild hyacinth. Birds are plentiful hereabout in the spring, for the freshly-ploughed fields afford fine concealment for the feathered creatures which in search of their food, and feeding ground sufficiently fruitful to tempt even the titmouse so to depart from her natural habit as to leave the trees and settle on the ground on the look-out for insects, at the imminent risk of injuring her needle-like claws, and thereby lessening her capacity for hanging on the boughs.

From the little hamlet of Newsam Green you get a lovely view of the Aire Valley, and you may get a glimpse of wild swans—perhaps a score of them—large white swans, skimming above the course of the river from the direction of Castleford and Methley, where they nest, and then, in the distance, looking like a white streak, eventually disappearing from view, evidently on their way to the succulent sewage beds at Knostrop.

Then there are the gulls, which are establishing a nesting-place on the ponds at Swillington. They are black-headed sea-gulls that nest inland, and, finding sufficient food away from the coast do not go back to the sea. The sewage works at Knostrop and the streams flowing into them attract the gulls, as they attract their fellow-scavengers, the wild swans. Most of the gulls are migrating from the district of York—tempted by the sewage—and there are signs that before long there will be formed quite a respectable "gullery" at Swillington.

More ponds at Woodlesford are worth noticing —deep down below the level of the road and almost inaccessible, and green with plant growth relieved by flashes of the bright plumage of kingfishers, another species of bird that is pretty common in the district coundabout Leeds.

WHITKIRK RESIDENTS AND A SCHOOL.

DISCUSSION BY RATEPAYERS' ASSOCIATION.

CHILDREN WALK OVER FOUR MILES A DAY.

At a meeting of Templenewsam Ratepayers' Association at Halton on Friday night—the President (Mr J. Armistead) in the chair—the question of a school at Whitkirk was again discussed.

Mr Robert Mackay (Whitkirk) said that several gentlemen had asked him as to whether a question could not be re-opened.

The President said that the Association has the matter up about two years ago.

Mr S. H. Young (Halton) said that the Clerk to the Outlane Education Committee at that time got out a good deal of information bearing on the question, and after they had the facts before them, the members came to the conclusion that they would not be justified in urging the matter further.

Mr Mackay said that he believed a statement was made that if they had persevered, school accommodation would have been made at Whitkirk.

The President said that the question was discussed at the October and November meetings in 1913.

Mr Wilkinson (hon. sec.), read the minutes bearing on the question and gave the figures got out as to the number of school children in this particular district, etc.

Mr McLeod (Whitkirk) said that a good many of the children, according to the figures, were attending private schools. Did they not think one reason for that was that the public schools were too far away for parents to send their children to

The President said he believed that was one reason.

Mr Young said that they could not as an Association be placed in antagonism to private schools.

Mr McLeod said that they did not want to be antagonistic, but the Association was for the good of the district, and he mentioned one feature of the case that occurred to him.

Mr G. E. Martin (Whitkirk) inquired what number of children would justify them in again approaching the Education Authority. Did they give any number?

The President said they did not. One thing they laid down, however, was that the school accommodation was sufficient.

Mr Verity (Halton) said there was plenty of accommodation at Colton School.

Mr Young then gave the figures for Colton and Halton Infants' Schools for October. The accommodation at Colton was for 169, the number on the register was 116, and the average attendance was 115. At Halton Infants' School there was accommodation for 112, there were 128 on the register, and 103 in attendance. The number in attendance, however, had fallen during December. If they had a case he would have great pleasure in submitting it to the Education Committee.

Mr Mackay said that the school for infant children at Whitkirk was too far away.

Mr White (Whitkirk) said that was his opinion, too.

Mr Young said that they worked out the per case distance every child had to walk.

Mr Mackay said that when the question was up before he took a stand on purely personal grounds. His child had to walk there, and when he was away ill they had the attendance officer on the door step, and he had to provide medical certificates. The child was now older, and he was better able to walk, but he contended that for children of a delicate age the distance to Colton School was too great.

Mr Young said that if a school were built at Whitkirk the burden would be saddled with fifty per cent. of the capital outlay.

Mr J. A. Rhodes (Whitkirk) asked if there was any chance of the Authority providing a conveyance to take the children to and from school. It would be cheaper than building a school.

Mr Young said that they had better get information as to the number of children first.

Mr Mackay pointed out that according to the report the distance walked by the children to Colton was 4·93 miles per day.

Mr Martin suggested that in connection with the opening of a new pit there might be an increased population.

Mr Young: Where are they to get houses?

Mr Martin said he had heard of a proposal to build a couple of hundred houses in the old lane at Colton.

Mr Armistead (Halton) said that if there were a good school at Whitkirk a lot of children who now walked to Leeds to school would not go to the city. He stated that there children who thought to go to school at Halton went to Leeds.

Mr Mackay then proposed that the question of school accommodation at Whitkirk be further considered, particularly in relation to children of tender years who had to walk a distance to school of over four miles a day.

Mr McLeod seconded.

Mr Verity suggested and said there was no necessity to saddle the district with further expense. Education expenses were getting terrible, and the Ratepayers' Association should not try to help them.

Mr Wilkinson said he did not think they could make any impression on the Education Authority yet. He did not think there was any increase in the number of children, or it was very small.

Mr Ripon said he agreed with Mr Wilkinson.

Mr Young proposed that the matter be adjourned for a month, and in the meantime Mr Hon. secs. get out all the information already submitted to the Association.

Mr Coultas seconded.

Mr Rhodes: What about a conveyance?

The President: That might be covered by the amendment.

Mr White said that if there had been a good school at Whitkirk he would not have sent his youngest boy to Leeds.

The amendment was then agreed to.

THE LADIES' COLUMN

HINTS FOR THE HOME.

When lemons are not available fruit and vegetable stains can be removed from the hands by rubbing them with a slice of raw tomato.

Mirrors, after being washed, should be rubbed over with sprits of wine and polished with soft tissue paper.

To clean a carpet, sprinkle thoroughly with salt, then brush with a stiff brush. The colour will revive under this treatment.

Stale cake can be made perfectly fresh if dipped in cold milk and reheated in a cool oven. It will taste as if fresh and will be more digestible.

After washing hair-brushes dip the bristles in milk, and they will be found quite stiff when dry instead of soft, as is the case when they are only rinsed in water.

The water in which onions have been boiled is excellent for cleaning gilt picture-frames. It removes specks and dirt, and brightens the gilt. It should be used quite cold, and the frame should be gently wiped dry afterwards.

Lemon-juice is excellent for cleaning brass ware of any kind. Cut a lemon in half, dip it in coarse salt, and rub it thoroughly over the surface of the brass until all stains have disappeared. Then rinse well, and polish with a soft duster and a little finely-powdered bathbrick.

When a broom begins to show signs of wear don't throw it away. Soak it in hot soda water, and put out on the ash to dry. Then cut the bristles so that they are even lengths again, and you will find that the broom has taken on a new lease of life.

When washing blankets dissolve a quarter of a pound of rock fuller's earth in boiling water, and add to the water in which the blankets are steeped. This will make them easier to wash and more fleecy when dry.

To remove scums from white knife-handles, mix together equal parts of whiting and powdered pumice-stone, dip a damp cloth in the mixture, and rub the handles.

To make a tough steak tender, rub the meat on both sides with a mixture of equal parts of vinegar and olive oil, and leave it to stand for an hour or longer before cooking.

With the damp of autumn window-frames will begin to stick. Take a small piece of soap and rub it along the groove. Open and close the window a few times to make the soap slippery and to get it on to the edge of the sash, and thereafter you will have no trouble.

When a cork-screw is not available, or ordinary screw with a string attached will remove a cork from a bottle quite easily.

New baking tins should be placed in the oven for an hour to become properly seasoned before being used for ordinary baking purposes. The oven should be of moderate heat. By treating them in this way the tins will last twice as long.

When copper kettles become dull and black-looking, try cleaning them in the following way:—Cut a lemon in half, dip it in salt, and rub it all over the surface of the kettle. Afterwards wash well in warm water, to prevent the acid eating into the metal, and polish with dry powdered bath-brick.

A GOOD BOOT BLACKING.

Mix two pints of gin with vinegar and one of soft water, stir in a quarter of a pound of blue broken up, half a pound logwood chips, a quarter of an ounce best soft soap, and a quarter of an ounce sugar candy. Let the mixture stand by the fire for ten minutes. Then strain the liquid, let it cool, bottle, and cork it. Shake well before using, and apply with a sponge.

THE BEST FATS FOR FRYING.

Goulfe, the highest French authority in cookery, thinks frying fats as follows:—The best is the dripping of roast meats and the top of the broth or soup pot; next is beef suet, chopped fine and tried out. Butter requires a show fire and burns quickly, and is, therefore, inferior to either of the fats previously named for frying, besides being expensive. Oil always requires careful handling, as it rises rapidly, and is liable to boil over. Lard, adds this authority, "I am an advocate of, as it always leaves an unpleasant coating on whatever is fried in it."

FOR THE COMPLEXION.

Cold cream should never be allowed to remain on the skin over night. It does no good and has of injury. Wash the face in soft water before rubbing it gently in with a flannel or soft towel, and then as carefully remove every trace of it with a perfectly clean one, keeping up a gentle massage until there is no oiliness on the skin at all. This mode of treatment will be found a certain aid, and there will be no damaging results afterwards. So many people decry the use of soaps on the face, which is all a gross mistake, providing a good, reliable quality is used. Soap with hot water effectually cleans the pores; but, of course, it must be thoroughly washed off, and a brisk rubbing given to the skin to promote circulation. To sum it up, there are, after all, only a few simple rules to follow if one wishes to improve her complexion or to keep what she already has. The general health must be good, the diet looked to, plenty of outdoor exercise taken, a fondness for the bath indulged in, and one's temper kept unruffled as all costs.

HOW TO BRIGHTEN AND RETAIN COLOUR.

It is not generally known that when washing coloured articles (especially when new), if a little vinegar and a handful of salt are put in the water before washing, the colour will be retained and look like new. It also keeps articles with two or more colours from running into each other.

A SIMPLE CEMENT

For mending ornaments and delicate china there is nothing better than rice-flour cement. It is very easily made, it being only necessary to mix rice-flour or ground rice thoroughly with cold water, simmering gently over a slow fire until it thickens, thereby forming a most durable adhesive. Cement which can be used hot or cold, in the usual way.

TO RENOVATE SOILED DANCE SLIPPERS

Soiled dancing shoes of any light colour can be easily and effectively dyed by the use of ink. Any blue-black ink produces an extremely pretty art blue shade. Any other coloured ink will prove equally successful. It is essential to use fresh ink, and it is best applied with a small pad of cotton wool. This process is extremely cheap and does not in any way take from the gloss of the satin. One application is sufficient unless a very dark shade is required, and then the first coating should be allowed to dry before the second is applied.

A BRAMHAM GROCER'S BANKRUPTCY.

DISCHARGE GRANTED.

On Tuesday at York—before His Honour Deputy Judge J. H. Templer—the Official Receiver (Mr Donald S. Mackay) appeared in reference to an application for discharge from bankruptcy made by John Bagaley Gibbons.

Mr Mackay said that Mr Gibbons failed as a grocer at Bramham. The receiving order was made on December 23rd, 1913, on debtor's own petition, and the first meeting of creditors was held on January 15th, 1913, the Official Receiver remaining trustee of his estate. According to debtor's statement of affairs, the liabilities to rank for dividend were estimated at £294 8s. 10d., but the proofs actually admitted and claims likely to be made amounted to £391 2s. 11d. The assets, so far as they were not assigned to creditors wholly or partially secured, were estimated to produce £322 8s. 11d., but they had already realised £304 8s. 9d. The difference between the actual value of the assets and the debtor's estimate was accounted for by the fact that certain of the book debts were dispersion or to keep what she already has. The general health must be good, the diet looked to, plenty of outdoor exercise taken, a fondness for the bath indulged in, and one's temper kept unruffled as all costs.

Debtor carried on the business of a grocer at Bramham for 20 years prior to filing his petition. He began with a capital of £40 and built up a large trade connection. At the date of his bankruptcy he had over 200 open accounts with customers in his books, and this extensive and indiscriminate credit giving, coupled with neglect on his part to prevent debts becoming statute-barred, appeared to have been the cause of his failure. The Official Receiver had refrained from bringing pressure to bear upon debtors where their circumstances were somewhat straitened. The books kept by debtor consisted of day books, cash books, credit sales were entered, and a debtor's ledger, which was posted from the day book, also a creditors' ledger, containing the account of goods purchased by him, but he considered it to keep a cash book, or trading and profit and loss account, and he never took stock. Debtor admitted his knowledge of insolvency in July, 1912, after which he continued to trade for six months. At the present time debtor was employed as a carter at a weekly wage.

The Official Receiver submitted the following observations in relation to debtor's present application: That debtor had omitted to keep such books as were usual and proper to such a business to show sufficiently his business transactions and financial position within the three years preceding his bankruptcy; That bankrupt continued to trade after knowing himself to be insolvent; But the bankrupt's conduct during the proceedings under his bankruptcy had been satisfactory.

His Honour granted the discharge from bankruptcy, the same to take effect forthwith.

SCHOLES

CHILDREN'S PARTY.—The second Christmas treat to the children of Scholes was given in the Council Room on Wednesday night week, and the function was a great success. Tea was served by the Yeptle guests at four o'clock, and the following ladies attended to the wants of the children:—Mesdames Alvin, Beattie, Bygott, Clarke, Fleetwood, Haigh, Marsden, Needham, Sweeney, and Whitaker, and Misses Bygott, Harrison and Roberts. Mr J. W. Marsden gave gramophone selections whilst tea was being served, and they appreciated by the youngsters joined in the chorusse of popular ditties. Afterwards Mr W. Pickard, of Leeds (humorist and children's entertainer), kept the children enthralled with sweets, comic songs, recitations, etc., until the arrival of Father Christmas (personated by Mr Beattie) at 7.45, when each child received a present. Miss Gwen Beattie and Miss Kitty Dowling, two of the youngest children present, gave recitations, which were greatly appreciated. After the distribution of presents, Master Harry Hooton proposed a vote of thanks to all who had contributed towards the success of the party, and Miss Hannah Pemberton seconding, it was cordially passed. The children, before leaving, sing "Auld Lang Syne." Miss Elsie Pickard, of Leeds, was the accompanist. The arrangements were carried out by the members of the committee, Misses Abbs, Beattie, Bygott, Clarke, Fleetwood, Haigh, Horton, Marsden, Needham, and Whitaker.

THIS INSTITUTION was ESTABLISHED in 1872. The system of working is the proviso one, patients paying a small periodical fee whilst under treatment, and they may, therefore, justly expect to receive the prompt care and attention which in many instances in charitable institutions is too often omitted. The treatment is of a mild and safe character, without operation or the use of Ear Drums, Ear Corners or other mechanical or painful appliances. Another advantage appertaining to this dispensary is its system of treatment by correspondence, by which sufferers at long distances, and in isolated positions can have the advantage of Mr ISON'S advice and remedies forwarded through the post. No case is undertaken unless there be a reasonable hope of cure, or benefit to the patient.
Attendance at Leeds every Tuesday, from 10 to 7 on Alternate Saturdays, 3rd, 10th and 24th.

SATURDAY, JANUARY 10th, 1914.

How remarkably tolerant the people are of social evils! No matter how long the festering sore has been a reproach, the nation will allow its legislators and administrators to experiment with it, but a drastic remedy they will not demand. Vagrancy, for instance, is almost as old as the nation itself, and the people continue to suffer it. Enterprising persons have attempted to stamp it out by punishment, but they have made a sorry mess of it, and the whining mendicant continues to follow his time-honoured profession with becoming zeal, except at such times as he may be dodging a too vigilant police. Many, however, wonder that vagrancy has so long survived. In the old days when the vagrant was caught soliciting alms the "rude fathers of the hamlet" applied the whip to his back without scruple and drove him into the next parish, where the poor wasted, in order to sustain life, had to beg, borrow, or steal, thanking consequent punishment even greater than that already given. In a moment of relenting the authorities recognised him as a member of the human family, and provided a temporary home for him in special apartments at the workhouse, but when his numbers expanded with his gratitude the Guardians became less reluctant to display a generous hospitality, and the comfort of the guest was very considerably restricted. Still the vagrant remains a sore upon our social life. Further restrictions are promised by means of the way ticket system, in order that differentiation of treatment may be meted out to the bonafide working man, but it is simply tinkering with a problem which will remain until the legislature determines to deal drastically with the whole family of wastrels who travel about the country and live on the earnings of the industrious. If magistrates were given the power of detaining genuine sons of the road, and of sending the men and women to places where they would be weaned to work, and of committing children to the care of Guardians, not many years would elapse ere vagrancy was swept from the country. It would be a considerable expenditure to maintain such an army of tramps, but at the present time their cost to the nation is enormous, because, apart entirely from private charity, they are housed and fed by Guardians, and that means money. If the Boards of Guardians would insist upon such measures being adopted they would eventually have their way, but at present the authorities are only playing with the problem.

What is termed the "cinema craze" has resulted in the building of picture houses in almost every town and populous village in the country, and the public have shown a keen appreciation of the form of amusement and instruction provided. To the influence of the cinema house is credited a marked improvement in the sobriety and behaviour of the people, and men, it is stated, who were wont to spend their earnings drinking in public-houses now take their families to the picture palaces and enjoy themselves in a rational way, besides effecting a saving to the pocket. A well-conducted house may easily exercise a beneficial influence on a working-class community, without in anywise sacrificing its primary function—the provision of amusement, and so long as a high standard is maintained the public will be appreciative. While a great deal has been written about the effect of the picture house upon the minds and morals of the people, comparatively little has been said about the business side of the "craze." Judging by the multiplication of these places of amusement, the average thoughtless person will say that they must be reaping a rich harvest, but it is of interest to note the remarks of the chairman of the Amalgamated Cinematograph Theatres, at the annual meeting, regarding the baneful effect on dividends of excessive competition. It seems almost as bad to be successful as to be a failure, for such is the insane competition and such the desire to come and take from anyone what he is enjoying, that no sooner is it known that one is making a success with a theatre than somebody comes and builds a theatre opposite or beside it. It reminds one of the competition in the days of the skating rink "craze," which caused late-comers to lose heavily in undertakings. The most disquieting fact, however, in regard to picture houses is that the average capitalization of the newer concerns tends to get smaller, and this implies that the newer flora-tions are of an increasingly petty character. This not only affects their own stability and their shareholders' capital, but it may easily destroy the margin of profits of other houses in the neighbourhood, and bring disaster all round. In each town and district there must be a limit to these concerns, and the public when asked to invest in new undertakings should carefully inquire as to the prospects of success.

In view of the agitation for a minimum wage for agricultural labourers, valuable information is furnished by the last census, which would indicate that between 1901 and 1911 farming had enjoyed a period of increased prosperity. Trade activity is generally gauged by the number of persons employed, and if the same rule is applied to agriculture an improvement was manifest in the condition of the oldest industry. The number of male farm servants employed advanced from 584,000 to 622,000, and it must be remembered that the latter figures were obtained when the general trade of the country was good. In the decade farmers and graziers increased by 6,000—due probably to the multiplication of small-holdings, and if more land was under cultivation it would, to some extent, account for the greater number of farm hands employed. Of course, the bare figures are not an accurate guide to conditions, and many deductions may be drawn from them, but, in view of the use of so much machinery on the farm, and the employment of more men, it is reasonable to assume that activity in the industry was greater. It would be possible to argue that agriculture was even more prosperous in 1881, when 808,000 male farm hands were employed, or in 1891, when the number was returned as 735,000, but the conditions have changed very materially, and more machinery is now used. The difference between the numbers in 1881 and 1911 is nearly 190,000 male workers, and when to these are added dependents, it will be seen that the population of the countryside has undergone a serious decrease. Between 1901 and 1911, however, a check came to rural depopulation, and as the figures for male servants were up by 38,000, it might be assumed that the glamour of town life was not exercising such a potent influence over country folks. But is that the case? According to a report by the Committee of the Central Land Association, "better prices and better prospects for farming have led to an increased demand for labour which is no longer available. From almost every district it is reported that labour is scarce, that the more progressive sons of agricultural labourers, as soon as they are able, flock to the towns and colonies, and there is very general complaint that the quality of labour in agricultural districts is poor." The total male population employed on the land in 1911 had increased by 48,000, yet we are told that labour is not to be got. In many parts of the country labourers are wretchedly paid—in this district conditions are not so bad—and it is generally recognised that the value of farm labour has a material bearing on the value of unskilled labour generally, although why agricultural work should be termed unskilled is a mystery. Some people argue that farmers cannot pay higher wages, but where there are other trades competing with agriculture for labour the farmer does pay more and he seems as prosperous as the man who gives the lower wage. The Land Association Committee states that "the appearance of industrial interests causes a rise in wages, and the labour market instantly becomes sensitive to the increased demand. Where there is no industrial element, wages are apt to remain low and stagnant." Farmers who pay the higher wages are placed at a disadvantage in competing with the agriculturists who give a low wage, and many people use this as an argument in favour of the fixing of a minimum wage for labourers. And good wages make for efficiency. It is not long since a Monk Fryston farmer declared that the better-paid Yorkshire labourer was worth three of the labourer in the south. So to secure good servants good wages, comparatively speaking, must be paid. Many farmers have discovered this, and in the district men are being given more than the minimum demanded by the Union, but, on the other hand, a number have failed to realise that efficient service requires an adequate wage.

ROTHWELL & DISTRICT NEWS.

Rothwell Methodist Institute will play Harehills Liberals in the first round of the Leeds and District Billiard Championship Competition.

NEW YEAR'S PARTY.—In connection with the Wesleyan Chapel a New Year's Party was held in the Wesleyan Schoolroom on Monday night. A very happy time was spent. A small charge was made, and the proceeds will go towards the Sunday School stall at the forthcoming bazaar.

NEW ORGAN.—The Primitive Methodists of Rothwell are best on having a new organ and various efforts are on foot in order to raise funds. On Sunday the members of the Robin Hood United Methodist Church choir paid a visit to Rothwell, and gave the cantata "The Great Light." The choir sang well under the conductorship of Mr C. H. Pickas.

LEEDS WEST RIDING PETTY SESSIONS.—The magistrates at the Leeds West Riding Petty Session on Tuesday were Mr J. W. Morkill (in the chair), Col. Sugar Firth, and Major Calverley, Mr S. Hudson, Mr R. Kitson, and Mr E. Parkin.

CHURCH CLOCK.—On Saturday the clock of the church chimed the hours for the first time after a silence of over two months. The clock is a good timekeeper, and, unlike the one at the Council offices, can be relied upon. It is anticipated that the church bells will soon be in order.

SUNDAY POSTAL DELIVERY.—Speaking of the disadvantages of not having a Sunday delivery, Mr S. R. Chadwick, who proposed at a meeting of the Rothwell Council on Monday night, that the postmaster be asked to grant a delivery of letters each Sunday in the Rothwell area, said he very often received letters on a Monday morning reporting cases of illness, and which, had the letters been received on the Sunday, he could have visited the people. Monday was too late, as he could not possibly go.

TEMPERANCE.—In connection with the Rothwell Branch of the Women's Total Abstinence Union a "social" was held in the Wesleyan Schoolroom on Thursday evening. There was a large company present, and a very enjoyable time was spent. Games were engaged in, and during the evening solos were contributed by Mr. T. Bailey, Mr Southwart, Mr Hampson, and Mrs. L. Ineson, while a trio was rendered by Mrs Southwart, Miss Boys, and Miss Barbram. A humorous duet, given by Mrs Boys and Mrs. Southwart, was also greatly appreciated. Mrs Young presided over the gathering, and Mrs Barbram ably accompanied the musical items. Refreshments were provided.

PREFERRED TO TAKE THE CONSEQUENCES.—At the Leeds West Riding Petty Sessions on Tuesday Bessy Priestley, of Rothwell, summoned her husband for maintenance. A separation order was made against ben husband, John Priestley, on December 2nd, for ten shillings a week. The arrears amounted to £2 10s.—five weeks' payment. Defendant said there was a home ready for the woman if she would go back, but Mrs Priestley refused to go back. The Clerk: You will have to pay or else take the consequences. Defendant: I will take the consequences. The Bench sent Priestley to prison for one month.

DRINK.—At the Leeds West Riding Petty Sessions on Tuesday Walter Lord Taylor, a labourer, of Rothwell, was summoned for having been drunk and disorderly at Rothwell on Wednesday, December 24th. P.C. Leahy stated that about 10.20 p.m. he saw the defendant staggering about Commercial Street, and he was using bad language. He told him to go home, and defendant took no notice. Asked if he had anything to say, Taylor said he did not remember seeing the officer, but for all that he was not drunk. (Laughter). P.C. Bosomworth gave corroborative evidence, and said he saw defendant come out of the Bull Inn. A fine of 5s. and costs was imposed.

ALLERTON BYWATER

On behalf of Lock Lane Medical Charities' Society, Mr A. Townend has sent £10 to Leeds Infirmary.

BOWERS ALLERTON

On Saturday afternoon a football match was played between Bowers Allerton and Normanton Y.M.C., and the former won by eight goals to nil. A Mission Service, for the spiritual welfare of the village Mr Fred Smith, of Chesterfield, is conducting a nine days' mission in the Mission Hall. Mr Smith is very well respected for his good work done in his two previous missions, and the services are being well attended.

MEN'S FRIDAY NIGHT CLASS.—On Friday Mr Ted Brocklesby explained to a large class the changes that were brought about by England by the Saxon and Norman Conquests. The essayist first described England before the invasion, and said the English lived in wooden huts, although, stream, road, the houses of the villeins, and other classes of labour. Around these were common grass land, accessible to all for grazing purposes, and the English system was the three field system; one-third of this was always idle, and surrounding the lot was waste land. The feudal system was of economic growth; raiders occasionally abandoned the villagers' produce, and an appeal was made to the strongest villager, who organised resisting gangs or soldiers. In return for this the other villagers worked several days each week for him, which made him rich, and he thus grew into a feudal lord. William the Conqueror had experience of the feudal system in North Germany, and when he came here he organised and placed on a solid foundation feudalism in England. He formed townships, and periodically he sent commissioners to the shire courts, and they, with local juries, administered justice. This was the foundation of our assize court system. The justices was William's chief administrator, and in the time of William II. he was made Prime Minister, and he and the Chancellor were drawn from the clergy. Many other points of interest were developed in the discussion which followed, many years.

CARLTON

WHY?—The postmaster of Wakefield does not consider Carlton of sufficient importance to receive money order business in connection with the local post office. Esse Aridsey has two offices where money orders are issued.

DRINK.—At the Leeds West Riding Petty Sessions on Tuesday Thomas Simpson, a miner, of Carlton, was summoned for being drunk and disorderly at Rothwell on the night of Boxing Day. P.C. Bosomworth proved the offence, and defendant was fined 7s. 6d. and costs.

WHAT THE POLICEMAN WAS OFFERED.—At the Leeds West Riding Petty Sessions on Tuesday Samuel Bates and Herbert Packard, miners, of Carlton, were summoned for having been drunk and disorderly in Carlton Lane, Rothwell, on Christmas night. P.C. Leahy proved the offences, and said Bates offered him 2s. 6d. to "make it all right." Each defendant was fined 5s. and costs.

CROSSGATES.

On Wednesday evening at the meeting of Crossgates Wesley Guild the address took the form of a "New Year's Message," by Mr R. Taylor, of Harehills.

LEEDS AND CROSSGATES.—A contemporary says: —"Mr H. L. Cancellor, barrister-at-law, has been appointed as arbitrator to settle the question of the equitable adjustment of finances as between the Tadcaster Rural District Council and the Leeds Corporation, which has arisen by reason of the inclusion of the Crossgates Ward, which was part of the rural district, in the Leeds Corporation. The amount of Tadcaster's claim is £18,759. This is not entertained by the Leeds Corporation, and negotiations between the parties have been fruitless. The Tadcaster Union have made application to the Local Government Board for the appointment of an arbitrator in respect of the same area. The exact amount of this has not as yet been fixed, but it is probable that the sum involved will be considerably below £5,000. In this case the principal point of discussion between the respective Unions may be in regard to the term of years for the capitalisation of rateable value, and it is probable that the Leeds Board will ask for a shorter period than fifteen years, upon which the Tadcaster Union's claim is based."

We may state that the matter was before the District Council on Monday, and arrangements were made for the arbitration proceedings, which will take place next month in London.

Mr Kenneth Stott, son of Mr W. W. Stott, of Crossgates, has passed the minor examination of the Pharmaceutical Society in London, and is now a fully qualified chemist and druggist.

GOOD WORK.—On Saturday the members of the Crossgates Working Men's Club entertained over 400 children to a substantial tea at the Saville Green Mission Room. This was followed by a concert in the evening by the Merry Heart pierrot troupe (Leeds), and from the excitement and enthusiasm aroused the annual event was a great success. The children had a very happy time.

CHILDREN'S PARTY.—In connection with Court Crossgates, I.O.F., a children's party was held in the Wesleyan Schoolroom on Saturday afternoon, and the function, which was promoted by the Social Committee of the Court, consisting of Bros. H. Mann (Chairman), Fidgett, Fisher, Lewis, and Whitfield, was a most successful one. The wives of the members of the committee, assisted by a few other ladies, carried out all the arrangements for the tea, and excellent fare was provided for the little guests, who numbered over 120. In the evening children had a delightful time—Bro. W. J. Powell, C.R., presiding. Miss Whitfield played a pianoforte solo, and Miss Botford gave two fancy dances, while the principal item performers were Mr Harvey, who gave a ventriloquial entertainment, and sang humorous songs; Mr Bean, who mystified the guests with his smart conjuring; and Bro. A. R. Milford, humorist, who is always popular at local gatherings. Miss Fisher discharged the duties of accompanist with efficiency. Games and dancing were engaged in by the children, and in the course of the evening Santa Claus (personated by Bro. J. Fisher) made his appearance, and presented new pennies and chocolate to the little ones, who were also supplied with fifties, oranges, and bananas. Bros. Fisher and Berry acted as M.C.'s. The children had a thoroughly enjoyable time, and the Foresters will in all probability make the gathering an annual one.

WATER RENT.—At the Leeds West Riding Petty Sessions on Tuesday Herbert Crossland, an engineman, of Garforth, was summoned by Mrs Hannah Elizabeth Turner, of Garforth, for assault. Last week Mrs Turner made application to the Bench for permission to withdraw the summons, but was told she must bring Crossland to the Court. On Tuesday when the case came on the Clerk reported that he had received a letter from Mrs Turner stating that she was too ill to appear. She still wished to withdraw the summons, and the magistrates dismissed the case.

PICTURE HOUSE.—Unusually good business was done at the Picture House during New Year's week, and the management are being maintained during the present week. That this hall should retain its popularity is a very natural result of a successful endeavour on the part of the manager to provide the best of everything that comes along, be it pathetic, sensational, educational, or humorous. During the first part of the current week "The Tiger Man" has proved a thoroughly powerful drama, and to-night and Saturday a picture, entitled "Lead, kindly light," inspired by the beautiful hymn of that name, is being screened. On Monday a three Pictorial Edition of the hymn is vocally woven into the story by Madame Davies, who sang to "The Rosary" with such marked success. During the first half of next week "Rosalie, Queen of Surrey," a play in which a shy and simple girl contends against a fascinating widow and comes out victorious, is the chief feature, whilst for the second half of the week "The Man in Black" holds pride of place in the programme. This is a sensational detective story, revealing the exploits of a mysterious, crafty, and slippery villain. The film is nearly 4,000 feet in length. Other items of humour and interest complete the programmes. For times and prices see advert.

GREAT PRESTON

On Saturday afternoon a match was played between Great Preston and Benson Lane Red Rose, and it was drawn.

The village hockey club held a successful dance on Saturday evening. Mr G. Nowell was M.C., and Mrs E. Gill officiated at the piano.

HALTON

BILLIARDS.—In the Non-Political Clubs' League there have been many good breaks made during the first half; but it hardly appears possible for the fine run of 72, made by Mr H. Thomas (Halton), to be beaten for the break prize. The aggregate, 500, given by Mr E. Green (Halton) has the fine record of having won each of the 10 games he has played.

DISMISSED.—When the case of John Batey, ranger, of Halton, who was summoned by his wife for assault, came up at the Leeds West Riding Petty Sessions on Tuesday Mrs Batey failed to appear, and the case was allowed to stand over. However, as the prosecutrix was still wanting when the case was called again, the charge was dismissed.

KIPPAX

On behalf of Kippax and Ledstone Medical Charities Committee, Mr R. Plows has sent £10 to Leeds Infirmary.

PARISHES LEAGUE.—In connection with the Warren House Habitation a free concert was given in the Church Schoolroom on Tuesday evening. Mr G. C. H. Wheler, M.P., presided, and he was supported by Mr Walter Robinson (Allerton), Mr G. Cawood, Mr Hopkins, and Mr W. Birkinshaw. There was a large attendance. Addresses were given by Mr W. H. Le Wallis, and Lieut. Beaghey, R.N., and the Rev. E. B. Smith. Mr Wallis spoke on the question of Home Rule for Ireland. He said self-government was not the desire of the Irish people. The welfare of the Irish people depended not upon Home Rule, but on social reforms. Home Rule for Ireland should, he thought, be decided without the Nationalist vote. They provided two-thirds of the revenue of Ireland. The existence of the Liberal Government was justified by only one Act—Old Age Pensions. Lieut. Beaghey spoke on the work of the Parishes League, and the latter gave an address on Welsh Disestablishment. If the Nonconformists in England, he said, would raise their voices against it the Church in Wales would not be disestablished. It was neither just nor right to take away the endowments which had been left to the Welsh Church by private benefactors, and which had belonged to the Church for 250 years. No fewer than 193 parishes in Wales could not have clergymen if the weekly stipend of these men was brought down to 5s. That was what the Bill would do. An excellent musical programme was given by Miss Charlesworth, Madame Holroyd, Messrs L. R. Brunton, O. M. Overend, and John Miller (humorist), while Mr Bradley Sayer was the accompanist. Thy usual votes of thanks were passed at the close.

On Saturday afternoon a football match was played between Kippax Woodville and Oulton St. John's, and Kippax won by two goals to one.

SOCIAL.—The young people connected with the U. M. Church held a "social" in the church on Wednesday evening. Games and amusements were engaged in, and refreshments were provided.

SILVER WEDDING.—The silver wedding of Mr and Mrs John Smith was celebrated on New Year's Day. Tea was provided in the Primitive Methodist Schoolroom, and there was a large number present. Mrs Dickinson, Dr. Greaves, Rev. T. Cody, Messrs G. Armitage, W. Verity, J. W. Verity, D. Hargreaves, J. Gavin, E. B. Ackergrill, W. A. Appleyard, J. W. Carr, Banister, Conyers, W. Schofield, Hemingway, J. R. Chappell, T. Bennett, and W. Lunn, with the Clerk (Mr F. W. Moon).

It was reported that during the fortnight there had been three deaths in the Workhouse, and the number of vagrants relieved was 40 as against 59 last year, a decrease of 19.

CHILDREN'S HOMES

The minutes of the Children's Homes Committee showed that the complaint made by Father Cody at the last Board meeting that there had been irregularities in regard to the adoption and subsequent removal to Leeds, without the knowledge of the committee, of a child was fully considered.

The Clerk submitted all the papers in the matter, and stated that the trouble all arose through his declining to consent in August, 1912, to the child being handed over to a stranger without knowledge of the committee, and against the wish of her grandparents on the authority of an invalid agreement witnessed by Father Cody which the mother (now deceased) disclaimed when subsequently before the committee. The reports and minutes were read, and both the Clerk and superintendent stated that so far as the removal was concerned the matter was dealt with in the ordinary way.

The committee after carefully reconsidering the facts, expressed themselves satisfied that everything had been done in a regular and satisfactory manner, and that the Clerk and superintendent had acted bona-fide, straight-forwardly, and in the due discharge of their duties; and further that the comments made by Father Cody are without foundation.

A letter was received from the Rothwell Urban District Council stating that they are unable to accept the offer of £18 per annum as rent for the Workhouse premises, and that their figure of £30 is based upon the cost of the estimated consumption. The Clerk reported that he had pointed out that no allowance appears to have been made by the Council for the disinfection which should exist between a compulsory supply by rent for domestic purposes and a voluntary one by meter for trade purposes, and enquired how much per 1,000 gallons the water rents work out at in other cases, but that he had not received a reply.

It was resolved that the Clerk ask for a reply to his letter.

Letters were received from the West Riding Secondary Education Committee stating that they had decided to contribute one half of Herbert Ainsworth's mid-day meal on condition that the boy takes it at school, and that the Guardians pay the other half.

It was resolved that the Education Committee's offer be accepted, and the boy be provided with dinner at school when there. The report from the Central High Grade School on Ainsworth's progress during the past term was received, and found satisfactory.

Letters were also received from Mr Will Crooks, M.P., stating that he had in his possession a letter which Leeds recently was the case of a boy (in receipt of out-relief), who gained a scholarship about 16 years ago, and that the suggestion that the Guardians' grants in aid be reduced in Poor Law schools was a mistake.

A letter was received from Mr G. Begrie Smart, chief inspector in Canada of British immigrant children, with reference to Margaret Egan's proposed entrance into a convent, stating that he found on equiry that she had left Quebec, and gone to be a dining-room maid at St. Gabriel's Academy, Montreal, that he had pointed out to the superintendent of the Catholic Emigration Association's Home the rights and powers of the Guardians over the girl, and that she is quite willing at present to make any final decision as to her future.

It was resolved that the matter be adjourned for the further replies from Canada.

ROTHWELL COUNCIL AND HOMES' WATER

Mr Lunn asked what the difficulty was between the Children's Homes and the Rothwell Council. He was told that the Guardians were only prepared to pay what was the actual cost or anything like the actual cost for the supply of water to the Homes. He did not think that two bodies using ratepayers' money should throw on an assumed rental.

Rothwell Council they had been paying by meter, but they thought they ought to be assessed on an assumed rental.

The Clerk said the Guardians claimed that the supply to the Homes was for domestic purposes as supply to other dwelling-house. The Guardians were entitled to a supply at a minimum rate. The Rothwell Council had asked the Guardians to make a proper payment, but when they had done so the Council made terms in excess. At the last meeting the committee were waiting for the Rothwell Council to say what the cost was for domestic purposes. The committee, he added, was ready to pay a reasonable sum.

Mr Armitage said that so far as he knew the Rothwell Council did not want the Children's Homes Committee to pay anything more than they actually got, and on the other hand they did not want them to pay less. The Homes had been supplied by meter, and they had been paying on a scale. The Guardians were offering £18 for what it cost the Rothwell Council £44.

Mr Butterick said the charges ought to be based on the rateable value of a dwelling-house.

Mr Gavins: Are we to understand that the Rothwell Council want more than a private house rental?

The Clerk: The Homes are under the Waterworks Act the same as a dwelling house.

Mr Butterick: There is some difference between a private house and the Homes.

Mr Butterick said he did not think the Board wanted to get anything out of the Council.

The matter then dropped.

CHARGE OF UNFAIR TREATMENT.

Father Cody moved an amendment that the portion of the minutes relating to the refusal of a child to Leeds be referred back, as he objected to the resolution of the Committee. He charged the Committee with not dealing with the matter in a fair manner.

Mr J. W. Verity seconded the amendment.

Mr Butterick said Father Cody had made a great mistake in not being present at the meeting of the Homes Committee. The Committee had expressed the view that they would have preferred Father Cody to have been there. Considerable time was spent in considering the matter, and because Father Cody was not there and he had not confidence in the Committee that they had done their duty to him and the child, it would be a breach of faith to go back, and for the members to spend perhaps another hour or an hour and a half in again discussing the matter. (Hear, hear). However, he would rather it go back than Father Cody think the Board were not treating him fairly.

Upon a vote being taken the amendment was lost, and the minutes were passed.

WORKHOUSE COMMITTEE.

The minutes of the Workhouse Committee showed that a further report was received from the Nursing Sub-Committee setting out in detail their renewed enquiries concerning the possibility of providing instruction in midwifery as a part of their training to enable probationer nurses to qualify for the C.M.B. certificate, and stating that on the understanding that the staff will share the work of the absent nurses amongst them, and thereby avoid the expense of another additional nurse, they made the following recommendations:—(1) That arrangements be made with the authorities of the Leeds Maternity Hospital for such of the probationer nurses now or hereafter in the service of the Guardians or may be willing, and shall be considered suitable, to receive a course of four months' training in midwifery at such hospital at the cost of the Guardians. (2) That probationer nurses be given the option on appointment or before the end of their second year's service, of electing to be provided with the special facilities proposed to be provided for training in midwifery and surgical nursing, and that if accepted as suitable they be required to enter into a supplementary agreement to continue their training for a fourth year at the third year's remuneration, viz:—£20 per annum and emoluments, on the understanding that only one half of the cash salary will be paid during the period for which the Guardians are providing for their tuition elsewhere; (3) That the Clerk be instructed to draw up a form of supplementary agreement embodying the foregoing proposals for execution by all probationer nurses accepted for a fourth year's training, and that an important item of certificated nurses' duties in midwifery and surgical nursing be awarded to such nurses; (4) That the Workhouse Committee make arrangements if at all possible to replace the nursing staff of the feeding of infants' in the house nursery.

It was agreed that the matter stand over for further consideration at the next meeting.

The master reported that of the inmates allowed out on Boxing Day, 5 returned drunk, 3 stayed out all night, and one got into the custody of the police, while one man, who went out on leave on Monday, had not returned.

It was ordered that the offenders be dealt with according to regulations.

The minutes were passed.

MR LUNN CALLED TO ORDER

The question of distributing coals to recipients of outdoor-relief was again discussed upon the report of the third relieving officer, Mr Armstrong, being read by the Clerk. The report was to the effect that discrimination could be used in certain cases.

Mr Lunn said at the last meeting they heard the reports of the other relieving officers, who they did not feel justified in discriminating. Altogether they had 200 householders in receipt of outdoor relief, and of that number 250 were, to the information of the relieving officers, not deserving cases. He did not think it would be advisable to discriminate. He again proposed the resolution that each recipient of out-door relief receive one cwt. of coal per week.

Mr J. W. Verity seconded.

Mr Schofield moved as an amendment that the Guardians consider each individual case as it come before them, whether they should coal or otherwise. He had no cases in Mr Lunn's district where it did not cost them a cent for coal, and he did not want the Guardians to give coal where it was not needed.

Mr Conyers said that what Mr Schofield had moved was unfair, as some who were receiving out-door relief would rather starve than ask for coal.

Mr Appleyard said the relief given by the Board was only adequate for the warm months of the year.

Mr Lunn remarked that Mr Schofield was the steamer man on the Board in the distribution of relief.

Mr Schofield demanded a withdrawal of the remark.

Mr Butterick called Mr Lunn to order, remarking that he hoped they had got beyond introducing personalities into their discussions.

Mr Gavins, in supporting the resolution, said he had waited to see if any members of the Board could give any reason. The only reason they had had was that a person was seen gathering coal somewhere near a gas-house. He had seen that himself and was sorry. Another reason was that it took more to keep up a person in winter than in summer. He thought they could trust the relieving officers he had come with the idea that some of the members had gone into the question, and would be prepared to say there was a necessity for coal in winter for it. He supported the resolution as he found there was a reason, and he had taken it from the relieving officers' report, and he was sorry the members had not gone into the report for information. In cases of widows with children they were not giving sufficient relief. Giving figures, he said, no woman could maintain a child on 2s. 7½d. per week.

Mr Armitage called attention to the resolution passed by the Board a month ago—that relieving officers give coal in cases where it was necessary. That, he considered, was all the Board could do. The Board ought to allow the officers to deal generously with recipients of out-door relief while the bad weather lasted.

Mr Butterick reminded the Board of the reports of the first two months, in which they did not feel justified in discriminating. All those in receipt of out-door relief ought to have coal given to them; that was his opinion, and he was going to support the resolution. They knew the maximum amount of relief they could give, and he did not think they were going out of bounds to give a bag of coal.

Mr Schofield's amendment was lost.

Mr Armitage moved, as an amendment, the resolution passed by the Board a month ago, but this was lost, and the resolution carried.

Votes of thanks to all those who had in any way helped in the Christmas festivities, both at the Workhouse and the Children's Homes, were heartily carried.

The Vicar of Selby (Dr Solloway) has been appointed the new President of the Selby Scientific Society.

STOURTON

Stourton Liberal Club will play Leeds North-East Ward Conservative Institute in the Leeds and District Billiard Championship Competition.

ON FIRE.—As the Leeds West Riding Petty Sessions on Tuesday John Lunn, a pithand, living at Stourton, was fined 1s. and costs for allowing the chimney of his house to get on fire.

P.S.A.—There was a good attendance at the weekly P.S.A. service held in the Primitive Methodist Schoolroom on Sunday afternoon. The speaker was Mr J. G. Collinson, who gave an interesting address. Mr Waterton was the organist.

LANGUAGE.—At the Leeds West Riding Petty Sessions on Tuesday Jessie Wright, a married woman, living at Stourton, was summoned for using abusive language at Stourton on Friday, December 26th, P.C. Boyes proved the case, and defendant was fined 2s. 6d. and costs. Ben Beason, cutter, of Hunslet, who was summoned for using obscene language at the same time as the other defendant, was also fined 2s. 6d. and costs.

BILLIARDS.—In the Non-Political Clubs' League Stourton St. Andrew's have the best position, but they are closely followed by British Workman's and Workhouse Recreation, and it looks as though one of these clubs will head the list. The position is the more interesting from the fact that, if either Stourton or British Workman's win, they will have to play Worsley for permanent possession of the Shield, whilst should Woodhouse win, the shield will find a "good home" at Wortley.

SEACROFT

OLD PEOPLE'S TREAT.—The usual treat was given to the old people of Seacroft in the Church School, and tea was served to forty-seven men and women by Mrs Platt, Mrs Dewhirst, Mrs W. Towlerton, and Miss Hague, assisted by Mrs H. Dobson, Mrs J. Towlerton, Miss Clark, and Miss Royner. Subsequently a musical programme was gone through, and songs were given by Miss Ryder (foreigner), and Mr P. Bearden (Leeds), violin solos by Miss Olga Bearden, and carols by the church boys, while recitations were submitted by Miss O. Bearden and Mr H. Carpenter. During the evening Mr A. Lumb presented 2lb. of tea to each woman, and two cigars to each man. Mr Walter Towlerton, hon. sec., had charge of the arrangements for the treat, which was a very enjoyable and successful one.

WOODLESFORD

IN A DISMAL COUNTRY.—In the course of a lecture by Mr H. Crowther, in Leeds Philosophical Hall on Wednesday, some coloured slides were shown, illustrating abandoned workings in a coal pit at Woodlesford, and here the lecturer gave a graphic description of the manner in which he obtained the pictures. These workings, he said, were overgrown with fungi, some of which were as much as 7 feet in height, and from 4 to 5 feet in width.

Crossgates Literary Society.

LECTURE BY REV. E. BELL

In connection with Crossgates Literary Society, the Rev. Edwin Bell, of Crossgates, delivered a capital lecture, entitled "A Tour in Northern India," in the Wesleyan Schoolroom, before a large audience. Mr E. Hawksworth (President) was in the chair.

The lecture, which was illustrated with admirable selection of slides, was an account of a journey made by Mr Bell during his residence in India as a missionary. The various modes of travel—by boat, bullock, waggon, and train—were graphically described. Starting from Calcutta, the audience were in imagination, conveyed to the hill country of Darjeeling, the region of tea plantations and sanatoria, and thence to Benares, Jeypore, and Delhi, and, on returning, at Cawnpore. Views of Government House, Mohammedan mosques, native scenes, the Botanical Gardens, the car of Juggernaut, and the Burning Ghat, a prayer were shown to portray the life of the peoples. The various religions —Hinduism, Mohammedanism, Brahmanism, Buddhism were described, and the pessimism of the people was accounted for by the fatalism of their creeds. Buddhism, the religion without a God, was now practically extinct in Ceylon. Of the 80 millions of Mohammedans, 60 millions were residents of our Indian Empire. There was much to admire in these heathen beliefs, in which the virtues of kindness and patience were extolled. The descriptions of the famous Taj Mahal, that poem in marble, with its lofty minarets, delicately traced screens and graceful cupolas, was a fine piece of word painting, as also was the description of the statue of the "Angel of the Resurrection" at Cawnpore—that noble monument to the memory of the English massacre in 1857.

On the motion of Mr T. K. Diggle, seconded by Mr Mitchell, a hearty vote of thanks was accorded the lecturer.

The lantern was creditably manipulated by Mr H. Johnson.

Mrs Elizabeth Kitson, of May Lodge, Scarborough, widow of Mr James Kitson, of Roundhay, left £8,624.

Roundhay hockey players had a match at Meanwood on Saturday afternoon with Leeds Corinthians, who won by three goals to nil.

On Saturday afternoon a lacrosse match was played between Roundhay and Heckmondwike Wanderers, and the latter won by five goals to four, seven.

ABERFORD WESLEYAN CHURCH.—In connection with this church a sale of work and apron sale was held on Thursday week. At the opening ceremony the Rev. R. W. Davidson, of Boston Spa, presided, and the Sunday School children sang several pieces and then declared the sale open. There were a cake stall, a toy stall, and the ladies of the sewing meeting had charge of an apron and fancy stall. Music was supplied by Messrs Whitehouse's orchestra. Mr and Mrs Mallett, and Mr Simpson (Garforth), Mr Morris (Monk Fryston), Mrs Jenkinson, etc., and Miss C. Westerman gave recitations. The proceeds amounted to over £20.

THE LATE DR HOLMES.—The death took place on Wednesday, at Boston Spa, of Dr. Frederick Holmes, who was a familiar figure in Leeds as an officer and public vaccinator under the Leeds Union. Dr. Holmes, who was in his 83rd year, was appointed medical officer and public vaccinator for Rothwell district of the Leeds Union on October 11th, 1865, and for 42 years he retained that position, advancing years compelling him to relinquish it in 1907. During that time some thousands of patients came under his care, and as public vaccinator he dealt with over 40,000 children, the district he served being one of the largest in the Leeds Union. Prior to his connection with Poor Law work, and before he commenced practice on his own account, Dr Holmes served as house surgeon for five years at the old Dispensary in Templar Street, and his ultimate retirement from medical work in Leeds was received with feelings of deep regret by the poor people among whom he laboured for so many years.

HUNSLET BOARD OF GUARDIANS.

ROTHWELL COUNCIL AND A WATER SUPPLY.

COAL DISTRIBUTION AGAIN.

MR LUNN CALLED TO ORDER.

The fortnightly meeting of the Hunslet Board of Guardians was held at the Union Offices on Wednesday—Mr J. Butterick presiding. In the absence of the chairman and vice-chairman, Dr. Greaves, present were Mrs Dickinson, Dr. Greaves, Rev. T. Cody, Messrs G. Armitage, W. Verity, J. W. Verity, D. Hargreaves, J. Gavin, E. B. Ackergrill, W. A. Appleyard, J. W. Carr, Banister, Conyers, W. Schofield, Hemingway, J. R. Chappell, T. Bennett, and W. Lunn, with the Clerk (Mr F. W. Moon).

It was reported that during the fortnight there had been three deaths in the Workhouse, and the number of vagrants relieved was 40 as against 59 last year, a decrease of 19.

CHILDREN'S HOMES

The minutes of the Children's Homes Committee showed that the complaint made by Father Cody at the last Board meeting that there had been irregularities in regard to the adoption and subsequent removal to Leeds, without the knowledge of the committee, of a child was fully considered.

The Clerk submitted all the papers in the matter, and stated that the trouble all arose through his declining to consent in August, 1912, to the child being handed over to a stranger without knowledge of the committee, and against the wish of her grandparents on the authority of an invalid agreement witnessed by Father Cody which the mother (now deceased) disclaimed when subsequently before the committee. The reports and minutes were read, and both the Clerk and superintendent stated that so far as the removal was concerned the matter was dealt with in the ordinary way.

The committee after carefully reconsidering the facts, expressed themselves satisfied that everything had been done in a regular and satisfactory manner, and that the Clerk and superintendent had acted bona-fide, straight-forwardly, and in the due discharge of their duties; and further that the comments made by Father Cody are without foundation.

A letter was received from the Rothwell Urban District Council stating that they are unable to accept the offer of £18 per annum as rent for the Workhouse premises, and that their figure of £30 is based upon the cost of the estimated consumption. The Clerk reported that he had pointed out that no allowance appears to have been made by the Council for the disinfection which should exist between a compulsory supply by rent for domestic purposes and a voluntary one by meter for trade purposes, and enquired how much per 1,000 gallons the water rents work out at in other cases, but that he had not received a reply.

It was resolved that the Clerk ask for a reply to his letter.

Letters were received from the West Riding Secondary Education Committee stating that they had decided to contribute one half of Herbert Ainsworth's mid-day meal on condition that the boy takes it at school, and that the Guardians pay the other half.

It was resolved that the Education Committee's offer be accepted, and the boy be provided with dinner at school when there. The report from the Central High Grade School on Ainsworth's progress during the past term was received, and found satisfactory.

Letters were also received from Mr Will Crooks, M.P., stating that he had in his possession a letter which Leeds recently was the case of a boy (in receipt of out-relief), who gained a scholarship about 16 years ago, and that the suggestion that the Guardians' grants in aid be reduced in Poor Law schools was a mistake.

A letter was received from Mr G. Begrie Smart, chief inspector in Canada of British immigrant children, with reference to Margaret Egan's proposed entrance into a convent, stating that he found on equiry that she had left Quebec, and gone to be a dining-room maid at St. Gabriel's Academy, Montreal, that he had pointed out to the superintendent of the Catholic Emigration Association's Home the rights and powers of the Guardians over the girl, and that she is quite willing at present to make any final decision as to her future.

It was resolved that the matter be adjourned for the further replies from Canada.

ROTHWELL COUNCIL AND HOMES' WATER

Mr Lunn asked what the difficulty was between the Children's Homes and the Rothwell Council. He was told that the Guardians were only prepared to pay what was the actual cost or anything like the actual cost for the supply of water to the Homes. He did not think that two bodies using ratepayers' money should throw on an assumed rental.

The Clerk said the Guardians claimed that the supply to the Homes was for domestic purposes as supply to other dwelling-house. The Guardians were entitled to a supply at a minimum rate. The Rothwell Council had asked the Guardians to make a proper payment, but when they had done so the Council made terms in excess. At the last meeting the committee were waiting for the Rothwell Council to say what the cost was for domestic purposes. The committee, he added, was ready to pay a reasonable sum.

Mr Armitage said that so far as he knew the Rothwell Council did not want the Children's Homes Committee to pay anything more than they actually got, and on the other hand they did not want them to pay less. The Homes had been supplied by meter, and they had been paying on a scale. The Guardians were offering £18 for what it cost the Rothwell Council £44.

Mr Butterick said the charges ought to be based on the rateable value of a dwelling-house.

Mr Gavins: Are we to understand that we have to pay more water than a private house?

The Clerk: The Homes are under the Waterworks Act the same as a dwelling house.

Mr Butterick: There is some difference between a private house and the Homes.

Mr Butterick said he did not think the Board wanted to get anything out of the Council.

The matter then dropped.

CHARGE OF UNFAIR TREATMENT.

Father Cody moved an amendment that the portion of the minutes relating to the refusal of a child to Leeds be referred back, as he objected to the resolution of the Committee. He charged the Committee with not dealing with the matter in a fair manner.

Mr J. W. Verity seconded the amendment.

Mr Butterick said Father Cody had made a great mistake in not being present at the meeting of the Homes Committee. The Committee had expressed the view that they would have preferred Father Cody to have been there. Considerable time was spent in considering the matter, and because Father Cody was not there and he had not confidence in the Committee that they had done their duty to him and the child, it would be a breach of faith to go back, and for the members to spend perhaps another hour or an hour and a half in again discussing the matter. (Hear, hear). However, he would rather it go back than Father Cody think the Board were not treating him fairly.

Upon a vote being taken the amendment was lost, and the minutes were passed.

WORKHOUSE COMMITTEE.

The minutes of the Workhouse Committee showed that a further report was received from the Nursing Sub-Committee setting out in detail their renewed enquiries concerning the possibility of providing instruction in midwifery as a part of their training to enable probationer nurses to qualify for the C.M.B. certificate, and stating that on the understanding that the staff will share the work of the absent nurses amongst them, and thereby avoid the expense of another additional nurse, they made the following recommendations:—(1) That arrangements be made with the authorities of the Leeds Maternity Hospital for such of the probationer nurses now or hereafter in the service of the Guardians or may be willing, and shall be considered suitable, to receive a course of four months' training in midwifery at such hospital at the cost of the Guardians. (2) That probationer nurses be given the option on appointment or before the end of their second year's service, of electing to be provided with the special facilities proposed to be provided for training in midwifery and surgical nursing, and that if accepted as suitable they be required to enter into a supplementary agreement to continue their training for a fourth year at the third year's remuneration, viz:—£20 per annum and emoluments, on the understanding that only one half of the cash salary will be paid during the period for which the Guardians are providing for their tuition elsewhere; (3) That the Clerk be instructed to draw up a form of supplementary agreement embodying the foregoing proposals for execution by all probationer nurses accepted for a fourth year's training, and that an important item of certificated nurses' duties in midwifery and surgical nursing be awarded to such nurses; (4) That the Workhouse Committee make arrangements if at all possible to replace the nursing staff of the feeding of infants' in the house nursery.

It was agreed that the matter stand over for further consideration at the next meeting.

The master reported that of the inmates allowed out on Boxing Day, 5 returned drunk, 3 stayed out all night, and one got into the custody of the police, while one man, who went out on leave on Monday, had not returned.

It was ordered that the offenders be dealt with according to regulations.

The minutes were passed.

MR LUNN CALLED TO ORDER

The question of distributing coals to recipients of outdoor-relief was again discussed upon the report of the third relieving officer, Mr Armstrong, being read by the Clerk. The report was to the effect that discrimination could be used in certain cases.

Mr Lunn said at the last meeting they heard the reports of the other relieving officers, who they did not feel justified in discriminating. Altogether they had 200 householders in receipt of outdoor relief, and of that number 250 were, to the information of the relieving officers, not deserving cases. He did not think it would be advisable to discriminate. He again proposed the resolution that each recipient of out-door relief receive one cwt. of coal per week.

Mr J. W. Verity seconded.

Mr Schofield moved as an amendment that the Guardians consider each individual case as it come before them, whether they should coal or otherwise. He had no cases in Mr Lunn's district where it did not cost them a cent for coal, and he did not want the Guardians to give coal where it was not needed.

Mr Conyers said that what Mr Schofield had moved was unfair, as some who were receiving out-door relief would rather starve than ask for coal.

Mr Appleyard said the relief given by the Board was only adequate for the warm months of the year.

Mr Lunn remarked that Mr Schofield was the steamer man on the Board in the distribution of relief.

Mr Schofield demanded a withdrawal of the remark.

Mr Butterick called Mr Lunn to order, remarking that he hoped they had got beyond introducing personalities into their discussions.

Mr Gavins, in supporting the resolution, said he had waited to see if any members of the Board could give any reason. The only reason they had had was that a person was seen gathering coal somewhere near a gas-house. He had seen that himself and was sorry. Another reason was that it took more to keep up a person in winter than in summer. He thought they could trust the relieving officers he had come with the idea that some of the members had gone into the question, and would be prepared to say there was a necessity for coal for it. He supported the resolution as he found there was a reason, and he had taken it from the relieving officers' report, and he was sorry the members had not gone into the report for information. In cases of widows with children they were not giving sufficient relief. Giving figures, he said, no woman could maintain a child on 2s. 7½d. per week.

Mr Armitage called attention to the resolution passed by the Board a month ago—that relieving officers give coal in cases where it was necessary. That, he considered, was all the Board could do. The Board ought to allow the officers to deal generously with recipients of out-door relief while the bad weather lasted.

Mr Butterick reminded the Board of the reports of the first two months, in which they did not feel justified in discriminating. All those in receipt of out-door relief ought to have coal given to them; that was his opinion, and he was going to support the resolution. They knew the maximum amount of relief they could give, and he did not think they were going out of bounds to give a bag of coal.

Mr Schofield's amendment was lost.

Mr Armitage moved, as an amendment, the resolution passed by the Board a month ago, but this was lost, and the resolution carried.

Votes of thanks to all those who had in any way helped in the Christmas festivities, both at the Workhouse and the Children's Homes, were heartily carried.

GARFORTH URBAN DISTRICT COUNCIL.

HEALTH OF THE DISTRICT.

ELECTRIC LIGHTING—CHEAP RAILWAY FARES.

The monthly meeting of Garforth Urban District Council was held at the offices at Garforth on Wednesday night—Mr J. B. Breed (Chairman) presiding. The other members present were Messrs R. Routledge, jun. (vice-chairman), R. Routledge, sen., H. Gascoigne, H. Chappel, T. S. Slater, and W. W. Hartley, with the Clerk (Mr A. E. Carr), the medical officer (Dr. Pickersgill), and the surveyor (Mr Thomas Abbot).

Mr S. Backhouse made application to the Council for an allotment of an acre of allotment-acre, and it was agreed to offer him the old sewage works at £2 10s. per annum.

Mr J. S. Fox, Main Street, applied for a permit to enable him to store motor spirit, and it was granted.

Plans for the conversion of privies into w.c.'s at the late Dr Pogson's property and at Midshopper Buildings were passed.

In regard to a request by the Territorial Association as to the Council giving assistance in certifying statements made by men, it was agreed to accede to it.

The scavenging contract with Mr Alfred Reed was signed and sealed.

A letter was read from the county surveyor stating that the County Highways Committee were prepared to receive applications for surface tarring roads, particularly in populous places, and they did not feel justified in discriminating. The surveyor was instructed to go into the matter, and report to the Highways Committee at their next meeting.

HIGHWAYS AND SANITARY COMMITTEE

At a meeting of the Highways, Sanitary, and General Purposes Committee a letter was read from Mrs Susannah Backhouse applying for an increase of wages on behalf of her son, Samuel, at Backhouse, and it was agreed that the Council be recommended to increase his wages 2s. per week.

It was decided that a plan of four privies to be converted into w.c.'s at the rear of Prospect Terrace, for Mr Horsfield, be recommended to the Council to be sealed, subject to the medical officer being satisfied with same.

It was agreed that a waggon of sand be ordered from Richard and Co. for use on the footpaths.

The surveyor reported that 120 ashpits in Poplar Terrace, Poplar Terrace, New Club, Barley Hill Road, Strawberry Avenue, Beech Grove Avenue, and Terrace, Sublain Place, and Hilders Square Terrace had been tarred.

A letter was read from the manager of the Garforth Gas Co. complaining of the state of the crossing opposite their works, and it was decided that the crossing should be made good, and that he be informed he must carry out the arrangement he made with the surveyor to repair half the crossing.

It was decided that two wire baskets be ordered for use at the cemetery, to be used as receptacles for rubbish.

The minutes were adopted.

WATER COMMITTEE.

At a meeting of the Water Committee the water inspector reported that for the month ended January 3rd the consumption of water was 1,355,000 gallons, an average of 38,714 gallons per day.

A letter was read from G. Mallkin asking for a reduction in his water rate, and it was decided to reply that under the new water regulations all fish shops would have to pay for the water.

A letter was read from Robert Stead, of the Old Weigh House, Garforth, asking for the water to be turned on as the pipes were laid, and it was decided to inform him that it was outside the boundary, and he must ask the Estate Office to apply to Tadcaster.

A letter was read from an allotment-holder asking for a supply of water to his allotment, and it was decided to inform him that such application could not be entertained from the owner, but the Council would be prepared to consider an application from all the allotment-holders jointly.

The minutes were approved.

HEALTH OF THE DISTRICT

The medical officer reported that during the month the health of the district had been fairly good, except that three cases of scarlet fever had occurred. Between 6th and 20th (8 males and 5 females) were registered, and six deaths (3 under six months, one 5 years, one 27, and one 77), were reported. One person belonging to this area had died outside the district.

ELECTRIC LIGHTING.

A letter was received from the Yorkshire Electric Power Co., who can already supply power in the area, stating that they intended to apply for powers to supply electricity for lighting purposes in the district, and they asked the Council's support.

Mr R. Routledge proposed that the Council approve the application of the Company for lighting powers and authorise the Clerk to support the application if called upon to do so.

Mr Slater seconded, and this was agreed to.

CHEAPER FACILITIES

In regard to the Public Rights of Way Bill, a circular was received asking the Council's support.

Mr Hartley proposed a resolution in favour of the procedure as to providing rights of way being simplified, and the cost of litigation reduced, and that the Government be urged to give facilities for the passage of the Bill through Parliament

Mr Chappel seconded, and this was adopted.

COMPENSATION WANTED

Four employees of the Council wrote stating that they thought they were entitled to some compensation for damage done to their clothes whilst engaged in tarring asphalt.

Mr Hartley: It was a dirty job, and I think they should have something.

Mr Routledge proposed that they be given a sovereign each. It was little enough if their clothes were spoilt.

Mr Slater seconded.

Mr Hartley moved that they be given an increase of 1s. per week in their wages.

The Clerk pointed out that that was not strictly in order. The application was for compensation.

The Chairman said he saw one of the men's clothes, and they were practically covered with tar.

Mr Chappel proposed that they give them 25s., which would get them a cheap working suit.

It was agreed to give them a sovereign.

REDUCED RAILWA

OUR GARDENS.

A Weekly Article specially Written for

Amateur Gardeners, Allotment Holders, &c.

By ALBERT CLARKE, Birkenshaw.

THE FLOWER GARDEN

With the exception of alterations and renewals there should not be much work outlling for attention in this department just at present. The observer of very heavy rains has made it possible to continue rolling the lawns at regular intervals much later than is usually the case. This is fortunate if only from the fact of the improved appearance created. What is more important, however, is that the grass will benefit greatly from the unusual amount of attention it has received. A lawn which receives regular attention in regard to rolling, always produces a thicker crop of fine grasses. Any intended top-dressing may be applied when the turf is so soddened with rain as to prohibit rolling being continued.

RANUNCULUSES.

Those charming and floriferous plants are best set during February. They prefer a light, sandy soil, enriched with rotten cow manure; and, considering their ease of culture, and the fact that a bed of them remains in bloom for about the two months, it is astonishing that more people do not grow them. A strong tuber may bear as many as thirty good flowers. The chief enemies of ranunculuses are frost, poverty of soil, and scorching sunshine.

The leaves begin to fade soon after flowering is over, and the roots should be taken up soon afterwards, the right time being when the leaves part from the tubers at a light pull. The roots are then freed from soil, spread out in the shade to dry, and turned often until dry and so fit to store until planting time comes round again. Unlike most bulbs these retain their growing power for several years if accidently or intentionally kept out of the ground for more than one season.

SEED

Almost every post brings a supply of seedsmen's catalogues, and this may be taken as a reminder that the time has arrived when definite plans for the year's work must be formulated. The most successful gardeners are those who give ample forethought to the work. It is never a difficult matter to form an approximate idea of the number of plants required for summer bedding, and the same remark applies to plant growing under glass. It is often more difficult to decide what subjects to grow. A perusal of an up-to-date catalogue is somewhat confusing to a new beginner. Novelties are being introduced every year, and many old favourites are being improved, with the result that there are so many really good things that the choice considerable is given to the selection of varieties one is easily apt to fall into the mistake of having too many subjects in hand at once. This is obviously bad. A comparatively few dozen of countless oddments is usually very unconvincing. A casual visitor may be impressed for a moment by the conglomeration of colour, but unless a few subjects are allowed to predominate, the whole however well filled with bloom, leaves no lasting impression upon the memory. In those gardens where the majority of the bedding plants are raised annually from seed sown at home special subjects should be selected to form the main feature of the summer display. That grand old favourite the Snap-dragon (Antirrhinum), is worthy of a place in every garden, and flower lovers are under a debt of gratitude to Messrs Sutton for the wonderful improvements they have effected in the habit and colouring of these flowers. Plants raised from their seed come true to colour almost to a plant, and the richness and diversity of the colours is remarkable. Northern gardeners have been somewhat shy of cultivating the Antirrhinum on a large scale because of the rather protracted season of growth required to bring it to the flowering stage. This difficulty may be overcome by making a start earlier than is usual with the ordinary run of plants treated as half-hardy annuals. The seed should be sown about the second week in February in a warm house. When the seedlings are about half an inch high they may be transferred to a cooler temperature. When the second pair of leaves form they may be pricked into pans or boxes in the usual way and grown on steadily until bedding time. Under this treatment they commence to bloom in July and continue until well into the autumn. There are three sections—the tall, which attains a height of about 3 feet; the intermediate 18 inches, and the dwarf 6 inches. For ordinary bedding purposes the intermediate section is most useful. It is a suitable height for either beds or borders, and the flower stalks are just the right length for cutting for table decoration. Perhaps the most striking colours are the pinks, apricot, orange fiery red, and scarlet. In selecting colours, however, one must be guided to some extent by the colours of other subjects to be grown in the same vicinity. The Tom Thumb, or dwarf section, is excellent for ribbon bordering. Long lines of any one shade look remarkably well or they may be grown as edging plants to large beds. Another remarkable feature of the Antirrhinum is that it will grow and flower freely in comparatively poor soil, even at the base of a wall with a south aspect. Such a position is usually dry and parched during a hot summer, but this does not appear to affect these wonderful plants. Amongst the tall varieties the yellows and whites are grand for planting in front of Rhododendrons, etc. The dark green foliage shows the flowers off to perfection.

STOCKS

Stocks are such general favourites that it would scarcely seem worth while to further advocate their charms. Those of our readers who have been content with growing the old German ten-week Stock, however, should certainly give a trial to some of the newer varieties. The Beauty of Nice section is one of the best in cultivation. It is seen to greatest advantage when treated as a biennial. The seed is sown in the early autumn, and the plants are grown three in a pot in the cold frame until the spring. If the pots fill with roots, the plants should be potted into a larger sized pot in February. The 5½ inch size is large enough for the purpose. The bombshell section of grenades may be sown in March, and by the end of April or early in May they may be planted into their flowering quarters. As a rule they commence to bloom early in June and will continue out of doors for a time. They produce long, well-furnished spikes of bloom, a large percentage of which are doubles. Their branching habit is remarkable, side growths being produced in great profusion. Seed may also be sown in heat in February or March, and treated as ordinary annuals. From this sowing the plants will be later coming into bloom but will exhibit the same branching and free flowering habit. The delicious scent of the older varieties has been preserved, and there could be nothing more pleasing in the evening of a hot summer day than the delightful aroma which assails one when passing a bed of these charming flowers.

PLANTS UNDER GLASS.

Bedding plants occupying cold frames are just now at a critical period of their existence. The dull, damp weather experienced at this time of the year often has a bad effect upon Violas and Calceolarias. These should be examined once or twice a week, and have any decaying leaves that are visible removed. If the surface soil is turning green it should be stirred with a pointed stick, and any weeds that are making their appearance should be removed. These measures are all intended to reduce the danger of the young plants damping off. It goes without saying that the frames should be freely ventilated whenever the state of the weather permits. If green fly appears a light fumigation will effectually check its increase.

SWEET PEAS IN POTS

Sweet Peas for early flowering in pots are becoming more popular every year. Seeds sown in October as recommended in these pages, have made unusually rapid progress during the autumn. In consequence they may soon be potted into 7-inch pots and transferred to a cool greenhouse. They may be given a fairly rich compost, and a position should be found for them where they will get the maximum amount of light. Attention must be paid to keeping the growth in an upright position, and as soon as the pots fill with roots they should be potted on again into 9 or 10-inch pots. Some time in April they should commence to flower and if generous treatment has been given the flower stalks will be long, and the flowers of a large size and good colour.

TEMPLENEWSAM RATEPAYERS' ASSOCIATION.

The monthly meeting of Templenewsam Ratepayers' Association was held at the Wesleyan Schoolroom, Halton, on Friday night—Mr J. Armistead (President) in the chair.

The President said that since his election at last meeting he had heard a good many remarks about the Ratepayers' Association, and the most of them had been complimentary. There had been some criticism, it was true, but, looking back on the work of the Association, there was no apology needed for its existence. Its record was a vindication of its usefulness. The members, however, hoped for an increased sphere of usefulness and a larger membership. As a strength of organisation and unity of action they thought there was room for men of all views to meet on a common platform, where they could discuss everything of local interest, and what was of interest to all was of interest to the individual. He intimated that Mr Arthur Lee, of Crossgates, a member of Leeds Board of Guardians, had promised to read a paper on the Poor Law question, particularly in relation to infirmary work, at next meeting of the Association.

Mr Wilkinson, one of the hon. secrs., said that he had received a suggestion anent the erection of a lamp near Mr Walbank's house in Primrose Lane, Halton, to the Clerk to the District Council, and the letter replied that it would be laid before the members at their next meeting.

A discussion ensued regarding the question of means to increase the membership of the Association, which at present is over 100.

The President said that they wanted a larger attendance at the meetings, and they wanted more working-men members.

In respect to a suggestion made by Mr Firth at last meeting that an effort should be made to have water laid on to the cemetery at Whitkirk, Mr Young said Mr Firth proposed that the Vicar should be written about it, but he suggested that as a new Trust for the Xoxeoxfomist part of the ground was being formed, the matter should be left over.

The President said the question applied to the whole cemetery.

Mr Atkinson said he could express no opinion about it, as there had not been a meeting of the trustees.

The President said it was a question of obtaining waters for flowers and wreaths. At present people had to go to the "Brown Cow" for water.

Mr Atkinson promised to make inquiries.

Mr Verity reported that Leeds was preparing a town-planning scheme, and the sewage works at Halton were the only part of the parish that was included in it. He looked after them.

In reply to Mr Verity, several members expressed the opinion that the sanding of the footpaths in the parish had been efficiently done.

CHARITY BALL AT BIGGIN.

A very successful ball in aid of the funds of the Devils Infirmary was held in the Council schools at Biggin on Thursday night.

Some 80 ladies and gentlemen accepted invitations. Dancing commenced shortly after eight o'clock, and was kept up merrily until four o'clock the next morning.

The pretty dresses of the ladies, together with the gay decorations of the walls, gave the room a pleasing appearance. The duties of M.C.'s were successfully performed by Mr W. Hawley and Mr W. Hey.

The secretarial duties were in the hands of Messrs S. Hardcastle and H. Jagger. The music was supplied by Mr W. Hague. The secretaries were greatly indebted to the ladies and gentlemen who generously contributed to the refreshments, etc.

Amongst those present were—Mr E. and Miss Jackson, Mr E. Morrell, Miss Taylor, and Mr Hardcn (Cawood), Mrs White (Wadsworth), Mrs Geo. H. Ambler, Mr and Miss Harrison (Sycamore House), Messrs E and A Poulter, Mrs Birnie (Barrow Hill Farm), Mr R. and the Misses Gilbertson, Miss Bussey, Mrs and Miss Smith (Ryther), the Misses Gilbertson, (Bow Farm, Ryther), the Misses Hardcastle (The Grange, Church Fenton), Mr, Mrs., and Miss Lamb, Mr Bigland (Little Fenton), the Misses Hawley, Mr Hawley, Mr Hodgson (Sherburn-in-Elmet), Mr and Miss Farrar (South Milford), Mr and Mrs Hawley, Mr and Mrs G. Birdsall, Mr and Mrs H. Jagger, Mr F. Gilbertson, Mrs R. Hey, Mrs W. Hey, Messrs A and E. Lawson (Biggin).

It is suggested holding another ball later in the season for York Infirmary.

SELECTION OF STOCK BIRDS.

INBREEDING

Deterioration of race can in most cases be traced to inbreeding. Inbreeding, generally speaking, is an act of deliberation, ignorance, or apathy on the owner's part, and though I am in sympathy with all departments of the industry, I do feel that those interested in exhibition birds have much to answer for under the heading of deliberation, the ignorance and apathy being more due to the utility breeder. Enjoying special facilities regarding pout-nesterms, seldom a week passes but I have opportunities of studying the disastrous results of inbreeding, tubercular disease and a scrubious and emaciated condition being almost always apparent.

BREEDING FROM IMMATURE STOCK

Second only to inbreeding for disastrous results is breeding from immature stock, and it is certainly a reflection on our intelligence that such apparently superfluous notes of warning have to be sounded. In every other branch of farming, special attention is directed to the reproduction of species, no trouble, labour, or expense is spared to attain the best results, while with poultry indiscriminate selection in mating, as I have before remarked, due either to deliberation, apathy or ignorance, is still very prevalent.

PERFECT HEALTH.

The first standpoint then in selecting your breeding stock is to secure perfectly healthy birds; the old-time "like produces like" is perfectly true, and it is impossible to breed healthy chicks from unhealthy stock.

The points to be observed at this stage are many, and my candid advice is, if you experience the least doubt as to the general fitness of any bird you are examining, instantly reject it. The slightest look and examination of the throat are details you must not omit during selection.

LIKE PRODUCES LIKE

This must be constantly in your mind until your pens are mated. Are you breeding for exhibition? Then you know the points you wish to reproduce and select accordingly. Is egg-production your object? Then those with a record behind them must be chosen, remembering that egg-production is not so much a matter of breeding as of strain. On the other hand, if it is your intention to breed for market, the table properties must be carefully considered, size, quality of flesh, and rapidity of growth being contributing factors.

In selecting stock to embark in the day-old chick industry and settings of eggs, great care must also be exercised, and only such breeds acquired as are in popular demand.

SELECTING THE MALE BIRD

A prevalent idea is that the male bird should cost a small sum more than a hen or pullet; be advised, select the bird that precisely meets your requirements. Never buy him on reasonably all circumstances permit; accept no other at any price.

The male bird is half the pen, and if an error of judgment is made the effects will be far-reaching. To utility breeders I would mention that it is of equal importance if egg-production is desired that the male bird should be descended from a layer. I know who he was, he replied that he did not care, told him to mind his own business, and used foul language. When he told him he would report him he said he did not care. Rawcliffe contributed to the Barkston Ash Executive, and his complaint seemed to be that the team had not got medals. Players like Gent ought to support the Executive, and often overdraw their balance to do what Hamilton did. He had since received a letter from Gent apologising for the language he had used.

Gent stated that the dressing-room was crowded with non-players, and it was impossible to dress comfortably. He was excited at the time, and he might have said something wrong, but he did not usually use bad language.

The Commission viewed Gent's offence as a serious one, but as he had sent an apology, they decided to give him a lighter punishment than he would otherwise have got. They fined him 1s, and suspended him until February 7th.

It was decided to warn Hamilton off all grounds in Barkston Ash.

Mr Connor said the Commission were deeply indebted to Mr Connor for bringing the matter forward, and they sympathised with him. There was no honour apparently in football. A letter from Connor could devote his time and energy to the game, and that was all the thanks he got.

A Church Fenton player was reported. The referee in the match between Church Fenton and Sherburn on Saturday, stated that he had to send off Frederick Eden, one of the Church Fenton players, for kicking. He expressed his regret after the match, and he thought sending off sufficient punishment. He was let off with a caution and a fine of 6d.

The referee in the match between Garforth W.R. and Barwick United reported that he had to send off A. Bowden (Barwick) and J. Bolmer (Garforth) for fighting. The statement of the players, who attended, was to the effect that they fell, and Bowden's heel struck Bulmer, who thought he had done it purposely. In the excitement of the moment Bulmer struck out, and Bowden replied.—They were fined 6d. and suspended for seven days.

Whitkirk club was ordered to pay Sherburn 10s 6d. for failing to fulfil an engagement on January 3rd.

BARKSTON ASH FOOTBALL CUP.

AN EXCELLENT DRAW.

At a meeting of the Executive of the Barkston Ash Football Association at the Station Hotel, Crossgates, on Tuesday night the members present were Mr W. R. Batty (Parlwell), Mr W. A. Osborne (hon. sec.), Mr T. S. Slater (Garforth), Mr A. Johnson (South Milford), and Mr F. Inman (Aberford).

A further grant of 10s. 6d. from the Templenewsam Charity Fund was made to T. Whiteley (Harewood), who was injured in a match.

The following transfers were confirmed:—R. Brownridge (Barwick United) to (Parlwell), Mr G. A. Townsend (Aberford) to South Milford, A. Dickinson (Garforth W.R.) to Barwick United, W. Markham, H. Walton, T. Robshaw, A. Robshaw, W. Lovett, and W. Ingham (Barwick United) to Barwick Rising Sun.

It was reported that Barwick United were late in arriving at Tadcaster for the replayed semi-final of the Templenewsam Cup Competition. Their explanation, however, was accepted.

The hon. sec. reported that Tadcaster Old Boys were unable to get a team, and had withdrawn from the Barkston Ash Cup Competition.

The draw for the next round of the Barkston Ash Challenge Cup Competition on January 24th was made as follows:—

Boston Spa v. Tadcaster. Referee, Mr J. Hayton (Aberford).

Garforth W.R. v. South Milford. Referee, Rev. W. R. Rhodes (Mirfield).

Wetherby v. Wetherby Cor. Referee, Mr F. Webb (Leeds).

Selby Holme Mills v. Monk Fryston. Referee, Mr J. H. Townend (Micklefield).

Aberford v. Whitkirk. Referee, Mr H. Metcalfe (Tadcaster).

Sherburn v. Cawood United. Referee, Mr W. Walton (Micklefield).

Harewood v. Barwick United. Referee, Mr F. R. Bowen (Armley).

Selby Olympia—a bye.

SUSPENSION OF GARFORTH AND BARWICK FOOTBALLERS.

SEQUEL TO A SCENE AT WHITKIRK.

At a meeting of the Football Commission for Barkston Ash at the Station Hotel, Crossgates, on Tuesday night—Mr Albert Denton (Rothwell) presiding—Garforth W.R. goal-keeper and a Garforth spectator were dealt with for using bad language at Whitkirk.

Mr Connor (President of the West Riding Football Association) made the complaint. He wrote:—I regret to have to report a man named Hamilton, a Garforth spectator, and F. Gent, the Garforth W.R. goalkeeper, for using foul and disgusting language to the Templenewsam Cup Final at Whitkirk. During the presentation of the trophy Hamilton twice interrupted Mr Deignton's speech and used some very obscene and disgusting language. I afterwards went into the Whitkirk club room to find and reprove him for it, and whilst doing so, Gent came up and also used some very foul language.

Gent appeared, but Hamilton did not attend the meeting.

Mr T. S. Slater stated that Hamilton had no connection whatever with the Garforth club.

Mr Connor gave evidence in support of the statement in the letter. He was there when he went to the dressing-room to reprove Hamilton. Gent came up and swore at him and told him he had no business to interfere. When he asked Gent if he knew who he was, he replied that he did not care, told him to mind his own business, and used foul language. When he told him he would report him he said he did not care. Hamilton contributed to the Barkston Ash Executive, and his complaint seemed to be that the team had not got medals. Players like Gent ought to support the Executive, and not overdraw their balance to do what Hamilton did. He had since received a letter from Gent apologising for the language he had used.

Gent stated that the dressing-room was crowded with non-players, and it was impossible to dress comfortably. He was excited at the time, and he might have said something wrong, but he did not usually use bad language.

The Commission viewed Gent's offence as a serious one, but as he had sent an apology, they decided to give him a lighter punishment than he would otherwise have got. They fined him 1s, and suspended him until February 7th.

It was decided to warn Hamilton off all grounds in Barkston Ash.

HOW I LOST A STONE OF FAT AND REGAINED MY GOOD FIGURE BY A SIMPLE RUBBING PROCESS.

Three weeks ago I read in the paper of a lady who found that a simple mixture of herbs could be rubbed on fleshy places, and that this would gradually dissolve excessive fat. I was sorely in need of just such advice, so I obtained from a chemist 1 dram of quassia chips and 3 ozs. of cirols bark extract. After taking them home I placed the quassia chips in a jug and poured over them a teacupful of boiling water. When it had stood for about half-a-minute I strained it through a cloth and added the cirols bark extract. I then rubbed the mixture into a bottle and applied it freely every night and morning with my hands for about five minutes, using a circular movement. The fat just seemed to melt away each time that I rubbed it on and I never dreamed it would be so easy to get slender. Friends are amazed at the improvement in my appearance, for I have reduced over a stone of fat from my hips and abdomen and I look 15 years younger. Now I feel just like stopping every fat woman I see and telling her how I did it. G.M.B.

FOOTBALL JOTTINGS

DIGHTON SHIELD COMPETITION.

The programme for Saturday afternoon consists of three ties, leaving the leaders of division one, who have shewn a failing away during the holidays, since they allowed the Corinthians to beat them, will play Boston Spa, and the leaders should get the points. Tadcaster are not doing very well, and Wetherby Corinthians should account for them. Whitkirk are not the team they were, and, although the match is on the Vicarage Field, I fancy Aberford will be strong competitors for the points.

South Milford and Garforth White Rose are the only undefeated teams in the League, but the Milfordians are in a stronger position than their opponents, inasmuch as they have 11 points for 6 games, while their opponents have 7 for 4 matches. None of the other clubs in this division will be serious competitors for the championship, and the contest will, therefore, resolve itself into a tussle between Milford and Garforth.

WEST RIDING CUP COMPETITION.

On Saturday afternoon several local clubs were engaged in the West Riding Cup Competition. Garforth W.R. performed creditably by making a draw with Clarence Ironworks at Leeds, and Allerton Bywater Colliery distinguished themselves by defeating Rothwell W.R. by three goals to two. Wetherby had no match, New Wortley failing to make the journey.

GARFORTH W.R. v CLARENCE IRON WORKS.

The match between those teams was played at Hunslet, and the ground, which was very greasy, militated against good play. In the first half of the game was well-contested, but Garforth got the only goal scored, Birch doing the needful. Subsequently Walker and Hastle netted for Clarence, and Birch secured another for Garforth, so the game was drawn—two goals each. On Saturday afternoon the teams will meet again at Garforth, and the White Rose should succeed this time.

ALLERTON BYWATER DEFEAT ROTHWELL.

Rothwell White Rose went down on Saturday, when they were at home to Allerton Bywater. In the first half the latter team had the advantage of the wind, and during the early stages led the visitors a dance, they having continually to defend. Appleby scored for Rothwell. After this the home goal looked none too safe, and Heaton had to clear twice in succession. Holmes should have increased the homesters' lead. Keen play followed, and Alexander scored the equalising goal. Both sides had fruitless corners, and just prior to the interval Allerton, who were playing much better than at the start, were unfortunate in not scoring. Soon after the resumption Chadwick secured the second goal, thus taking the lead. End to end play followed, and Allerton netted again. About threequarter time White Rose picked up and Percy Hughes scored with an open goal. No further score was made, the result being Allerton Bywater 3 goals, Rothwell W.R. two.

WATERLOO C.M. (TEMPLENEWSAM) WIN.

Waterloo Main Colliery had a Senior League match with East Hunslet at Thorns Farm, East Leeds, on Saturday, and the honours went to the Colliery. The visitors were three men short, but, in spite of this serious handicap, they gave a good account of themselves in the opening stages. Using to the full their advantage of the wind, the team worked well together, and one or two well-conducted movements by Chief Downing had a prominent share, severely tested Nicholson, the home goalkeeper. The Waterloo men certainly had the larger share of the game, but were unfortunate in not finishing in good fashion. Tattersdale played a capital game on the left wing for the home team, sending down some well-judged centres. Lambert, on the left, Downing, and Wass, at centre, were the best of the half. Platts, at centre forward, worked hard throughout and was on several occasions only just stopped short of scoring by the ubiquitous Watts. Fox, at back, was safe. Close on half-time Platts crowned his efforts by beating Orbell, both players coming a cropper on the greasy turf. Waterloo Main had a good lead at the interval, and considering they had mastered pretty much their own way, and won by nine goals to nil.

CHURCH FENTON V. E. H. O. KEATSE'S XI.

Played on Saturday at Church Fenton. The visitors kicked off, and Church Fenton rushed, but were kept from scoring for some time by A. D. Foster (Selby) and R. G. Harpley (York). However, after some good combination by the Church Fenton forwards, then and often over-ran the ball. Platts, at centre forward, worked hard throughout and was on several occasions only just stopped short of scoring by the ubiquitous Watts. Fox, at back, was safe. Close on half-time Platts crowned his efforts by beating Orbell, both players coming a cropper on the greasy turf. BARKSTON ASH VOLUNTEERS AT LEEDS.

SEVENTEEN DAYS AS A GAS WORKER.

A SAGAR-MUSGRAVE CUP FINALIST'S GREETING.

A number of Barkston Ash men volunteered for service under the Leeds Corporation during the strike, and the experience of the gas workers, on whom the citizens of Leeds depended for what gas they had, is not uninteresting. He was sent to try his prentice hand at the New Wortley Gas Works, where he remained for 17 days, and he states that when he entered the office he divested himself of his hat and collar, and donned a cap and "sweat rigg," while he received oversuits to protect his trousers and gloves to save his hands. That they did so is doubtful.

Certain of the volunteers (chiefly University students) were put on the machines at once, which charged the retorts with coal, and others manned the machines which rammed the remains of the coal out of the retorts, after the same had been baked about 8 hours, leaving had the gas taken from it. Others, again, were employed wheeling huge iron barrows, which conveyed the burning coke from the retorts into the yard, where it was quenched with water. I did with water, and then shovelled it upon the stack.

The gas-house, under ordinary conditions, is worked in three shifts of eight hours each, but during our stay there were only two shifts of twelve hours each. I was on the day shift, my hours being from 6.0 a.m. to 6.0 p.m., with the usual stoppages for breakfast and dinner. During the first two days I was employed at "bulleting," which work entails the clearing of the pipes on the gas condensors, the latter being near the doors of the retorts. The work is rather hard and hot, as the buller used is an implement of no light nature, and often pipes get choked with tar. The end of the buller is shaped conical-wise fashion, and this is forced up the pipe until it is clear. I certainly felt very awkward using the implement, but the foreman very kindly gave me wrinkles, and after-wards I got on better.

On the third day of my sojourn I was asked to change my job, and go below where the furnaces are, and do what is known as "clinkering." This work is considered to be a harder and a much hotter job than the one I had left. "Clinkering" is simply the cleaning of the fires—removing the "dead fire," ate., which retards the furnace from giving the required heat. This is done by making a false grate, by forcing 6 iron bars, about 3 inch wide, and 1 inch thick, through the fire. The ordinary fire-bars are then taken out by means of clippers, thus allowing the refuse between the two sets of bars to fall into a basin-shaped receptacle, which contains water. The remainder of the refuse or clinker, which is hard and does not fall down, is forced or broken off by means of a heavy spear or snipper. Upon the clinkers being knocked down, the ordinary fire-bars are replaced and the false bars, which by this time are red-hot, are drawn out and the fire-ails upon its proper bed. The clinkers, etc., which are still in the basin below are then taken out with a long-handled shovel, which is pierced with holes to allow the water to run out. The clinkers are put into barrows, which stand upon an iron platform, and by runs upon lines, and they are then pushed to a lift and from thence wheeled to the refuse heap. There is much danger attached to the work of "clinkering," especially when pressed by an amateur, as sometimes the red-hot fire falls into the water below unexpectedly, and causes steam, etc., to rush out, and unless the fireman darts out of the way severe burns are inflicted.

After a couple on days at this work my hands became hardened, and I found I could dispense with my gloves, and finding my waistcoat (after being spoilt) was a in the way, I got rid of that too. The conditions of work down in that "Black Hole of Calcutta" are not very inviting, and my shirt was wet with perspiration each night.

Everyone seemed happy, and at times one could hear familiar choruses being sung. There were cases of shirkers, but these were soon marked men, and one of them was baptised anew by means of a bucket of cold water poured from aloft.

The water had a pleasant surprise one day. In emptying across the yard a well-known Barkston Ash cricketer, he having figured in many Sagar-Musgrave Cup finals. He at once remarked, "It's the first time I've seen thee do any work."

The inner man received attention in the pariors' cook-house. The food supplied was good and substantial, but it was served in a rough manner. There were not the familiar tablecloth, cups and saucers, cheese, etc., etc. We had to "peak" where we could. At breakfast time one had to grab a pint pot, make for the tea-urn, and then help oneself to the ham or corn-beef sandwiches, which, by the way, were not cut for invalids.

For dinner there were the good old roast beef and "spuds." The latter were boiled in buckets over the fire-place, but I did not see a pan in the place. As I have said, the food was substantial and it was there and was required. After the first day or two we paid our own feed to the tune of 2s. 6d. weekly, but pay does not out of sight. The beef, ham, and corn-beef were of the best, and the tea was "extra." One got quite used to waiting for one another's knife and fork and plate, then "rinsing" them under the cold water tap, and straightaway, without touching a cloth, taking them to the servers, for the fare of the day. Occasionally the tea-drinkers were given a treat in the way of tinned pears—very sparingly—and they went down in a most welcome manner.

Before retiring for the night, I usually had a piece or cheese with bread, and a drink of Bovril tea I might say the night-men often got during their shift hot-pot, or Irish stew. I myself found the latter very good, but I did not care for the former. I did not have a good meal. After that I had to be satisfied with the smell.

The few hours' recreation we had during the evening were occupied by playing cards, chess (the figures being roughly cut with a pen-knife), dominoes, etc. Magazines and the daily papers were supplied. Sometimes songs were given, and one young student seemed to try his best to "wrack" our nerves by playing on his violin. Recitations were also given, and the sight of one chap in his pyjamas standing on his pillow reciting will not be forgotten in a hurry.

We were allowed two packets of cigarettes a day, or, in lieu of these, a plug of twist, or a small portion of strong mixture. At the sametime, where both the luxuries of tobacco and drinks were restricted, a screeching of saxophone was sheltered. The day-men gained admittance at night between 8 and 9 p.m., and were supplied twice, with their cheque of beer, ploughrander, or lemonade. At 6.0 p.m. "Time, gentlemen please" was called.

For the first two nights I slept upon a palliasse, covered with a few old blankets. It was far from being comfortable, but an improvement was later made by the introduction of single mattresses, and counterpanes were also supplied. As a matter of fact, we were allowed to sleep where we could, some on the floor of the engine-house, some in the hay-loft, and others on The floor of the joiners' shop. The latter was my abode, and I slept between plane-waw machine and the nail boxes. We had a grand fire; p was quite warm and we slept soundly, with the exception of one night.

On this particular night one great steward terrifically, and some could not get to sleep. The sleeper was roused, and warned that unless his ardour was abated a 2 inch plug of wood would be inserted as a stop-gap. For a few moments quietness reigned supreme, but shortly a non-sleeper exclaimed "Oh! he's at it again." He got up, brandishing his curative, walked across the beds to the corner where the snorer lay and was at once successful.

Some were at peace with all men on the gantry, and one young man had a fervent love for his pipe, which he would have inserted as a stop-gap. For a few moments quietness reigned supreme, but shortly a non-sleeper exclaimed "Oh! he's at it again." He got up, brandishing his curative, walked across the beds to the corner where the snorer lay and was at once successful.

Peps

The Incomparable Remedy

FOR THROAT & CHEST.

Everyone needs Peps, the germ-killing tablets, to repel the dangers that lurk in the treacherous weather.

As a Peps tablet dissolves in the mouth, medicinal fumes are released and are carried direct with the breath through all the air-passages into the lungs. These fumes exercise a very powerful, soothing, healing and antiseptic influence.

Germs lurking in the mouth, throat, nostrils, and bronchial tubes are immediately destroyed, and all the lung tissues (which are beyond the direct reach of liquid medicines) are invigorated and protected.

The direct action of the novel Peps fumes on the breathing tubes and lungs explains why Peps give immediate relief to the sufferer from chronic bronchitis or asthma, and check the discomforts and dangers of coughs, colds, chills, sore throats, and influenza. Peps really prevent serious disease settling in the chest.

If you take Peps regularly the task is made easy of defying the chest perils of damp, cold, or suddenly changing weather.

Of all Chemists and Drug Stores at 1l½ or 2/9 per box.

JANUS CROSS AT SHERBURN-IN-ELMET.

AN OLD-TIME CHURCH-WARDEN'S CLAIM

"SHERBURN HAS A WONDERFUL HISTORY."

The people of Sherburn-in-Elmet should (says a correspondent in the "Yorkshire Post"), find special interest in their famous Cross on a New Year Day. It is a Janus Cross, and is so called because on both sides there is a representation of the Crucifixion. Janus was one of the principal Roman gods, and was usually represented with two faces, one aged, looking backward, the other youthful, looking forward.

It needs little imagination to realise the aptness of the name given to the first month of the year. January is the month of Janus, and it is not difficult to picture the three-worn face of the ancient deity looking back to-day upon the years that are gone beyond recall, and the other face looking forward with bright anticipation to the days that are to be. On one side we see the Memory personified; on the other Hope, radiant. Most of us like to fancy ourselves looking in the same direction as the youthful face of the "two-headed Janus," but there are many whose chief occupation to-day will be of a reminiscent character. How usefully at this time may we listen to the words of the semi-chorus of the famous York pageant, sung by the youthful adherents of Hope in response to those who ranged themselves on the side of Memory—

"Up, then, let us wend together
Sunny spring and wintry weather—
We with faces forward cast,
Ye still doting on the past—
And in eager eyes unfold
Days to be from days of old?"

We shall not be thought guilty of apostatising in the direction of Roman mythology if we say that Janus aptly presides over the beginning of the year. The classical notion is a beautiful one. Janus was the god of gates, the porter of Heaven, the "Father of the Morning," and his name is said to have been derived from Dianus, a probably meaning the Sun; and if this be a piece of accurate etymology, Christian people, who in worship the "Father of Lights," can have small cause for quarrelling with this bit of old-world paganism.

Not improbable is it that some who read these lines will find themselves a little perplexed. They will remember that it is only in comparatively recent times that January has been regarded as the beginning of the year, and that during the centuries of mediævalism the year commenced on March 25th and ended on March 24th. That is perfectly true; and in substantiation of the truth the writer may state that he has before him copies of documents printed in "Bood's Handy-book," which are dated February 29, 1571, February 29, 1619, and February 29, 1647. The reader will see that these years are leap-years, but let him apply the usual leap-year test, and he will find himself perplexed as he divides the respective numbers by four. The years, in fact, were those known as 1571-2, 1619-20, and 1647-8, and at the present day would be called 1572, 1620, and 1648, which numbers would be quite satisfactory to our arithmetically disposed reader. The whole truth is this: That before 533 A.D. the old Roman system was in vogue when the year was reckoned from January 1st to December 31st, from 533 A.D. to 1752 A.D. the Dionysian chronology was in use, giving the year as from March 25th to March 24th, and since 1752 A.D. to the present time we have reverted to the more ancient system, and so to-day we are both pagan and pagan. In our year reckoning—pagan, inasmuch as the reversion to the older style was introduced by Pope Gregory XIII., and pagan because of the fact that he simply reverted to the old Julian system which was in use some centuries before the Christian era.

It has come to pass, therefore, that we Christians prefer to recognise, and wisely recognise, Janus as standing at the portal of the New Year, with youthful face looking hopefully ahead to the unknown days of the future, with other eyes looking back retrospectively over the days that have been.

The Cross of Sherburn, Janus-like, looks both ways, or at least it did. Time was when it was curious that it is hard to beat in the annals of antiquarian blundering. The Cross originally adorned the beautiful Chapel of St. Mary and the Holy Angels, that used to stand at the south-east corner of the churchyard. This chapel must have been an architectural gem. At what time it was erected no one knows, but it was certainly in existence in the year 1331, when Thomas de la Mare was the Sacrist. It was served by the vicar of the church, to whom the whole advantage was reserved as a portion of his stipend, and at various times gifts to increase the endowment, and ornamental additions to the fabric of the chapel were made. In 1463, for instance, Euphemia Langton, whose husband had recently died, presented to the chapel an alabaster image of the blessed Virgin with the "Collar of S.S."; and at some time during the fourteenth century some other benefactor gave the Janus Cross, which clearly belongs to that period of architecture.

At the Suppression of the Chantries in the reign of Edward VI. the Chapel with its chantry would suffer spoliation along with the other six chantries in the church—St. Mary Magdalene, St. Katharine, St. Thomas, St. Roque, St. Martin, St. Anthony. The usual sequence of events would follow this piece of Edwardian jobbery, and the building was eventually demolished. But during digging operations the site of the chapel was discovered many years ago, and the Janus Cross was found among the ruins. One of the church officials of that period, it seems, had claim to it for some reason or other, but the latter strenuously resisted the claim, and then, alas! the matter was solved in truly British fashion—by compromise—which took the form of a man's saw! The Cross was sawn in two, vertically, and for many long years one of the halves filled a niche at Steeton Hall, a short distance away, the other half being allowed to find a place in the church. No wonder the "Steeton Racker" haunted the old Hall! But some years ago this abducted portion of the Cross was restored to the church, and now the two parts, though not in union, are to be seen in the south aisle of the sacred edifice.

So the Cross is a Janus Cross no longer, but it is in its proper place, a beautiful relic of mediævalism, and reminds the people of Sherburn of its former glory and utility. Sherburn has had a wonderful history. It has been visited by Kings, it possessed its archiepiscopal palace, it has been honoured by the presence of men who were eminent in their time, and to-day it wears that old-world look, notwithstanding certain signs of decadence, that should make the inhabitants proud of their village, as they must be of their lovely church. But, with all its treasures, the place has nothing more beautiful or more interesting than its old fourteenth-century cross, lovely in its mutilation, Janus-like in its original possession of a double face, and yet different to all the other Janus-like representation of classical times. For at Sherburn the twice-sculptured relic presents the story of the world's greatest tragedy, each of the sculptures, a replica of the other, or almost so, overlooking the past with all its uncertainties and potentialities of the same yesterday, to-day, and for ever."

Mr G. D. Lumb, of Leeds, writes anent the statement that the Janus Cross was erected in the Chapel of the B.V.M. in the churchyard:—

"The following extracts from wills of Sherburn-in-Elmet testators apparently show that the cross or crucifix was erected in the churchyard and not in the chapel:—

1535. Will of Richard Wharton: "My bodie before them to be buried in the churchyarde of Sherborne by Richard Lawsone."

1538. Will of John Whitteeres:—"My bodie to be buried in the parish churche yerde of Alhallos in Sherborne, nye unto the crucifix."

1540. Will of Alexander Barnbie:—"My bodie to be buried in the parish kirke ethe of Alhallos in Sherburne ne unto the crucifix."

EASTERN AINSTY PETTY SESSIONS.

ASKHAM RICHARD MEN IN TROUBLE.

On Saturday the magistrates at the Eastern Ainsty Petty Sessions at York were Major Allen-by (chairman), Colonel Richardson, and Mr Richard Lawson.

Robert Wright, of Askham Richard, was summoned for having no light on his bicycle at midnight on December 24th, on the Tadcaster Road, Dringhouses.

Police Constable Marsh explained that the defendant was riding with two companions who had also no light on their bicycles. Defendant told him that he did not know his light was out, but witness replied that he had seen the other two cycles only with lights when they were 200 yards away.

Defendant: I am very sorry to say I am here. I had a lamp, and the gentlemen with me had acetylene lamps, and I did not know that my lamp was out.

Police Constable Marsh: He admitted that he knew he had no oil in his lamp.

Defendant was ordered to pay 5s. costs.

Fred Bradman, groom, Askham Richard, was ordered to pay 1s. costs for riding his bicycle without a light in the village of Askham Bryan on Saturday night.

Police Constable Bradley said the defendant admitted riding a mile without a light.

Experiments at a Welsh mine showed that sparks from the electric signalling wires could cause an explosion of firedamp.

TADCASTER GUARDIANS AND DISTRICT COUNCIL.

LEEDS CORPORATION AND THE DISTRICT:

SHERBURN CROSS—WATER SUPPLIES.

The fortnightly meeting of Tadcaster Board of Guardians was held at the Workhouse, Tadcaster, on Monday—Ald. E. C. Brooksbank, J.P. (Chairman), presiding. Other members present were Col. Gascoigne (Lotherton), Rev. Canon Green-wood (Grimston), Rev. C. D. Ash (Saxton), Messrs R. Wright (Barwick), W. Schofield, H. P. Clinch, J. H. Ingleby, J.P., and J. Nettleton (Tadcaster), W. B. Gray-s(Church Fenton), E. Parker (Ledsham), Copley (Ryther), Braham and H. Green (Garforth), F. Myers (Bilbrough), T. Hey, J. E. Cawthorne, and J. J. Foster (Sherburn), W. Jackson (Acaster Selby), W. P. Birkinshaw (Ledston), W. Y. K. Young (Aberford), J. Wordsworth and E. H. Lowe (Preston), J. Ludley (Kirkby Wharfe), J. Pick (Ulleskelf), R. H. Horner (Askham Bryan), Carlton (Stutton), J. H. Schofield (Coston), Pearson (Allerton Bywater); W. A. Dickinson (Kippax), W. Crosland, J.P., and A. Johnson (South Milford), and J. F. Wheatley (Appleton Roebuck), with the Clerk (Mr G. A. Bennet), the surveyor (Mr Scott), and the sanitary inspectors (Messrs Driver and Wood).

The thanks of the Board were given to a number of ladies and gentlemen for gifts to the inmates of the workhouse and the children's home.

Five parishes were reported to be in arrears with calls, and the overseers are to be summoned if the money is not paid by next meeting.

The master's report showed that during the fortnight there had been two admissions, two discharges, and one death in the workhouse. The number of inmates was 86 in the workhouse, and 19 in the children's home—105, against 112 at the corresponding date of last year. The meals were served during the two weeks totalled 18 and 18 as compared with 15 and 11, for the same weeks twelve months ago.

It was decided that Mr Wordsworth be asked to attend the meetings of the Poor Law Conference to be held in London on February 17th and 18th.

The Clerk produced a return of the poor by Mr Bagenal for the year, and it showed a reduction of 150—from 1,059 to 909. The Chairman remarked that they had the lowest decrease of any Union in the area.

The Chairman said he should like to take the opportunity of wishing the members and officials a happy and prosperous New Year.

Several members: The same to you, sir.

LAW AND PARLIAMENTARY COMMITTEE

The Law and Parliamentary Committee had before them the report of the Committee of the Yorkshire-Poor Law Conference with regard to the way-ticket system, in connection with the vagrancy question, and they recommended that the Board join with other Boards in Yorkshire in carrying out the scheme, the cost not to exceed £10, and the Board to be allowed to withdraw at any time.

In regard to the adjustment between Tadcaster District Council and Leeds Corporation, the Clerk read correspondence he had had with the arbitrator, the Town Clerk of Leeds, and Mr Talbot, K.C., will be able to appear for the Council and Board. The Committee recommended that as soon as the result of the negotiations between the accountants is received, a meeting of the committee be called, and that they be empowered, if they think fit, to accept any offer made on behalf of the Corporation, and further that they decide as to the evidence to be called in support of the claims.

The Committee also considered the proposed town-planning scheme of Leeds for the Cross-gates district. A letter was read from the Town Clerk of Leeds stating, in reply to a communication, that he was unable to furnish any details with regard to the scheme, as the application to it proposed to make is merely for authority to prepare a scheme in respect of a specified area. In regard to the inclusion of part of the Council's area in the scheme, the Committee recommended that provided the scheme meets with the approval of the Council and that they are made the responsible authority for carrying out the observance of the scheme in the Tadcaster area affected, and for the execution of any works in connection therewith, the Council do not object to the scheme. It was further recommended that the Chairman of the Committee and Clerk be empowered to consult with the Leeds engineers with respect to the proposals for planning the area, and to consider the question of the preparation of a scheme dealing with Austhorpe on the east side of the railway and report.

Letters were read from the Yorkshire Electric Power Co. in regard to an application for powers to supply light for the district, but the matter was adjourned.

The minutes were adopted.

DISTRICT COUNCIL

The District Council treasurer was reported to have in hand a balance of £6,185. A sum of £67 was expended on district roads during the fortnight.

At a meeting of the Highways Committee it was decided that an improvement at the corner of the Parish Council office at Allerton Bywater be carried out.

In regard to the Oxton Lane improvement, Mr S. Smith stated that he was not prepared to reduce his terms for land, and the surveyor was instructed to see Mr Smith. Land at rs. per yard, belonging to Mr Scholefield, is to be purchased.

A letter was read from the N.E.R. Co. stating that they could not see they way to kerb a footpath at Ledsham.

It was agreed that six snow ploughs for roads and six for footpaths be got.

SHERBURN CROSS IMPROVEMENT

The Highways Committee recommended that the County Council be again approached and asked to give the improvement at Sherburn Cross their attention.

Mr Hey said this matter had been going on for a long time, and it was still untouched. It was a very dangerous place, and there would be an accident there if an improvement was not effected.

The Chairman: What do you want done?

Mr Hey: We want the corner removed! I wish you would use your influence.

The Chairman said he would.

The minutes were adopted.

SANITARY COMMITTEE

At a meeting of the Sanitary Committee plans for two houses in Preston Lane, Kippax, were passed.

Tenders for repairs to machinery at Allerton Bywater sewage works were accepted.

Notices were ordered to be served on two owners at Tadcaster to carry out improvements at their property.

A letter was received from a resident in the area thanking the matron and staff of Garforth Hospital for their kind treatment to him and his family.

The question of Scholes water supply was adjourned.

A letter was received from the County Council anent the water supply of South Milford and Scholes, and asking that the temporary scheme at Milford should be replaced with a permanent one. Sherburn's supply was altogether inadequate, and the Council were asked to take the matter into serious consideration. In regard to Sherburn supply, it was decided to reply that the Council were in communication with the Local Government Board as to the provision of water, and in regard to Milford supply the inspector was instructed to get out particulars of an extension.

A letter was received from the Yorkshire Fishery Board anent an alleged pollution of the river at Tadcaster from the sewage works, and it was referred to the managers.

The minutes were adopted.

FOUR YEARS' WAGES LOST.

THROUGH CRIPPLING ULCERS ON HER LEG.

ZAM-BUK SAVES 'A WORKER'S LIMB.

Four years' valuable wages were lost to Mrs J. Mudie, a mill-worker, of 273, Hillgrove, Back Leyland, Dundee, through shocking leg ulcers. Now completely cured by Zam-Buk. Mrs Mudie has given full details of her remarkable case to the "Dundee Courier" as follows:—

"I slipped on the stairs one day and knocked my right leg. Two little red spots came on the front of the leg. Then the skin broke into sores from time to time. The pain was so intense that I positively writhed in agony.

"At night the torture was worse. I couldn't bear even the weight of the bed-clothes on the stricken leg. I could not get about by a series of hops on my sound leg. For four years I was kept away from the mill.

Besides doctor's treatment I went into the Dundee Infirmary for a time, a nurse also came regularly to dress the leg, and in addition I tried all sorts of ointments, salves and poultices. But the ulcers kept on discharging, and there was no way of escape from the torture except by amputation.

"My limb was saved, however, by Zam-Buk, which had a soothing effect persisted by none of the other things I had used. Zam-Buk soon made a decided improvement in my leg. The ulcers began to dry up, and the inflammation and proud flesh disappeared.

"I kept on using Zam-Buk regularly, and one by one the sore places were cleansed and healed with new skin until the whole limb was made sound again. I was happier than for many a day when I returned to the mill quite cured.

"Friends exclaim when they meet me, 'Why Mrs Mudie! I never expected to see you going about like this again.' Zam-Buk has been a marvellous healer in my case."

There is nothing to equal this wonderful Zam-Buk for soothing and curing skin diseases, and speedily healing cuts and wounds. No common ointment can ever do the same good as Zam-Buk, which is of unique herbal origin, scientific composition, and absolutely pure. All imitations are worthless.

A ROTHWELL MATRIMONIAL CASE.

A WIFE'S COMPLAINT.

At the Leeds West Riding Petty Sessions on Tuesday Sam Ellis, a miner, of Rothwell, was summoned by his wife, Mary Ellis, for persistent cruelty.

The Chairman: What does the cruelty consist of?

Prosecutrix: He threw a bucket of dirty water over me, but I wish to withdraw the summons as he has promised to pay me half-a-crown a week, and I am going to leave him.

The Chairman: I am afraid you must tell us something of the case before we can do that.

Mrs Ellis said the incident complained of occured on Christmas Eve, when the defendant came home about three o'clock in the afternoon. She was cleaning up, and he asked her why she had not finished her work. She replied she had done so as soon as she could. He then picked up a bucket of dirty water and threw it over her.

The Chairman: Is it the first time he has done this.

Prosecutrix: No, he did it about a year ago.

Answering further questions, Mrs Ellis said this was all she had to complain of.

The magistrates found there was no evidence to substantiate the complaint of persistent cruelty, and the case was dismissed.

BARWICK AND SCHOLES AFFAIRS.

TELEPHONE CALL OFFICES—WATER SUPPLY.

At a meeting of Barwick-in-Elmet Council at the offices at Scholes on Monday night the members present were Messrs A. Booth (in the chair), R. Wright, A. Robshaw, and F. Lumb (Barwick), J. Rayner, J. Pemberton, and Needham (Scholes), with the Clerk (Mr H. R. Clarke).

A letter was received from the Chairman (Mr Birch) thanking the members for a resolution of sympathy passed by them in his illness. It was stated that Mr Birch is making very slow progress towards recovery, but he is improving.

It was reported that two danger signals had been received for erection near Barwick School, and the Chairman stated the District Council had agreed to fix them.

The postal authorities wrote intimating their willingness to open telephone call offices at Barwick and Scholes provided suitable premises were obtained, and also that a guarantee of 17 guineas per annum was given for each place. It was stated that the guarantee for Barwick had been obtained, Mr Childe, of Potterton Hall, heading the list with ten guineas.

Mr Wright asked if the Council could give the guarantee. He did not think the telephone people would take the guarantee from private individuals.

Mr Rayner said he thought Mr Wright's view was wrong.

Mr Wright said that when the telegraph was introduced to Barwick one individual had to be the guarantor, and he had to collect the money from others.

Mr Robshaw: Was there anything to collect?

Mr Wright: Yes, there was a small loss for seven years.

Mr Rayner proposed that the Clerk write and ask if the authorities would accept the gentleman who had offered to share the responsibility as guarantors.

Mr Needham seconded, and this was agreed to.

As to premises, Mr Fred Lumb said that he would be very pleased to offer his place, and this was accepted.

In regard to Scholes, only one resident offered to become a guarantor, and as there seemed no likelihood of other gentlemen coming forward, the matter was allowed to drop.

Mr Rayner brought forward the question of the repair of a couple of stiles at Whinmoor. The owners and occupiers of the land had been asked more than once to repair the stiles and they had failed to do so, and he thought that as they were a convenience to the public the Council should do the work. He proposed that the two stiles be repaired.

Mr Needham: It is a precedent.

Mr Rayner: Yes, but the work is done in other parishes.

Mr Needham said that if they repaired these stiles they would have to repair a large number in other parts of the parish.

The proposal was not seconded.

Mr Rayner proposed that the postmaster of Leeds be asked to place a despatch box near the Old Red Lion, Whinmoor, pointing out that the population had increased since the last application for a box was made. He said that there were thirty houses at Whinmoor, and the people had two deliveries of letters each day, and it would be easy for the postman after going his rounds to clear the box. At present the residents had to walk to Scarcroft to post a letter.

Mr Wright seconded, and this was agreed to.

The Chairman said that the parish pump at Barwick had been out of repair, and he had had it put in order again. The pump, however, was done, and if it were wrong again it was not a job the plumber would care to tackle.

Mr Pemberton: Why should we bother about the pump? (Laughter).

The Chairman: It is the property of the Council.

Mr Pemberton: Then when water is scarce at Scholes we can come to Barwick for it? (Laughter).

The Chairman stated that Mr Stead, the plumber, had offered to provide a new pump for £7, keep it in repair for two years, and if at the end of that time it was not required, he would take it back at half-price.

Mr Rayner said that the year was approaching when Barwick would have a water scheme. Pumps would soon be out-of-date.

Mr Robshaw said he thought they could get a pump for less than £7.

The Chairman said he wanted to know what they were to do when the pump went wrong again.

Mr Wright proposed that when the pump went wrong a new pump be purchased from Mr Stead on the terms mentioned by the Chairman.

Mr Rayner seconded.

Mr Lumb said that a new pump was wanted now, and he proposed that it be put down at once on the terms mentioned.

Mr Robshaw seconded, and this was carried by the casting vote of the Chairman.

Mr Wetherall (Scholes) was absent owing to illness, and the Clerk was instructed to write to him and express the hope that he would soon have a complete recovery.

Mr Edgar Jones, M.P., at Merthyr, said if coal owners like Colonel Hickman were to abandon law in Ulster, others might consider themselves free to confiscate his collieries for the community.

A MORLEY CASE OF TUBERCULOUS GLANDS CURED.

57, Commercial Street,
Morley,
Nr. Leeds, 16th July, 1913.

Mr Crosswaite,
Dear Sir,—

I beg to write you a line to express our thankfulness for the splendid cure you have made of our son.

We had almost given up in despair the idea that his face would ever be right again, but thanks to your treatment, during the time he has been under your care, we could see week by week a gradual improvement, and now the wounds have completely disappeared.

I am sure we are more than satisfied and our only regret is that we did not come to you twelve months sooner.

I shall always feel proud to recommend any similar case to you.

Yours truly,
WM. D. HOLROYD.

Stourton Man in Trouble.

A LAMPLIGHTER'S STORY.

Charges of intimidation against two officials of the lamplighters' branch of the Gasworkers' and General Labourers' Union, the chairman, Jack Affleck (43), of 52, Queen Street, Stourton, and the secretary, William Cheetham (39), of Copperfield Grove, Cross Green Road, Leeds, were heard on Thursday by Mr H. Marshall (Stipendiary Magistrate), before whom the defendants appeared on remand.

The men were jointly charged with intimidating Wilfrid son Cawood, a lamplighter, on New Year's Day, and Affleck was further charged with assaulting and intimidating Walter Revell, another lamplighter, on January 2nd. Mr W. Wright defended.

Supt. Blakey said about 3.45 on the afternoon of New Year's Day Cawood was going down Peel Street, Barley Road, when the prisoner spoke to him and said "What are you doing?" He told them he had received a telegram, and was working, and they replied that they, too, had received telegrams. Cheetham said, "Take no — notice of that. If you do you'll cop h— to-morrow night." As they were leaving, Cheetham said, "We are going down to the man in Bells Vue Road now, and he will get 'sacked' to-morrow night."

Cawood gave evidence, but in cross-examination he said Affleck was the man who used the words "You'll cop h— to-morrow night."

The magistrate remarked that the witness was contradicting his own statement as to who used the words.

Superintendent Blakey pointed out that he had signed a statement attributing them to Cheetham.

The magistrate said he could not accept such evidence in so serious a case, the joint charge must be dismissed, and Cheetham discharged.

Affleck was then proceeded against on the other charges. Superintendent Blakey said the lamplighter Revell was working in Wesley Street, Camp Road, when, after three pickets had spoken to him, Affleck snatched his pole from his hands and struck him a severe blow on the face and shoulder. He also threw the torch of the pole away, and then went off.

Revell described the assault, and said the prisoner took him unawares, and snatched his pole from him. The blow was severe, and though he did not fall he felt stunned.

Another witness, who did not give his name except in writing to the magistrate, said he saw the assault and heard the prisoner say, "Don't be a scab."

The prisoner gave evidence denying the charges. He said he thought the man was going to strike him with the pole, and he knocked it from his hand. Then Revell ran away, and he simply threw the pole after him.

The magistrate found Affleck guilty, and said the fact of his being a man in a responsible position made the offence all the worse. It was the old story, but the assault was not a very serious one. He would bind him over in sureties for seven days.

Saxton and District Ploughing Competitions.

WINNERS AT WOODHOUSE GRANGE.

The first ploughing competitions promoted by the Saxton and District Society took place on Wednesday at Woodhouse Grange. Twenty-seven entries were received, but only twenty competitors were forward.

In the championship class the first prize went to E. Dalby, Wike; and the second and third prizes were divided between Knox and Dixon.

Class open to men who have never won a first prize:—1, F. Watson, Church Fenton; 2, H. Dykes, Aberford; 3, J. Bailey, Saxton.

Class for boys under 18—1, B. Hall, Aberford; 2, J. Hardcastle, Kiddal Lane; 3, S. Leake, Saxton; 4, E. Mawson, Low Lead.

The judges were Messrs Jackson, Todd, and Helm, and they had a rather difficult task, as there was some very good ploughing, especially in the champion class, and many of the spectators were surprised at their decision.

In the evening an excellent dinner was provided by Mr and Mrs Firn, of the Plough Inn, Saxton, and it was highly appreciated.

The Committee of the Society carried out the arrangements, and they have expressed their indebtedness to all those who have so generously subscribed.

P.S. Fox, of Cawood, who has been in the police force for over a quarter of a century, has retired on pension.

FIRE ON THE CAWOOD AUTO-CAR.—Some alarm was caused at Selby Station on Saturday evening through a fire which occurred in the driver's cabin of the N.E.R. electric auto-car which runs on the Cawood branch line. The car was at a side platform, and the sudden outbreak occurred through a hand-lamp being accidentally overturned. The flames were quickly extinguished, the only damage done being to the paint of the woodwork.

A Blue Pastel.—A Leghorn cockerel, bred and exhibited by Mr G. H. Ambler, of Church Fenton, has been sold for £42 for the Argentine, and it was shipped on Friday. Its list of successes were—First, Poultry Club Challenge Cup and gold medal; Leghorn Club Challenge Cup, International Trophy and Championship, best Leghorn Crystal Palace, 1913; also 1st, York; 1st and special, Sherburn-in-Elmet; 1st, Driffield; 1st and special, Kippax; 1st and special, Tadcaster. The bird, which was unbeaten, was hatched second week in February, 1913.

Thirteen Shillings.—At the Leeds Riding Petty Sessions on Tuesday Dick Wray, a coachman, of Shadwell, was summoned for trespassing at Wike in search of conies. John Wm. Carr, gamekeeper, stated that on November 23rd, he was at Wike, and saw the defendant come from some land with two others, who had already been dealt with. Defendant: Was it a public road where you stopped me?—Witness: Yes. In answer to other questions, Carr said defendant had not a gun, dog, or snare with him, but he had a ferret, which he let behind on seeing witness. The defendant denied possessing a ferret, and said he kept to the open road. The magistrates imposed a fine of 13s. and costs.

Exciting Fox Hunt.—The Bramham Moor Hounds had some capital sport on Saturday. Three foxes were found, and one of them led the hunt for Wike Wood, touching the corner of Wike White, and crossing the Wike and Scarcroft road and the Slade Hill and Shadwell Road, went into Roundhay Park. There was some delay in the gardens at the back of the Mansion, but the hounds took the line over Park Lane, and the rest quickly took up the scent. After running parallel to the north of Street Lane, they went past the Shadwell Industrial School, over Shadwell Lane, and through the grounds of the Town Clerk's residence. Then they passed close to the polo ground, and over Alwoodley Golf Links. The fox then went into Harewood Park, with hounds in close pursuit, but here the fox rapidly gained ground, and the hunt was abandoned with the gathering darkness.

CORRESPONDENCE

LIEUT. BOUGHEY, R.N., AND MR E. H. FOSTER, J.P.

(To the Editor).

Sir,—Lieut. Boughey has written just the sort of letter anyone conversant with Tory methods of controversy would expect. He does not accept my challenge, but says "Why should I?" There are several reasons why he should, but probably only one reason why he doesn't. Two of the reasons why he should are—first, that as his business in the Barkston Ash division is pessimism, and to gain support for the Tory policy (if they still have a policy), proof of the truth of his "bogey" statements would certainly be more effective than mere expressions of opinion. The second reason why he should is that as he and other Tory speakers, as well as most of the Tory papers, are now forbidden to explain the present position of "Tariff Reform" to the farmers of Barkston Ash and elsewhere, there is obviously no excuse for neglecting any details of the Irish question.

Lieut. Boughey repeats his "bogey" talk by asserting:—

"There are whole counties in Ireland to-day where a Protestant has no chance either of election to the local bodies or of any paid appointment under them."

Now, sir, this is a definite statement, and from the context it can only mean that the exclusion is on religious grounds. It is also clear that Lieut. Boughey would have us believe that the above statement represents facts within his own knowledge. I therefore ask him to name the counties and give us an opportunity of testing his statements. If he fails to do so your readers will find no difficulty in drawing their own conclusions.

Lieut. Boughey pretends to think it is my place to supply proof! But he is the aggressor, and having been challenged, the onus lies with him. Lest he should misunderstand, however, I would add, in closing, that having visited practically every town and city in Ireland, I also know what I am writing about, and I make no statement unless I have the evidence in my possession to prove it. Now will he kindly oblige?—Yours, etc.,

MARTIN HARVEY.

Peckfield Lodge, South Milford, 4th Jan., 1914.

PRETTY WEDDING AT SOUTH MILFORD.

On Monday the wedding took place at St. Mary's Church, South Milford, of Miss Kate Sail, third daughter of the late Mr Wm. Sail and Mrs Sail, South Milford, and Mr Fred Duckett, third son of Mr and Mrs Joseph Duckett, of Kirkhouse Green, near Doncaster. Owing to recent bereavements in Miss Sail's family, the wedding was a quite one. The officiating clergyman was the Rev. E. J. Barry, M.A. (rector of South Milford), and Miss Young, who deputised for Mr H. Hill, at the organ, played Mendelssohn's "Wedding March" and other pieces. The bride was attired in a beautiful costume of grey velvet, and hat to match, and she wore a gold bracelet and brooch (the gift of the bridegroom). Mr Robt. Goodland, Goole (brother-in-law) gave the bride away. The bride-maids were Miss Eliza A. Sail (sister of the bride), who was attired in a pretty dress of grey whipcord and black velvet hat to match, and also wore a gold brooch (the gift of the bridegroom), and Miss Louie Duckett (sister of the bridegroom), who was dressed in a blue corded costume, and hat to match, and wore a gold brooch (the gift of the bridegroom). There was a good congregation to witness the ceremony, the bride being well-known in the village. She has been a faithful employee at Mr Chessman's draper, Selby, for over 20 years. A reception was held at the bride's mother's house, where the wedding breakfast was served, and there was a large number of guests present. During the afternoon the happy pair went by motor-car to their home at Hawthorne Green Farm, Moss, near Doncaster. The presents included: Bride's mother, household linen and silver, ½ doz. spoons and sugar tongs; Mr Wm. Sail and family, clock; Mr Goodland (Goole), (brother-in-law), inlaid oval table and brass curb and fire-irons; Mrs Goodland (sister), cruet; Master Harry Goodland, crumb tray and brush; Miss Susie Goodland, rose bowl; Miss Sail (sister), bedroom service and rug; Mr and Mrs Teale, Syke House, tea service; Misses Teale, silver sugar tongs; Mr Horne, Syke house, fender, half cabinet; Miss Bulluss, Sykehouse, table cloth; Chessman and Co., elder down; workroom young ladies, tapestry table cloth; Misses H. Kay Dawson, and Kilburn, linen table cloth; Mrs Noble (Selby), bride cake; Mrs Webster (Lumby), silver-plated marmalade dish; Mrs Radcliffe, silver butter knife; Miss and Mrs A. Wise, silver sardine tongs and fork, and photo frame; Mrs Roadley, pair of sheets; Mrs Job Day (Stanks), pillow cases and hair tidies; Mrs Johnson (Selby), hair tidies; Mrs H. Sutton, oak inkstand; Mrs Newsome, butter dish; Mr and Mrs Garnett, fruit dishes and pair tray cloths; Mr. Mrs and Miss Huby (Newton), hanging lamp; Mrs Johnson, jelly, silver plated spoons; Misses Young (Sherburn), set toilet mats; Mrs Joseph Brown, table cloth; Mrs Garnett, set of toilet mats; Miss Harrison (Selby), table centre; Miss Butcher, sideboard cover; Miss Sunderland, table centre; Mrs Shepherd, cushion cover; Mrs Durham, handworked sideboard cover; Mrs Poulter (Barkston), marmalade dish and spoon; Mr and Mrs Fenton (Church Fenton), pots; Mrs Charles Poulter (Church Fenton), old-fashioned fruit dish; Mrs Bortoft, silver knife rests; Mrs and Miss Noble (Selby), fruit basket and tea set; Mr and Mrs Forman, copper kettle; Miss Bessie Johnson, hot water jug; Mrs Hind (Leeds), cheese dish; Mrs Britton, set of jugs; Mrs G. Smith (Pontefract), pair silver top vases; and Mrs T. Lacy, tray cloth.

SHERBURN

The treasurer of Leeds Infirmary acknowledges with thanks, the receipt of £4 8s., proceeds of a social at South Milford, on 31st December, 1913, promoted by a committee, per H. H. Jagger.

PRIZE DISTRIBUTION.—At the annual prize distribution which took place at the schools Mr and Mrs Cawthorn, of Elmet House, again generously provided the prizes. At the girls' school 38 girls made perfect attendance for the year out of 130 on the registers, and 24 at the boys' school out of 114 on the registers. Prizes were also presented for good conduct and proficiency in the elementary subjects. Mr Cawthorn also presented the silver medal to the most popular boy and girl in each school. At the infants' school new pennies were distributed. The boys' school hoss won the shield seven times this year for best attendance in division 22, and this excellent result is no doubt largely due to the doctors of the prizes.

SHERBURN PETTY SESSIONS.

MILFORD, CHURCH FENTON, AND SHERBURN CASES.

At Sherburn Petty Sessions on Thursday the magistrates present were the Rev. B. Hemsworth (Chairman), Major Allenby, and Mr Walter Crosland.

Mr A. Johnson, of the White Swan Hotel, South Milford, applied for one hour's extension for the cricket club dinner, on January 20th, and it was granted.

William Holroyd, miner, of Brotherton, was charged with having been drunk and disorderly on the 20th ult. at Brotherton. Fined 5s. 6d. and 5s. 6d. costs.

Walter Hardy, miner, of Sherburn, was charged with having been drunk and disorderly on the 26th ult. at Sherburn. Previous convictions were read against defendant, and he was fined 10s. and 5s. 6d. costs.

William Clark, miner, South Milford, was charged with riding a bicycle without light on the 16th December, at South Milford. P.C. Holliday stated he saw defendant cycling on the York Road, and he was without a light. When he got him at home he was very insolent. The defendant said that the lamp bottom fell out. The constable caught him by the neck and nearly choked him. Fined 1s. and 7s. 6d. costs.

John Sherborne, farmer, Sutton on Derwent, was charged with contravening the bye-laws of the North Eastern Railway by annoying passengers, on the 9th ult., at Church Fenton. Superintendent Pearson, of N.E.R. police, prosecuted, and Mr G. H. Walker, of York, defended.

Fergus Little, printer, York, and Arthur Bowan, engineer, gave evidence as to the offence which took place in a railway carriage between Leeds and York.

William Metcalf Peel, N.E.R. police, York, stated he received a complaint from the last witnesses as to defendant's conduct in the train, and defendant gave him a wrong name and address.

In defence, Mr Walker said defendant had been called to London upon important business or he would have been present. On behalf of defendant he wished to inform them that defendant expressed his regret for what had happened. He was not charged with having been drunk or using bad language. What he had done was in a playful manner. He admitted a technical offence had been committed and asked that the case should be dismissed upon payment of costs.

The Chairman said the Bench considered it a serious offence, and fined defendant £2 and £1 11s. 8d. costs.

Mr Mawer, of Liverpool, has been appointed by agent in connection with Aberford Wesleyan Church, and he enters on his duties this month.

To make a cornice pole, procure a penny broom handle, a penny tine of white enamel, and twelve brass rings large enough to slip easily along the pole. Give the pole two coats of enamel, allowing two hours to elapse between each coat. When dry it is ready for use. Two brackets at a penny each form the support. The curtains are suspended from the rings in the usual way.

WHIST DRIVE AND DANCE.—The members of Church Fenton Sycamore C.C. held their annual whist drive and dance in the school, and it was attended by 92 ladies and gentlemen. The prize-winners at whist were:—Ladies—1, Miss Ward (Ulleskelf); consolation, Mrs Worrell (Little Fenton). Gentlemen—1, Mr Grice (Sherburn); consolation, Mr A. Pargeter (Sherburn). Mrs Harrison (President of the club), in a nice little speech, presented the prizes. Dancing commenced at 10.15, and was kept up merrily until four next morning. The duties of M.C.'s were successfully performed by Messrs Geo. H. Ambler, J. Harrison, and J. W. Ambler. The music was supplied by Mr W. Hague (Ulleskelf). The secretarial duties were performed by Mr Geo. H. Ambler. The committee were greatly indebted to the following ladies and gentlemen who generously contributed to the refreshments:—Mrs and Miss Harrison, Mrs Gatus, Mrs G. Foxton, Mrs F. Rushworth, Mrs I. Weight, Mrs G. Sykes, Mrs Walkington, Mrs Geo. H. Ambler, Miss Poulter, Mrs Binns, Miss T. Holt, Mrs J. W. Ambler, and Mrs J. Binns. Amongst those present were Mrs, the Misses, and Mr J. Harrison (Church Fenton), Mr and Mrs Hawley, Mr and Mrs W. Hey, Mr H. Jagger (Biggin), Miss Farrer (South Milford), Misses Hey, Mr Grice, Mr Pargeter, Mr Hodgson, and Mr Hawley (Sherburn), Misses Lamb (Little Fenton), Mr A. and Miss Sykes (North Milford Grange), Mr H. Atkinson (North Milford), Miss Nattriss, Miss Greenwood (Barkston Ash), Mr and Miss Ward (Ulleskelf), Messrs Powell, Thompson, and Simmons (Hemsworth), Mr and Mrs Hardcastle (York), Mr and Mrs Worrell (Little Fenton), Misses Gilbertson (Rythor), Mr Geo. ROTHWELL & DISTRICT JOTTINGS.

Mr William Lunn, who, it is expected, will be the Labour candidate for Holbeck at next election, caused a little "breeze" at the last meeting of Hunslet Guardians, and the Osmondthorpe representative was soon placed on the defensive. A Rothwell man was in the chair, but he promptly called his colleague to order, and he did not get Mr Lunn to withdraw his offending words. Had he been in the House of Commons and aroused the ire of some member by an injudicious remark, he would have been suspended had he not accepted the Chairman's invitation to withdraw. I daresay Mr Lunn thinks it will be time enough to talk of Parliamentary language when he gets to St. Stephen's.

With other Guardians follow suit? That the note which recently appeared in this column influenced the Board I will not dare to say, but the Hunslet Guardians have changed their attitude towards the distribution of coal to out-door poor in the area, and now no "discrimination" will be exercised. Seeing coal was being given to poor people, it was the only fair and just plan to adopt. If a person is entitled to relief that person is equally entitled to fuel, and it seemed to me a most ungenerous and unjust policy to give coal to one lot of people and withhold it from another lot just as needy. In giving blankets, for instance, Guardians have to take into consideration what the applicants already possess, and a discrimination must be used, but coal does not keep like blankets. Of course, on the question as to whether or not the Guardians should give coal I say nothing, but if they are to make a distribution it should be done so that preference will be shown to no person.

When is a sanitary department, under the direct control of the Council, to be established in Garforth. For a long time the Council have had under consideration the advisability of purchasing horses and carts and doing their own work, and, in fact, they have a stable ready for the horses when they are bought, but they seem reluctant to take the plunge. That they will save for the children of the district, but it has brought the money to do so doubtful, but they will get its trouble. At a certain local school the work done when they like and as they like, doctor discovered a boy with defective eyesight, and the parent, who was in a position to By and bye, they will receive about £100 from Tadcaster District Council, and it is suggested that this money might be invested in horse-flesh, informed, but he was careless, and took no notice of the latter sent him. Again the County Committee communicated with him, and what did he do? He blamed the head teacher for getting him into trouble and sent his child to a school a couple of miles distant. It will be seen the father is punishing his son for his own foolishness and negligence.

For a long time the Garforth people have been talking about the Gildhrist lectures, and they have been very fortunate to secure them. The first, delivered on Friday night, was on a fascinating subject, and it was wonderful how much information the lecturer crammed into an hour-and-a-quarter. His purpose was to prove that the star system was the outcome of physical law, but he did not get Mr Luna to withdraw his developed in the same manner, and that there was a similarity in the formation of all heavenly bodies, as demonstrated by an analyses of light. As one speaker stated, shown some marvellous photographs of nebulæ and millions of stars, seemed to be present at the formation of worlds, but the subject is such a stupendous one that the finite mind reels when it attempts to grasp its magnitude. Sir Robert Ball, who died quite recently, and who was a prince of lecturers—his extreme simplicity of explanation, profound knowledge of the subject, and humorous interludes were that all expenditure by the Guardians was on characteristics—visited Garforth some 15 or 16 years ago, and gave an address on a similar subject in connection with the old Institute, which was such a force in the place then. The audience on Friday night was the largest I have seen at Garforth, if election meetings are excepted, and it showed the residents apparently know a good thing when they are offered it.

Kippax has a remarkably large number of old people within its borders, and it has been stated that it is so healthy that many folks, after their working days are done, retire to the "village on the hill," as it is termed. Not infrequently comment has been made on the number of poor persons in receipt of relief at Kippax, but, when all the circumstances are considered, it may be discovered that it is no worse than some of its neighbours. From a return, I understand, Kippax has 22 people receiving relief, the weekly allowance being £3 4s., but Garforth follows closely with a weekly expenditure of £2 14s. 6d., although the number of persons drawing money is not so large.

When Crossgates was included in the ancient parish of Barwick, the residents of the former place were wont to say that they had no poor—behalf of Barwick and Scholes. However that may be, it is evident that Barwick and Scholes are not getting a heavy return for their poor rate, inasmuch as the total amount spent on the poor there is only 13s. 6d. weekly. Aberford, too, is in a good position, but Preston and Milford draw substantial sums.

Teachers in local elementary schools are finding that their best friends are the County Councils seem to be satisfied. Members of the Urban Council have told me they would have been pleased had they got more, but the award was not such a bad one after all, and members of Tadcaster District Council say they knew Garforth would get something and perhaps it was not getting too much. Of course, had it got less it would have been all the better for the rural district. Seeing everybody concerned is satisfied, no one else counts.

With the award of £209 to Garforth, members of both Tadcaster Rural and Garforth Urban Councils seem to be satisfied. Members of the Urban Council have told me they would have been pleased had they got more, but the award was not such a bad one after all, and members of Tadcaster District Council say they knew Garforth would get something and perhaps it was not getting too much. Of course, had it got less it would have been all the better for the rural district. Seeing everybody concerned is satisfied, no one else counts.

A determined effort to check the aggression of Leeds and other places is being made by the County Council, whose action has an especial interest for the parishes in Tadcaster, Rothwell, and Hunslet areas. A deputation, including among others Ald. G. R. Lane Fox, M.P., and Mr E. H. Foster, C.C., has been appointed to wait upon the President of the Local Government Board and urge upon him the adoption of a certain line of policy pending the appointment of a Royal Commission to inquire into the whole question so far as the West Riding is concerned. But if the Local Government Board would revert to its old position further trouble would be averted, and there would be no necessity to have an inquiry. In the old days the consent of the residents of a place had to be secured before it could be annexed by a town or city, or maladministration had to be proved against the authority within whose jurisdiction the parish was. That, in my opinion, was a very sensible plan to work upon, but since Mr John Burns assumed control at the Local Government Board office it has been impossible to ascertain upon what basis annexation schemes were considered.

It will be remembered that Leeds failed to secure the annexation of Roundhay, Seacroft, and Crossgates at the first attempt, but on precisely the same facts, a few years afterwards, the Local Government Board issued an order for the incorporating of these parishes in Leeds. It was impossible to get any reason for the change of opinion, and a policy which can be chopped and changed at will is not good enough. What right, for instance, has Leeds to seek the annexation of Oulton, Woodlesford, Templenewsam, and Middleton, carrying with it the swamping of a whole rural area, or the extension of the city boundaries to Rothwell, in defiance of public opinion? Were these places badly administered one could easily understand the attitude of Leeds, but the areas are admirably served, and the people, not political parties, have control of their own affairs.

Garforth's failure to persuade the N.E.R. Co. to give an all-day cheap fare to Leeds will cause no surprise. If the company thought the exchequer would benefit they might be moved to action, but they are 'cute enough to discern that persons who travel to the city in the morning would do so in any circumstances, and that those who desire the benefit of the cheap fare would make the time arranged by the Company convenient to them. It is doubtful that a penny more would go into the coffers of the N.E.R. Co. by the suggested extension.

Moreover, why should Garforth expect more than is given to other places? It is always wise to take a reasonable view of matters, and from the first I thought the Urban Council's application was doomed. Crossgates was the first place in the district to get the cheap afternoon fare, but Scholes, despite the sending of letters, resolutions, and petitions, has not been placed in a similarly privileged position? How, then, could Garforth expect an all-day cheap fare when Scholes cannot get an afternoon cheap fare?

The position of the Garforth tradesman who wrote to the N.E.R. Co. protesting against any extension of the cheap fare can easily be understood. He was looking after his own interests, as he had a perfect right to do, but the protest would have had little weight with the N.E.R. officials, because, they, too, are out for what they can get, and it is their policy to persuade as many people as possible to travel by rail. Garforthians generally would not, I suppose, object to reduced fares all day, nor, in fact, to free travelling, because, like the opposing tradesman, they would consider they were studying their own interests.

Apparently at Wetherby all the people who attend church and chapel are not good timekeepers, but I'm afraid it is a failing to which many other than Wetherby folks would plead guilty. Sunday, it is believed, is the day of rest, and people are in no hurry to get up—they rest, and then they have a rush to get to a place of worship, completely counteracting the effects of the nice rest they have had. Their motto is "Better late than never," and the fact that they attend worship at all will, they think, be a point in their favour at the audit.

Various methods are adopted by parsons for reforming late-comers. One rev. gentleman I know used to stop the service until the "better late than never" lot got to their seats, and, of course, the congregation's attention was directed to them. He managed eventually to cure them. Another parson was so annoyed by people coming into church during service that he threatened to publicly name all the offenders, but he didn't, because there was no need to. The threat was sufficient. Many parsons, however, are frightened to offend people, some of whom patronize a church or chapel as they would a shop, and little undesirable things consequently creep into church life.

Why not plant trees in Templenewsam? It was suggested that one way of celebrating the coronation at Halton would be by planting trees, but it did not come off. Funds were not available, but the District Council may oblige. The "Post" states:—

> There is no more pleasantly wooded residential district on the verge of a great centre of population than Roundhay. Apart from the park itself, the beauties of Old Park Road, Oakwood Lane, and adjacent thoroughfares supply a notable case in point. Long before the district was incorporated with Leeds, the local Authority recognised the æsthetic importance not only of preserving its natural beauty but of adding to it by planning avenues of young trees.

Now if the local authority—Roundhay and Seacroft Council—had power to spend money in this way, the Hunslet District Council have, and the question might very well be discussed by the Ratepayers' Association again

A sum of £1, collected at Monk Fryston, has been sent to Leeds Infirmary, per Mr John Longhorn.

The Rev. Canon Geldard has been curate and rector at All Saints' Church, Kirk Deighton, for more than half a century, and at the same place of worship Mr H. Woodbridge has held the position of organist for more than 40 years.

A Weekly Article specially Written for

Amateur Gardeners, Allotment Holders, &c.

By ALBERT CLARKE, Birkenshaw.

THE FLOWER GARDEN

The true value of herbaceous perennials is not generally recognised, especially by amateurs. There are numerous varieties easily raised from seed which will come true to type, and in many instances flower during their first year. The price of herbaceous plants of flowering size is sufficiently high to prevent many would-be growers from including them in their garden schemes. From a few shillings worth of seed hundreds of vigorous plants may be obtained, and their requirements are extremely simple. It is important that an early start be made. The first week in February is not too early to sow the seed. A compost of equal parts loam and leaf-mould, with a liberal sprinkling of sand will suit them well during the seedling stage.

Cauliflower.—A light, richly manured soil is essential; and it must be thoroughly and deeply broken up. The earliest out-door bed requires to be on a warm, sheltered border. The land must be generously treated if good results are desired; and since the crop is justly one of the most esteemed, summer plantings should be put out in the very best soil possible. Sow during February or March in boxes on a gentle hot-bed or under a cool frame in a sunny corner, 1 ounce of seed to 4 square yards, in shallow drills 10 inches apart. Cover with ¼ inch of fine soil. Use only the best strains of seeds. Prick out the plants from the earliest sowing into another frame, or under handlights, as soon as they are large enough to handle; give all the air consistent with safety; and finally plant out about mid-May, 15 inches apart. Constant hoeing and an occasional heavy watering will be necessary. A constant supply of soil moisture is absolutely essential.

PLANTS UNDER GLASS.

AMERICAN CARNATIONS

These popular flowers are now beginning to make progress. A night temperature of 40 to 50 degrees suits them well. Ventilation should be freely given on all favourable occasions. Watering is a task which must be carefully carried out at this time of the year. The plants should be approaching dryness before being watered, but when it is really needed a thorough soaking should be given. The atmosphere of the house should be fairly dry, and this entails care in watering. It is a mistake to spill and splash the water about in a haphazard manner. Surplus water should be mopped up from the floor after watering or washing out. A damp atmosphere is conducive to an attack of carnation rust. Thrip, greenfly, and red spider are terrible pests to the carnation. These should be kept down by fumigating. If increased stock is required the present is a splendid time for the propagation of cuttings. Side shoots growing on the main or centre stem are the best for the purpose. Those strike readily in sand and leaf-mould, equal parts of each, in a warm propagating case. A simple method of rooting cuttings is to half fill a 9-inch pot with sand and leaf-mould, dibble the cuttings in, and cover with a sheet of glass. Place in a warm, light position, and reverse the glass daily. Under this system root connexion is about 3 weeks time. The stem of the cutting is encased by the base of the leaves. This should be carefully cut away. If left on rooting will be considerably delayed.

CLEANING

During spells of bad weather, when out-door work is at a standstill, the glass-houses should be thoroughly cleaned. Glass and woodwork may be scrubbed with hot, soapy water, walls lime-washed, and pipes coated with boiled linseed oil and lamp black. Permanent staglings, covered with coke breeze, gravels, or some similar moisture-holding material, should be covered with fresh material. Continual watering of the plants standing on the staglings washes out a quantity of soil, which in time clogs up the breeze, etc., to such an extent as to cause sourness. This in turn encourages the growth of moss, which is not only unsightly, but offers protection to snails and other greenhouse pests. Wood-lice are very destructive and these usually congregate in secluded corners under the staglings or somewhere near where the hot-water pipes enter the house. Every corner should be thoroughly cleaned out, and if boiling water is available in quantity it may be freely used whilst the house is empty. If poured into cracks and crevices of the walls, floor, etc., it will probably scorch and destroy countless insects which in course of time would prove a source of worry and annoyance. When returning plants to the house the pots should be scrubbed clean, and the plants sponged or otherwise cleaned according to the discretion of the grower. Foliage plants such as palms, crotons, etc., are best cleaned by sponging. Ferns and rough-leaved plants may be cleaned by giving them a thorough syringing.

GENERAL REMINDERS

Sow seeds of tomatoes, lettuce, parsley, sweet-williams and cherkias under glass.

Numerous kinds of plants may be propagated from cuttings now if a warm house is available. Coleus, double geraniums, petunias, heliotrope, and salvias are but a few amongst many.

Place a few bulbs in heat every week to keep up a regular supply of bloom.

Propagate Glorie-de Lorraine Begonias as soon as cuttings are available. Although season of growth is required to produce large plants. They root well in cocoa-fibre refuse in a warm propagating frame. Basal growths only.

KITCHEN GARDEN

Advantage should be taken of the opportunity to wheel manure on to the land during spells of severe frost. The work is much easier then, whilst the surface is hard, than at any other time. Digging or trenching should be proceeded with when the ground is in a suitable condition.

On no account should digging be proceeded with whilst the ground is frozen. To turn frozen lumps of soil into the ground only results in keeping it cold much later in the spring, and retards the progress of early crops. The advice now being given in southern papers in regard to the sowing of peas, beans, etc., may be entirely disregarded so far as the North of England is concerned. Seed sown now is simply wasted.

The Bradford City Coroner held an inquiry on Tuesday into the death of Alice Maud Lacon, of Long Row, Low Moor. The mother of the girl, whose hands were bandaged, said she had snatched a razor from her daughter when the latter was in the act of cutting her throat. The girl, who was twenty-three years of age, had been unable to follow her employment owing to ill-health. A verdict of "Suicide whilst temporarily insane" was returned.

THE LADIES' COLUMN

To darken brown boots, wash once a week with saddle soap and water, and clean daily with a dark brown boot polish.

When making pastry that is to be served cold, milk should be used for the mixing, and the pastry will keep short and crisp longer than if mixed with water.

A scullery table is often difficult to keep nice, for the constant scrubbing roughens it. The best covering, and the cheapest in the end, is a sheet of zinc nailed on to cover the edges. Failing this, cut a piece of linoleum the exact size to cover it.

Flannels should not be ironed. Pull out evenly while on the clothes-line, fold, and place at the bottom of the clothes-basket. This will make them quite smooth.

Odd scraps of soap should be collected, placed in a saucepan on the stove with enough water to cover them, and allowed to dissolve. Then roll into balls and place on one side to dry. They can be used for scrubbing.

To patch torn or disfigured wallpaper, tear roughly a piece of paper to match a little larger than the size required, without definite shape, and paste it smoothly over the spot. The torn edge will not be as noticeable as a carefully-cut piece.

When washing stockings, soak first in cold water to remove the dust. No amount of rinsing afterwards has the same effect.

Celery can be kept for a week or longer by first rolling it up in brown paper. Then pin it in a towel and keep it in a dark, cool place. Before preparing it for the table place it in cold water and let it remain for an hour. This will make it crisp and cool.

To remove the smell of fish from forks, wash the forks in hot water, then remove from the water, and rub over with a tiny piece of butter. Wash again and all smell will disappear.

Try oatmeal for cleaning white paint in bedrooms. Dip a damp cloth in the oatmeal, and rub the paint well over with this. Then wipe off with a clean, damp cloth, and polish with a clean duster. Oatmeal is especially effective for removing finger-marks from doors.

After washing a white knitted jersey put it on a coathanger and hang it on a line in the air to dry. It will keep the shape much better if this is done than if it is merely hung on a line, and is not so liable to stretch.

To clean bread boards, rub well with a slice of cut lemon and then wash in cold water. This will keep them white and in a better condition than if scrubbed with soap and water.

FURNITURE POLISH

The following mixture is excellent for polishing furniture, and will often remove scratches if well rubbed in: Mix together equal quantities of turpentine, boiled linseed oil, vinegar, and methylated spirits. Bottle and use when required

FOR LEATHER CHAIRS.

White of egg is splendid for renovating leather chairs when they begin to look shabby. Remove all dust and dirt from the chairs, then rub with a cloth dipped in the white of egg, which should first have been well beaten. When dry, rub well with soft, clean cloths, and the leather will look almost like new again.

SEWING HINTS

Always use double thread for gathering. Use as fine a thread and needle as the garment will allow. When threading your needle make the knot on the end broken from the reel. In sewing a seam put the stitches closely together, but lightly, into the cloth, being careful not to pull the thread tight as it causes the seam to draw. Gathers should always be set on the right side, but never with a needle; use a pin.

TO REMOVE STAINS FROM BOARDS

To remove ink-stains sprinkle liberally with salt, and rub vigorously with half a lemon. Grease-stains may be removed by the application of a paste made of equal quantities of pearl-ash, and fuller's earth moistened with boiling water. The paste should be left on stain for about twelve hours, and then washed off with soap and water, or lime and hot water.

USES OF PLASTER OF PARIS

A packet of plaster of Paris kept in a wide-necked bottle may be found very useful. Small articles can be fixed by picture nails, etc., are quickly repaired with a very little plaster mixed with water. Combined with glue, all kinds of china and brica-brac may be mended; it will withstand heat, dry quickly, and the surplus remaining on the edge of the join can be scraped off. Small portions of gilt picture frames may be remodelled and regilded with success. It must be remembered that only a small portion may be used at a time, and that plaster of Paris must be kept properly dry until required.

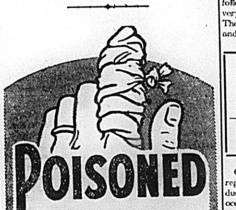
HOW TO TREAT VELVET

Velvet that has been spotted with the rain should not be brushed dry. Shake the velvet and leave it. The water will evaporate and show no mark, unless the velvet was dusty before getting wet. In that case wipe the velvet while still damp with a clean damp cloth. This will remove the dust. Then shake well and leave to dry.

CREASY BOOTS

Often when one has purchased a pair of boots, one doesn't know till they are home that they creak. However, the disagreeable noise may be stopped by taking them back to the shoemaker and asking him to apply some of them on each side and insert between the soles a teaspoonful of French chalk. This process costs only a trifle and answers admirably.

BEDROOM VENTILATION



One of the best and simplest methods of ventilating a bedroom is that of procuring a piece of wood four inches in depth and of the same breadth as the window, and inserting this along the bottom of the frame after raising the lower sash. The window should then be lowered on to the strip of wood, fresh air entering the room in the centre between the two sashes.

CONCERNING CANDLES

The longer candles are kept the better they are. Discolouration can be instantly removed by wiping with a piece of flannel dipped in spirits of wine. A pinch of fine salt in the cup of wax round the wick makes the candle last longer and burn much better. Another good tip is to varnish the candles with white varnish. Don't use them for quite ten days after this.

APPLES FOR PIES

Before paring apples for pies it is a good plan to place them in the oven for a few minutes, as this facilitates the removal of the skin. Hot water should first be poured over them. They should then be drained and placed on the top shelf of the oven for a few minutes, the door being left ajar. At the end of this time the apples should be removed and the skin lightly pared off with a sharp knife, when there will be much less waste than if they were pared in the ordinary manner.

POISONED FINGER

Cleansed & Healed by ZAM-BUK.

"I PRICKED my left fore-finger with a rusty safety-pin," writes Mrs. A. Newman, of 58 Cuthbert St., Aberfelly St., Poplar, London, E.

"Blood-poison was set up, and on both the injured finger and the next one festering sores broke out and spread to the first joints. The throbbing and burning pain was almost unbearable. My hand was practically useless.

"Poultices and ointments failed to check the pain or heal the sores. Zam-Buk, however, did both. A few hours after dressing my poisoned fingers with this herbal balm the pain was soothed.

"I used Zam-Buk daily and the poison was gradually drawn away. My fingers then healed up with new skin. Zam-Buk also cured my children, Henry (5) and Bessie (3) of very bad scalp sores."

There's Nothing to Equal ZAM-BUK.

Eczema Cured.—"Itchy red spots came all over my skin," says Mrs. F. P. Walbridge, East Chaldon Cottages, nr. Weymouth, Dorset. "My arms and legs were the worst. The more I scratched the skin the more irritable it got. A doctor said I had dry eczema. I went to the Weymouth Hospital for treatment.

"It was only Zam-Buk, however, that relieved the burning sensation and caused the hard and fiery pimples to die away. My skin is now quite clear and healthy."

Sore & Cracked Skin.—"The skin on my face and neck cracked into painful sores," says Mr. J. Beaver, 214, King Edward Road, Birmingham. "My face was an awful sight, and I was afraid to stir away from work. I tried different remedies in vain until I was induced to use Zam-Buk. This herbal balm seemed to sink deep into my skin. Besides soothing away the inflammation Zam-Buk replaced the sore skin with healthy tissue."

FARMERS AND THEIR ACCOUNTS.

A lecture on "Farm Accounts" was given by Mr John Orr, assistant director, Institute of Agricultural Economics in the University of Oxford, at a meeting of the West of Scotland Agricultural Association Society in Glasgow. He said that in order to encourage the keeping of accounts and to obtain information on the subject from a scheme was carried out was that the farmers daily filled up labour sheets, recording the time of men and horses, and food sheets recording the amount and value of feeding stuffs consumed by live stock. These sheets were sent to the Institute, and analysed there, and ledger accounts were opened for all kinds of produce and live stock sold, so that a balance-sheet might be obtained at the end of accounts presented to the farmer at the end of the year.

It is definitely arranged that Mr Lloyd George will speak at Huddersfield, in connection with his land campaign early in March. The date is still uncertain, but it will probably be Saturday, March 7th.

A SUCCESSFUL BREEDING SEASON.

(Readers are particularly requested to note that this series of articles commenced with the first issue in January. In order to obtain their full value, the earlier articles should be read in conjunction with the current one).

THE STRENGTH OF THE HAREM.

I maintain that it is impossible to lay down a hard and fast rule as to the strength of the harem. So many conflicting conditions must be taken into consideration. A cockerel enjoying free range will fertilise the eggs of many more hens than if confined to a small run. The season of the year has a great influence, and the same fertility cannot be expected in December as in April. Male birds of heavy breeds require a smaller harem than those of the sprightly Mediterranean types. Then the natural disposition of the male bird himself is a factor which overthrows any mathematical formula. The age of the bird has its effect, and if it is possible to form any actual deduction from all these conditions, temporary variations in the cock's health would immediately discount it. A hard and fast rule cannot be given, but in my opinion it is safer to slightly under-estimate the male bird's power, as we are desirous of enjoying a successful breeding season.

It is interesting at this stage to note that the male bird almost entirely confines his attentions to the hens that are laying, and this fact should be borne in mind when you hear wild stories of enormous harems and all eggs fertile. Possibly no more than one-third were laying at any given period.

Mr J. H. Sutcliffe in his admirable book "Artificial Incubation and its Laws" gives the following "approximately rough guide, as so very much depends upon the stamina of the stock. The table assumes that the stock is fully matured and in good condition."

	CONFINED		AT LIBERTY
	Early in Season or in Mild Weather	Later in Season or in Severe Weather	Early in Season or in Mild Weather	Later in Season or in Severe Weather
HEAVY BREEDS.	3 to 6	4 to 8	5 to 6	7 to 12
MEDIUM ...	4 to 6	5 to 10	6 to 8	10 to 20
LIGHT ...	5 to 8	7 to 12	8 to 15	10 to 24

Careful observation, and regular tests as regards fertility are essential, adding to or deducting from the harem as necessity arises; occasionally it will be obligatory to change the male bird should infertility occur; in such cases, do not delay, the successful breeding season is of brief duration, and during the period every day is of vital importance.

PERIOD FROM MATING TO FERTILITY.

Again I deprecate a mathematical formula; experiments have demonstrated that an egg has been fertile laid on the third day after mating. This, however, it quite exceptional, and for practical purposes it is advisable to allow quite a week to elapse before setting the eggs.

PERIOD OF MALE BIRD'S INFLUENCE AFTER REMOVAL.

Another vexed question, and in my opinion varying according to circumstances connected with each individual case. A period of ten days is the greatest limit I have personally known of a fertile egg after the last coition, though cases of fertility have been quoted up to eight and ten weeks. These instances, however, are very rare, and the statements have been in more or less vague terms and lacking detail. I should never set eggs that were laid more than seven days after removal of the cock; do not misunderstand me, I am not denying fertility can exist beyond that duration of time, but I believe the percentage of fertile eggs would be so small, a fair profit could be made by selling or eating them.

CATTLE

WHITKIRK AUCTION MART, Monday.—Messrs Bartle and Son offered at their fortnightly sale 77 newly-in and in-calf store cattle, 87 fat beasts, 127 sheep, 12 fat pigs, and 10 calves. An improved trade for dairy cattle. The best sold were calves cows realised £13 to £16; useful kinds £19 to £21 10s.; present calvers to £23 15s., February calvers to £20 2s. 6d., eighteen months' old store beasts to £11 5s. Fat beasts made late quotations; best heifers and bullocks to 7½d., secondary and medium sorts 7d. to 7¼d., cows to 6¾d. per lb.; bullocks to £22 10s., heifers to £21 17s. 6d., cows to £21, bulls to £25. Fat sheep again met a good demand. Choice shearlings and haggetts 10d. to 10½d. per lb., ewes 8d. to 9d. per lb. Pork pigs made to £4 5s., large fat pigs to £4 1s. 6d. Stores and pigs were shown coming to swing fever restrictions. Veal calves realised to £5 3s., and store calves to £2 2s. each.

SELBY, Monday.—At this mart Messrs Richardson and Son disposed of 91 beasts, 20 sheep, and 57 pigs. There was a fair attendance of buyers. The quality of stock was handy to last week's average, and prices were slightly easier, except-ing one or two good incalving cows, which sold at advanced prices. Sheep realised late rates. A slower trade for pigs, all except the finest quality making 6d. per stone less money. Prices:—Fat bullocks realised up to £21 7s. 6d., fat heifers to £18 12s. 6d., fat cows to £17 10s., store beasts to £12 5s., cows in milk to £18 17s. 6d., incalving cows to £17 12s. 6d., fat hoggs to £2 14s. 6d., pork pigs to £6 17s. 6d., and store pigs to £2 5s. 6d. each.

WETHERBY, Monday.—At this mart Messrs Thomlinson and Son had a large entry of both beasts and sheep, which met a good trade, and fully late prices were realised. The attendance of butchers and dealers was above the average, and competition was good all through the sale. Best beef made from 8s. 3d. to 8s. 9d., small choice weights realised 9s., and cows and stronger bullocks 7s. 9d. to 8s. per stone. Sheep were good to sell at 10d. to 11d. per lb. Bacon and pork pigs made from 8s. to 8s. 6d. per stone. Numbers sold: 112 beasts and calves, 301 sheep and hoggs, and 16 pork pigs. Prices ruled in favour of the vendors, and a bright and satisfactory sale was gone through. Mrs Oxter, of Hunsingore, sent five well-finished fat bullocks, which made £31 15s., £30, £26 2s. 6d., and £25 2s. 6d.; Mr G. P. A STANKS FARMER AND HIS WIFE.

STORY TOLD AT THE SKYRACK COURT.

WIFE'S SUMMONS DISMISSED.

At the Leeds West Riding Petty Sessions on Tuesday the magistrates spent some time in hearing a case, in which John Stainburn, farmer, of Stanks, was summoned by his wife, Mrs Ellen Stainburn, for persistent cruelty.

Mr Scholes appeared for the defendant, and denied the cruelty.

Evidence was given by Mrs Stainburn that on Wednesday last she was carrying a bucket of water from a well in the garden when her husband came up, took the bucket from her hand and upset the contents, and afterwards spit in her face. She also complained that her daughter, who had been at home for six days' from service, had been subjected to abuse by her husband.

The Chairman: How long have you been married?

Witness: Twenty years.

The Chairman: Has he been a good husband?

Witness: No, not from the first.

The Chairman: Is it a frequent occurrence?

Witness: Yes, sometimes.

Mrs. Stainburn said that about three or four months ago her husband got hold of her by the throat, and she had gone to the police at Crossgates, and shown them the marks upon her throat.

The Chairman: Was he drunk or sober?

Witness: No, he does not take much drink.

Mr Scholes revealed to previous summonses the woman, who said she was married at Liverpool in 1894. About a year later her husband found work at Manchester, but she did not go with him.

Mr Scholes: You declined to go with him.

Witness: No, he simply packed up his box and went himself.

Mr Scholes: How long did you remain in Liverpool before joining him in Manchester?

Witness: Two years.

Mr Scholes: Did you try to get a maintenance order against him at Liverpool and fail?

Witness: Yes, he won the case by telling untruths, and I lost by telling the truth.

Mr Scholes asked if the trouble did not arise over the fact that she did not want to leave her home in Liverpool?

Witness denied this.

Mr Scholes asked if it was not true that her husband had complained about her treatment of the children.

Witness denied this.

Mr Scholes: Have you ever frightened them by running them with a hot poker?

Witness: No, I love them too much for that.

Mr Scholes: I put it to you that you ran your son with a hot leettle.

Witness: No, I might have done it to the father.

The daughter, Grace Stainburn, was called to support the mother's evidence. She said her father was always quarrelling. Referring to the bucket of water incident, she said there was no provocation for her father's conduct.

The husband, in the witness box, said, in answer to Mr Scholes, that they had lived unhappily solely through the desire of the woman to return to Liverpool. She had tried three times to get a maintenance order against him. Her conduct was very cruel towards the children. She had a very hasty temper.

Daughter Stainburn (14) said his father and mother were always quarrelling. He had gone home at dinner-time, but got no dinner. His mother had given him with a brush instead.

The Chairman: Why did she do that? Did you deserve it?

Witness: No, it was because she did not like me.

Sergt. Haigh said he knew the couple well. Mrs Stainburn had often sent to the police complaining of her husband's conduct, and an officer had been sent round to warn him. The man was very steady.

The magistrates dismissed the case, the Chairman remarking that it would be much better if they could only agree to live reasonably, and for them to come together.

ROTHWELL MAN ENTERS BY THE WINDOW.

A NOISE IN THE NIGHT.

At the Leeds West Riding Petty Sessions on Tuesday, John Brown, miner, of Rothwell, and Annie Brown, his wife, were summoned for using obscene language at Rothwell on Sunday, January 4th.

P.C. Bosomworth gave evidence that at 12.10 p.m. on the date given he was in Commercial Street, Rothwell, and heard someone shouting. He proceeded up Commercial Street, and saw the female defendant standing outside the door of her house with a key in her hand. She was using obscene language, and he tried to get her to go inside the house. She had had some drink. The male defendant was in the house, he having climbed in at the window. He, too, was using obscene language.

The officer added that it took him and another officer an hour to get them to settle down. He described the pair as a disgrace to the district.

The female defendant, who was the only one present, denied having used the language.

P.C. Womack corroborated the evidence of the other officer.

The male defendant, who had been before the Bench on two previous occasions, was fined 10s. and costs, and the female defendant 2s. 6d. and costs.

WHAT IS THE VALUE OF VACCINATION?

The Dewsbury Guardians have rejected a resolution proposed by Mr Robert Gledhill asking the Government to inquire into the working of the conscientious objection clauses of the Vaccination Act of 1906.

In reply to a claim made by Mr Gledhill that children did not suffer from smallpox because they were vaccinated and re-vaccinated, the Rev. F. W. Batt-Thompson, a Batley Baptist minister, who has been in the army, said nearly every soldier sucked the lymph from his arm immediately after being vaccinated. It appeared, therefore, that if Mr Gledhill's statement was correct, the moral effect of contact with the vaccination officer was greater than the physical effect of the vaccine. (Laughter).

Mr J. Overend (Ravensthorpe) asked that six vaccinated members of his family had small-pox, and the only unvaccinated member escaped it. If the Guardians wanted to know a good remedy, he might mention that he had never heard of a person who took snuff suffering from smallpox. (Laughter).

At Wilts. Assizes Robert Michael Hall, 49, solicitor, an ex-Mayor of Salisbury and member of various public bodies, was sentenced to three years' penal servitude for fraud.

GILCHRIST LECTURES AT GARFORTH.

FORMATION OF SUN AND STARS.

The Gilchrist lectures at Garforth are already an assured success. Every section of the residents has rallied to the support of the representative committee, and at the first lecture on Friday night the fine central hall of the Council School was crowded, standing room hardly being available. It was a splendid audience, and the lecture on "The Mists and Formation of the Sun and Stars," by the Rev. A. L. Cortie, S.J., F.R.A.S., of Stonyhurst College Observatory, was a very interesting and instructive one.

Colonel Gascoigne, D.S.O., of Lotherton Hall, who presided, said that a few facts concerning the founder of the Gilchrist Trust might prove interesting. James Barthuick Gilchrist was born in Edinburgh in 1750, and after studying medicine he entered the service of the East India Company as an assistant surgeon. Without a knowledge of Hindoostanee he found himself at a disadvantage in his dealings with the natives, and he went and lived among the people, and he at length became an accomplished Hindoostanee scholar. When the Governor General established a college at Calcutta, Dr Gilchrist was appointed Professor of Hindoostanee, but at the end of five years his health broke down, and he returned to England. He gave lectures in Hindoostanee in London, and was afterwards in business for a time, subsequently returning to London where he persuaded the East India Company to establish a professorship of Hindoostanee, which he himself held for several years. He was instrumental in founding University College, London, and he and a few others started the Mechanics' Institute movement. He displayed an interest in many other institutions, and when he died in 1841 he left most of his money for scientific and educational purposes all over the world. The memory of Dr Gilchrist was revered throughout the British Empire. (Applause).

The lecturer, who has a racy style, dealt with his subject in a simple and lucid manner, and his humorous way of putting things at once placed him on excellent terms with the audience, who followed his remarks with rapt attention. "You know what the sun is?" he asked, and immediately there were smiles, which developed into laughter when he asserted "You do not know—you think you know, but there are sometimes see it at Garforth." They saw the moon, the planets, and the stars, and the first question they had to ask was whether all these heavenly bodies were just as they now saw them, or were they gradually formed. He would begin with our own small system—and it was a very small one when compared with other systems—and a beautiful picture of Mercury, Mars, Venus, the Earth, Uranus, Jupitor, Saturn, and Neptune was thrown on the screen. All these bodies, he pointed out, turned the same way—from right to left, and it seemed to show these planets belonged to the same family, and they all went round the Sun in the same way. Illustrating the distances from the Sun, he said that supposing they wished to attend that lecture at Garforth and they had had to come from the Sun, they would, travelling by express train at 60 miles an hour, have had to start 175 years ago. (Laughter). He had some humorous remarks to make about Sun spots, to which the newspapers attributed all manner of things. The spots on the Sun looked black, he said, but they were no darker than anything they knew on earth, and the fact that the spots were in front of something brighter made them look dark.

Fine photographs of Mars were exhibited. People said that Mars was inhabited, but they had not got into communication with it yet. He poked fun at those who proposed schemes for getting into touch with the Martians, and intimated that a baby had had a huge scare of money for the first person who could establish communication. "There's a chance for you," said Father Cortie, amidst laughter. "The first message will come," he said, "when communication is established, will be 'Are you there?'" (Laughter). One of the best pictures was Saturn and its rings, which the lecturer told a story of a Lancashire man, who, at one of his lectures, said it was like "a puddin' on a plate." The rings, he explained, were not solid, but were made up of millions of small bodies. Developing his argument, he said that the planets not only turned all the same way but they kept to the same plane. Showing a magnificent view of Halley's comet, which elicited loud applause, he said that comets did not belong to our family; they were a sort of celestial mother-in-law, visiting the family occasionally. (Laughter).

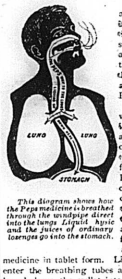
Father Cortie, in describing the star system, asked how many stars they thought they could see at any time of the year? About 6,000. The greatest telescope in the world, however, revealed 100,000,000 stars. Light travelled at 186,000 miles per second, and it took it 4½ years to travel from the nearest star reached by man. By means of photos, some of which were taken after an exposure of from 6 to 10 hours on the great telescopes, nebulæ, or gaseous matter, were shown, and those describing spiral nebulæ were particularly interesting. He showed how they could tell what they were made of by analysing the light, and the little experiment in the screen was received with keen appreciation. Again by means of slides he demonstrated a similarity of construction in the Sun's corona and nebulæ, and he argued from this that the stars were made from nebulæ and that they were made of the same material as the earth. He concluded his lecture with a statement of belief in the Creator. What, he said, they had got were matter and motion. Someone put the matter there, and Someone started it. (Applause).

Mr H. J. Denby, as Chairman of the Committee, proposed a vote of thanks to Father Cortie. He was sure everyone had been delighted with the lecture, and it must have been very gratifying to Father Cortie to visit a country place and see such a large audience. They had had Gilchrist lectures 15 or 16 years ago, and he hoped that when another course was arranged Father Cortie would be induced to return and give them another lecture. (Applause).

Mr T. W. Thornton, in seconding, said that Father Cortie had given them an entrancing lecture. It had been rendered by clearness and simplicity, due to his wide knowledge of the subject and his great ability in dealing with it. He knew something of photography, but the photographs had come to him as a revelation, and it seemed to him that they had been present at the formation of worlds. (Applause).

The vote was very cordially passed, and Father Cortie, in reply, told a story about a Lancashire man who described an observatory as a place where they studied "economy."

On the call of Mr Denby, a vote of thanks was also passed to Colonel Gascoigne for presiding.



The arrangements were made by a committee, of which Messrs H. W. Powell and T. D. Thornton are hon. secs.

PERILS OF NEGLECTED COLDS.

LUNG WEAKNESS WARDED OFF BY PEPS.

One lesson should be strictly observed in every home. Never neglect a cold, and don't treat it in a happy-go-lucky fashion. You run into real danger if you do.

Chronic winter-cough, bronchitis, asthma, and inflammation on the lungs are invariably traceable to neglected colds, and when the lungs are strained and weakened by constant coughing they more readily succumb to pleurisy, pneumonia, and even consumption.

This diagram shows how the Peps medicine is breathed through the windpipe direct into the lungs. Liquid, lymic and the Peps of ordinary lozenges go into the stomach.

Directly one feels a slight hoarseness in the throat, has a tickling cough, or a sensation of soreness and tightness about the chest the best thing to do is to take a few breatheable Peps tablets.

The incomparable value of Peps in curing coughs and colds and routing dangerous complications is traceable to a unique feature in the remedy. Peps treat by direct contact the real seat of disease in the throat, bronchial tubes, and lungs. Peps are the first successful volatile or breatheable throat and chest medicine. Liquid medicine cannot enter the breathing tubes and lungs; it is swallowed down the gullet into the stomach, and as our diagram shows, the passages to the lungs and the stomach are quite separate and distinct.

When the little Peps tablet (taken from its silver wrapper) is placed on the tongue, powerful healing fumes are given off by the dissolving tablet and are carried with the breath into all parts of the throat and chest.

Chest comfort accompanies every deeply-drawn breath of the Peps-laden air. Soreness in the throat is quickly allayed. That desire to free the throat by "hawking" leaves one, and the dry hacking cough soon ceases to be troublesome. Persevere with the Peps direct treatment and tightness of the chest is released, while the phlegm that chokes the bronchial tubes is loosened and easily expectorated. The breathing gets easier and soreness rapidly disappears.

Peps are the one medicine to arrest a cold and simultaneously give to every part of the throat, lungs, and chest, the strength and help necessary to successfully resist the evil effects of damp, cold, or foggy weather. Peps are sold by Chemists and Stores at 1s. 1½d. and 2s. 9d. Be sure you get Peps.

BARKSTON ASH CONSERVATISM.

MR LANE FOX, M.P., AND AGRICULTURAL LABOURERS' WAGES.

On Friday evening Mr G. R. Lane Fox, M.P., attended a social gathering promoted by the Conservatives at Carlton, near Selby. Mr Charles Weddall, of West Bank, presided, and there was a large attendance.

Mr Lane Fox, who had an excellent reception, delivered a short address, and said he was very glad to be present at that meeting of his constituents. In referring to matters of interest to those in agricultural districts, he dealt with the minimum wage question, pointing out that in certain counties, like Wiltshire and Oxfordshire, wages were lower than others. The fixing of a minimum wage might mean that in Yorkshire some workers would get less money, and that was a result to be guarded against.

With reference to the Insurance Act the Liberal party professed to be the friends of the agriculturists, but during the discussions on the Insurance Bill they would not listen to amendments proposed by the Unionist party to deal fairly with the agricultural labourers, who had a higher standard of health. Under the present Act the agricultural districts were having to pay benefits for the towns. He was certainly in favour of giving more just treatment to the villages. (Applause).

In touching upon the Government-n's land campaign, Mr Lane Fox said that their opponents' speeches were dealing with what they said was going to take place two years hence, but upon the questions of the immediate future, such as Home Rule Bill and the great injustice done to the Church in Wales, they said nothing. On the other hand, during the reign of the present Government an army of officials had been created and fat jobs found for them. The robbery of the Welsh Church the speaker denounced vigorously, and pointed out that at the last election very few in this country could be supposed to have given their votes in favour of it. (Hear, hear).

COUNTY COUNCIL AND CITY EXTENSION SCHEMES.

MR G. R. LANE FOX, M.P., AND MR E. H. FOSTER AS DEPUTATION.

At a meeting of the West Riding County Council on Wednesday the following resolutions, submitted by the Law and Parliamentary Committee, were passed:—

That the County Council of the West Riding of Yorkshire regard with apprehension the position which confronts them in view of the proposals of county and non-county boroughs for extension of their boundaries, and the creation of new county boroughs, whereby the integrity of the administrative county is threatened to a most serious extent, that the circumstances of the West Riding, with the issues involved, be placed before His Majesty's Government with a suggestion that the whole subject should be referred to a Royal Commission or other suitable tribunal for consideration, and that in the meantime no proposals for the extension of county boroughs nor any proposals for the establishment of new county boroughs, or which would lead up to the formation of such boroughs, should be proceeded with unless for very urgent reasons.

That a representation in support of the foregoing resolution be transmitted forthwith to the Local Government Board, and that the Chairman of the County Council and the Members for Suffolk, Chairman of this Committee, County Aldermen G. R. Lane Fox, M.P., and D. Hardaker, and County Councillor E. H. Foster be appointed a deputation to wait upon the Board, and to take all such steps in the matter as they may think expedient."

The President of the Local Government Board has intimated his willingness to receive the deputation on an early date.

IS TRADE ON THE EBB?

Presiding at a gathering of shipyard workers at Stockton, Mr Robert Ropner, J.P., a well-known Tees shipbuilder, stated that the shipbuilding industry had experienced a record year. High costs and values had ruled, and they were now face to face with a levelling down process. The trade of the world could not stand such a record pitch very long, and it had now had its effect. Supply had overtaken demand, and now they found commercial men a great deal more prudent and less disposed to launch out. They would rather see which way the cat jumped, and their actions were ruled by prudence, for a time at any rate. They had had the flow of trade, and he was now afraid they were in for the ebb, but he expressed the fervent hope that it would not be a slump but a gradual ebb. He strongly advised everyone concerned to make hay while the sun shone, and make the utmost of the present state of affairs, as a rainy day, he was afraid, would be sure to come.

SHERBURN AND SOUTH MILFORD WATER SUPPLY.

COMPLAINT TO THE COUNTY COUNCIL.

The minutes of the County Health and Housing Committee, submitted at a meeting of the County Council on Wednesday, showed that a written complaint having been received as to the inadequacy of the water supply to South Milford and Sherburn villages, a detailed inspection has been made. Since the Survey Report of 1909 a temporary scheme has been provided at South Milford, the water from a spring being collected in a tank and distributed from stand pipes in the streets, but although there is ample water available, this scheme does not meet the wants of the locality, and has to be supplemented from the various wells and by rain water. Further, the pressure would not allow of the water being taken inside the houses. The temporary scheme should therefore be replaced by a permanent pumping plant and storage reservoir, at such an altitude as would provide sufficient pressure in case of fire, and the water should be taken into the houses for cattle and wce purposes. Such a scheme could be carried out at reasonable cost.

With regard to the position of Sherburn, the inhabitants in the higher part of the village have, during the drought of the past summer, experienced much inconvenience by the failure of the public and private pump supplies, and water for drinking purposes had to be obtained on sufferance from the more fortunate well-owners. The water from the public pump, which is near the churchyard, has again on analysis proved to be contaminated. In the lower part of the village there are many blocks of property which have no supply of their own and can only obtain water on sufferance, and the public well in Finkle Street also failed during the drought. A recent examination of the water from this well confirms the previous opinions that the supply is unfit for drinking purposes.

Sixteen houses near Sherburn Station get their water from Bishopdyke for drinking and general purposes, and this stream is fouled by road washings. The condition of the village supply is generally unsatisfactory, and the District Council should be pressed to give the matter their serious consideration and provide a public supply.

At the last meeting of Tadcaster District Council the question was discussed, and sexton was ordered to be taken with regard to the Milford scheme, while the County Council were to be informed what was being done in respect to a supply for Sherburn.

FORMER NUN APPLETON SQUIRE'S STORY.

Sir Frederick Milner, formerly of Nun Appleton, has a good word to say about the Dukes of Sutherland. He writes:—

The late Duke's father used every year to visit in his yacht his crofters in those parts of his estates for removed from a station. I had the pleasure one year of accompanying him. As a rule the people came rushing down to welcome the Duke as soon as his yacht was sighted, and the most affectionate relations seemed to exist between him and his people; but when we put in at the Kyle of Tongue nobody turned up, and the Duke's factor and I landed to find out what was amiss. It appeared that the M.P. for the district had been stirring up the crofters against the Duke.

I asked one man, who had a very comfortable cottage with a new slate roof, what was the matter, and why they had not come to welcome the Duke as usual. He said "Because we've found him out. He's a big thief." I said, "Who told you that?" He said "Our member told us the land belonges to us, and not to him at all." I said "Tell him to go and tell that to the Duke." I then said to him "What rent do you pay for your croft?" He said he paid £4 a year. I said "You seem to have a nice cottage there. Did you put the new roof on?" He said, "Oh, no, the Duke did that." I said "Do you know how much he spent on your cottage last year?" He said he did not. I told him the roof and repairs cost £28, or seven years' rent, and asked him if he got the land for nothing and had to do his own repairs whether he would not be worse off. He seemed a good deal impressed.

A boy charged at Westminster with stealing old iron was said to have been in nineteen situations in two years.

Joseph Marcus Cepleritz Josephson, a Russian, appealed, in the Court of Criminal Appeal on Tuesday against the sentence of twelve months' hard labour, and the recommendation for deportation as an undesirable, for whipping a girl appreticed to him as a typist. The sentence was reduced to three months' hard labour.

When an old man eighty-one years of age was on Tuesday charged at Doncaster with attempting to commit suicide in a barber's shop, his son was asked if he could suggest any reason for his father's conduct. He said his father heard a sermon the previous Sunday, which had hold of his mind, showing him what a sinner he was and like Judas Iscariot.

Stated to have gone from her bedroom across three roofs to the house of Mrs Hannah Hawkins, Ella Elliott (13), a servant, was charged with burglary at Exeter and remanded. The police said the girl ran great risks to her life, and could only have done so when she was demented. She was discovered, it was alleged, through the smashing of a skylight and one of her slippers dropping into a bedroom.

A sensation was caused in Welbeck Street, Hull, on Sunday night by the discovery of a burglar under a bed in one of the houses. Mr and Mrs Ouston had been out, and on returning found the house had been entered. They got assistance, and on going upstairs found a man under the bed in one of the bedrooms. They got him out after a struggle and took him downstairs, where he got away from them.

A convict in Springfield Gaol, Essex, who attempted to escape by dressing himself in private clothing and pretending that he was a man who had been repairing the chapel organ, was so disappointed at his failure that he attempted to strangle himself with his bed clothes in his cell. Shirehall Corpora.ion Act of 1912 cost £9,01 18s. 2d. Of this total £8,099 was in counsel's fees, and £3,272 was Parliamentary agents' account. In addition, there is a sum of not more than £1,500 due to Corporation officials engaged in the promotion of the Bill.

SHOULD DANCES BE SUPERVISED?

The Rev. L. S. Savatard, vicar of Holy Trinity, Darwen, whose regulations with regard to dancing in the Church schools provoked considerable discussion a month ago, has returned to the subject.

Mr Savatard is satisfied that "many evils are the result of thoughtlessness. If parents duly exercise the right and power of their own control our task will be easier," he says, "while, in the case of young people who are allowed to go their own way, we must assert our right to save them from themselves.

"Possibly," says the vicar, "some of our girls, good as they are, do not understand that it is not quite proper form to be out dancing and going home late unaccompanied by an adult friend. Is may surprise some . . . to know that until 21 years ago dancing had never been allowed in any one of our three schools. Some of the grever and older members of the congregation blamed the vicar for permitting dancing at all, and ceased their financial support of the schools in consequence.

"Latterly many of the ladies present have been girls under age and unaccompanied, and the vicar regards it as incumbent upon him to exercise every reasonable safeguard possible."

IS THE RIVER.—On Monday at Castleford, Superintendent Aykroyd stated that some time ago a warrant had been issued against William Frudd, checkweighman's secretary, of Whitwood, for embezzling £40. The man's body had been recovered from the river on Sunday, and the warrant was therefore withdrawn.

SATURDAY, JANUARY 17th, 1914.

In the rural districts, particularly those which are near large centres of population, progressive ideas which may have a far-reaching effect on the community are at work. Wharfedale, one of the prettiest stretches of country in Yorkshire, may prove the starting ground of a great movement in the social uplifting of the people, and it is to the credit of the Rural Council that they realize there are problems to be tackled and that they are determined to attempt their solution. As everyone knows, unless people have good and adequate housing they cannot rear families decently, and frequently restricted accommodation gives rise to immorality. This is a question which might well have been tackled by religious bodies in places where it was known decent housing did not exist, but men have been either reluctant or afraid to interfere in social matters, lest they should get as a return, the ill-will of individuals, and so for years deplorable conditions have been brought about in towns and villages. In the Wharfedale area there is no evidence that such a state of things prevails, but there is an admitted scarcity of working-class cottages, and the Council have now under consideration a scheme which is intended to meet the needs of the parish of Adel. In addition it has been suggested by Mr Fawkes, the Chairman of the West Riding Small Holdings Committee—a man whom no one will label an extremist—that the authority should build houses throughout the area for their own workmen, and a favourable reception has been given to the proposal. He states that this is not a matter of sentiment, but of necessity, and, while he advocates the payment of an economic rent for the houses, he says that it is probable they may have to increase the wages of the men to meet it. He believes that it would make for efficiency; the men would live near their work; and the Council would benefit by that. In some rural districts roadmen have to travel considerable distances to get to the stretches of highway upon which they are employed, and sometimes Councils allow what is known as "travelling time"—money being paid for which no return is received. If houser were erected at convenient centres for workmen such payment would be saved, and if an economic rent were charged the ratepayers could not lose by a building scheme. Moreover, the provision of such dwellings would liberate houses for the occupation of agricultural labourers in villages, and something would be done towards a solution of the rural housing question, which men of all shades of opinion admit is a reality.

For the old country there is hope yet. Not very long since a great outcry was made about physical deterioration, and all manner of evil things was predicted if the people did not mend their ways. The picture was apparently very much over-drawn, and, in the light of the aged Duke of Atholl's evidence, the people who are pessimistic regarding the future of Britons may revise their opinions. "The standard of living," says the Duke, "has greatly advanced in the last sixty years. As the result of better food and improved sanitary conditions people in the country are bigger to-day than their forefathers were. I know that from the uniform of the Atholl Highlanders. The old coats would be no use now. The men are more robust—not so wizened as they were." And people thought that in the old days the Highlands were peopled by a race of giants. The Duke's statement is of extreme value, because it gives the reasons for the physical improvement. "Better sanitation" is one, and this should be an encouragement to bodies having the supervision of the public health to work with unabated vigour. The notion that progress in the country districts was wanting is disproved, and, whatever has been accomplished, has worked imperceptibly for the good of the community. Another point the Duke makes is the value of good food. When commodities were dear and wages were lower than they are now, people had to be content with what they could get to eat, and the messes upon which they subsisted would not be looked at nowadays, although there are some lacking perhaps in knowledge, who are forever mourning the departure of the "good old days." As wages have improved people have spent their money on better food, and bigger men and women are the result. Could a more convincing argument be used in favour of a living wage? By giving men and women sufficient to live upon the nation would profit enormously, because by growing stronger men and women, disease would be reduced, and the country would not have to pay for the maintenance of so many "inefficients." One bright feature of the national life is the attention that is being paid to child life—a vital necessity if each succeeding generation is to be more robust, and the authorities recognise they could be engaged in no grander work. Conditions in towns are not precisely the same as those in the rural districts, but the same forces have been at work, and a great improvement has undoubtedly been brought about. Much remains to be done by the sweeping away of insanitary dwellings and the opening up of congested districts—the breeding grounds of disease, but the authorities are on the move, and there is no reason for pessimism, with so many social agencies at work.

BURDEN OF AGRICULTURE.

Mr Pretyman, President of the Land Union, at Hanley on Tuesday night, discussing the land taxes, said the burden of rates had grown during recent years out of all proportion to ability to bear it. A large proportion of rates levied for Imperial purposes ought to be taken off land and borne by the Exchequer. Something like 60 per cent. of the education rate ought to be placed on the National Exchequer, and an equitable ratio between local contribution and that of the Exchequer fixed by Parliament and adhered to. Agriculture, he urged, ought to be treated as any other industry in regard to taxation.

THE PROBLEM OF MALINGERING.

The problem of malingering was dealt with in a lecture at the Sheffield University on Tuesday by Professor J. M. Beattie, of the Liverpool University. He said it was easy, in general debilitation, to differentiate between a feigned and imaginary illness, or between a rogue and a hypochondriac, but when one came into contact with actual individuals the solution of the problem was far from easy. The out-and-out malingerer, who could easily be discovered and dealt with by hard labour, was on the increase, and in these days when we were encouraged to expect the State to feed and keep us from the cradle to the grave, this fact was not surprising. The type of malingerer, who exaggerated a slight ailment with the object of avoiding work and claiming benefits was, however, not so easy to deal with. It was stated that 25 per cent. of the people who sought accident compensation were quite able to work. There had undoubtedly been a great increase of malingering since the passing of the Workmen's Compensation Act and the Insurance Act. All malingering was not wickedness; many people remained on the sick list because they were moral cowards, or had pessimistic temperaments, and were influenced by a fear of a restart of work. As to remedies, Dr Beattie said an end must be made to indiscriminate charity. Doctors had a powerful weapon in their hands, but unfortunately the exigencies of medical and club practice were a barrier to courageous honesty. Much also could be done by social sanctions in raising the standard of public opinion and morals.

Captain Glover, of Collingham, who is vice-Chairman of Barkston Ash Division Liberal Association, has met with a somewhat serious accident caused by an explosion of benzoline at his residence.

Patent Records compiled by John E. Walsh, chartered patent agent, of 25, Royal Exchange, Boar Lane, Leeds; and at Crossley Street, Halifax.—Applications—B. C. ROTHWELL & DISTRICT NEWS.

ROTHWELL.

Arrangements have been made for the appointment of the Rev. John Wilson to the Rothwell Wesleyan circuit, and the Rev. Maddison Phillipson will go to Birstall.

An enthusiastic meeting was held at Normanton on Thursday night week, when a unanimous vote of confidence in Mr F. Hall, Labour M.P. for the division, and of approval of the principles of the Labour party was passed.

LEEDS WEST RIDING PETTY SESSIONS.—The magistrates at the Leeds West Riding Petty Sessions on Tuesday were Mr J. W. Morkill (in the chair), Col. A. M. Sagar Musgrave, Mr R. Kitson, Mr J. Cross, Mr S. Hudson, and Mr E. Parkin.

FOOTBALL.—Leeds Parkside Wednesday played Rothwell Wednesday at Hunslet on Wednesday. The Parksiders had the best of the game throughout, and Scruton, Walsh, and Day each scored before the interval. In the second half Taylor netted for Rothwell, but Walsh, Bickerdike, Day, and Robinson added further goals for Parkside. Result.—Leeds Parkside Wednesday 7 goals, Rothwell Wednesday 1 goal.

ROTHWELL MAN AND PARLIAMENT.—The Miners' Federation of Great Britain has (says a contemporary) drafted a scheme for obtaining increased Parliamentary representation, under which it is proposed that each of the districts shall run one candidate for every ten thousand members. This would give the Yorkshire Association—about which statements have been made that it is intended to promote seven new candidatures—the right to select at least nine, possibly ten, candidates in addition to the two sitting members. But it does not follow that these would all take the field at the next or any general election. As far as possible, all candidates selected will be polled, but only on the occasion of a general election or by-election the Executive of the Federation of Great Britain and the Labour party would decide for or against projected candidatures in accordance with the financial resources of the respective organisations, the spade work done in the constituencies, or the expediency of particular contests. It is believed that Mr William Lunn (Rothwell) will contest Holderness again, but beyond that no arrangements have been made, and nothing definite is likely to be done until further information is forthcoming respecting the result of the political levy which is now due.

ALLERTON BYWATER

SIR JOSEPH'S VIEWS.—Sir Joseph Compton-Rickett, M.P., entertained at a dinner at the Hotel Metropole, London, on Friday night, the leaders of the Evangelical Free Churches, and a deputation from the religious bodies of the United States, who have come to this country to secure the co-operation of the Free Churches here in the suggested World's Conference on faith and order. Sir Joseph proposed the health of the deputation. He said that the whole of the Christian world was beginning to realise the urgent necessity for a movement in favour of federation or co-operation.

PARISH COUNCIL.—At the monthly meeting on Thursday evening week, in the Council Offices, Mr W. W. Rosser presided, and other members present were Messrs G. Pearson (vice-chairman), Fred Church, H. E. Lowe, Richard Rhodes, H. W. Skelton, Smart, and F. Phillips, with the Clerk (Mr T. Atkinson). The Clerk reported that the street lamps needed at Brigshaw, Ledston Station, and Lock Lane were being erected, and also that evergreens had been planted in front of the Council offices. The Chairman said that the causeway on the main road leading from Castleford towards Mary Parnel Hill had been kerbed, except that portion which the N.E.R. Co. should repair. The Gas Company had been asked to kerb their portion, but they said it had served all right all these years and kerbing was unnecessary. Mr Phillips: Oh that's an old tale, I must have heard it many now. A good many people use that footpath. We ought to go in for asphalting it. Mr R. Rhodes moved and Mr Skelton seconded that the County Council be asked to repair the N.E.R. Co.'s kerb their portion of the footpath, and this was carried. "It has been suggested," said the Chairman, "that we should provide our lamp-lighters with some kind of overall for their use in bad weather." In reply to a question, the Clerk said that from his enquiries he had found that the majority of Councils did not provide overalls. Mr Fred Church: I think we ought to set a good example. After a lengthy discussion it was unanimously decided to purchase overalls for the lamplighters, the cost not to exceed 30s. each

MEDICAL CHARITIES.—The balance sheet of the Lock Lane and District Medical Charities Committee for last year shows that the following grants were made:—Leeds General Infirmary, £20; Pontefract Dispensary, £30; Castleford Nurses' Fund, £10; and Castleford Ambulance Association £1 10s. There was a balance in the bank at the end of the year of £70.

ALLEGED ROBBERY.—The story of an alleged robbery at Ledston Station was told at Castleford on Friday, when J. W. Silverwood and A. Parker were charged. A station porter named Baldersby said the window shutters were broken, the place was ransacked, but money was not taken, the thieves having overlooked the tin in which it was kept. Two parcels containing brass, silver-plated goods, and goods there missing. It was stated that prisoners had walked to York, where they met P.S. Kidney, and Parker made a confession. Prisoners were sent to the Quarter Sessions, Silverwood's application for bail being refused.

CROSSGATES

On Saturday night, January 24th, a Cinderella in connection with Manston Church C.E. will be held at Manston Schools. See advert.

MR E. Hawkesworth, of Crossgates, has been elected Chairman of the Leeds Branch of the United Kingdom Commercial Travellers' Associations.

The Rev. Owen Jones has arranged to become superintendent of the Horsforth Wesleyan circuit. The Rev. George Searle will be the new superintendent of Richmond Hill circuit.

LECTURE.—On Monday night at the meeting of the Literary Society a lecture on "Daily life in Pompeii" will be delivered by Mr H. Crowther, F.R.M.S. As the lecture will likely prove one of interest in the schools, a very large attendance is expected. See advert.

GARFORTH

In connection with Garforth Cricket Club a hall will take place in the Conservative Club on Wednesday, January 28th. See advert.

AN OLD SOCIETY.—The Leeds Photographic Society, whose exhibition of members' work on Tuesday night at the Leeds Institute fully maintained past traditions, make claim to the title of the oldest society of the kind in the world. The President (Mr Thomas W. Thornton, of Garforth), has in his possession documents showing how the society was established in 1851, a year before the famous London Photographic Society, now known as the Royal Photographic Society. Many of the original Leeds members were well-known pioneers of photographic art, and one of them was the maker of the first collapsible camera.

COUPLE SEPARATED.—At the Leeds West Riding Petty Sessions on Tuesday Joseph Kilburn, miner, of Garforth, was summoned by his wife, Mary Kilburn, for assault. Mr Scholes, who appeared for the wife, said she had agreed to accept seven shillings a week from her husband and to live apart. The Chairman and the Bench intimated they could not agree to that until they had heard some of the evidence. Mrs Kilburn said she had been married four years, and had three children. On January 4th she met her husband in the street, and he struck her, giving her a black eye. At Christmas time he threatened her by saying he would do her in. She complained of other assaults. She expressed her agreeable to accept 7s. per week. The Bench decided to grant the separation. The defendant, who was summoned by the police for using obscene language, was fined 2s. 6d. and costs.

THE LATE MR W. WALMSLEY.—The death took place on Tuesday, at the age of 70, of Mr William Walmsley, of Sandbeiene House, Cardigan Road, Leeds, who was well-known in Garforth at one time. Mr Walmsley, who was a native of Newport, a village near Howden, in the East Riding, had been in failing health for some time. At the age of 30 he, with his brother, the late Mr Benjamin Walmsley, commenced business in the building trade. They purchased large tracts of vacant land in the Burley and Headingley suburbs of the city, and built a large number of dwelling-houses. They were also engaged extensively in the building trade at Scarborough, where many streets were laid out near the North Bay. With his brother, the deceased inaugurated the Brudenell Road Mission Hall, and the orphanage adjoining. Mr Walmsley was a Primitive Methodist, and for 40 years had been a supporter of the Rehoboth Central Mission, Park Lane, Leeds.

GOLF COURSE.—Excellent progress has been made with the carrying out of Dr. Mackenzie's plans for the new course at Garforth. The pit heaps, many of them nearly a century old, which are a feature of the land, have been cleverly utilised in the laying-out of the course, and the links, when completed, will be an interesting if any inland course in Yorkshire. There is plenty of length and plenty of variety in the run of the land, but the principal asset of Garforth is the thick carpet of fine old turf, which seems to have been produced on purpose that it might make a golf course. The professional to the club, E. Williamson, is a brother of Tom Williamson, the famous Northamshire professional, and the work is being carried out under his direction. Williamson is no novice at this work, for he has undertaken the work of a number of courses which have been laid out by his brother, and his work on the greens at Garforth is worthy of all praise. The club has just completed its first year, and is in a thoroughly sound and healthy condition.

PICTURE HOUSE.—Clever and interesting pictures and good attendances continue at this popular hall. The present week has introduced us to a production by the Florence Turner Company, "Heart of Surrey," with this lady in the title role—a really clever and perfectly acted drama of domestic life. Another notable picture is an interesting programme was "Mabel's Motor Bus," a trick picture showing the amazing gyrations of a motor cycle gone wrong. This film sent the "house" home rocking with laughter. Tonight and Saturday, "The Man in Black," one of the famous Fantomas series, is being presented. It is one of those thrilling stories of a hunt by detectives for the clever and cruel leader of a gang of criminals, and is full of absorbing interest throughout its length of 4,000 feet. Two exceedingly funny pictures are "Dunn fixes a lamp" and "Pimple joins the army." Next week two exceedingly good programmes will be presented, including "Vampire of the desert" and "Trail of cards" on Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday, whilst during the last half of the week there will be on a picture with a wonderfully clever collie dog, "Jean" as hero, in addition to an adaptation of Wilkie Collins' famous novel "The moonstone," and other good pictures. For times and prices see advert.

GREAT PRESTON

SMOKING CONCERT.—An enjoyable evening was spent by over 70 persons in the Institute on Monday evening. Owing to the absence (through illness) of the Rev. J. Gregory, Mr J. Oxbridge presided. Songs were sung by Messrs S. Smart, J. Barrs, and H. Backhouse, while Messrs J. Schaum and F. Dickenson supplied good humorous songs. Messrs F. Crossley and G. Bell were the pianists. Banjo solos were given by Mr Fred Dickenson, Masters Wilburt and William Crossley played violin solos, and Master Ernest Manners supplied a pianoforte solo. The very enjoyable evening ended with the singing of the National Anthem.

HALTON

On Saturday afternoon Whitkirk C.M., playing in the Garforth Football League, were defeated by Christ Church W.S. by a goal to nil.

MR J. A. Mackay, formerly of Halton, who now resides at Harrogate, was one of the speakers at the Hon. E. L. Woods's meeting at Summerbridge on Monday night.

TRAMS TO HALTON.—A memorial has been presented to the Examiners of Private Bills by the West Riding County Council complaining of non-compliance with the Standing Orders in the proflotion of the Leeds Corporation Bill for next Session. The memorialists represent that the Standing Orders of neither House of Parliament have been complied with, inasmuch as the promoters have not obtained their consent for the proposed tramways in Hunslet rural areas and Guiseley. They claim that as the road authority their assent is necessary to these proposed extensions so far as they are intended to be laid along main roads. The memorialists further state that they "do not consent" to the proposed tramway (No. 6 in the Bill) in Hunslet (Halton), along Selby Road, and they therefore ask that the Bill should be reported as having failed to comply with the Standing Orders.

KIPPAX

Sir Joseph Compton Rickett has been elected president of the National Council of the Evangelical Free Churches.

ON Saturday afternoon in the Leeds Junior Football League Kippax Rangers defeated Allerton Bywater Institute by two goals to one.

Sir Joseph Compton-Rickett has taken a long lease of the property known as "Wingfield," Bournemouth, and Lady Compton Rickett and family expect to be in residence at the end of January.

PARISH CHURCH.—A women's service was held in the church on Sunday, when an address was given by the Vicar on "A mother's heart." There was a good attendance. A social was held in the schoolroom on Monday evening, and it was well attended. Members of the G.F.S. from Garforth and Kippax were present, and spent a very pleasant evening with the Kippax friends.

RECITAL.—The members of the Wesley Guild were the promoters of a recital, which was given in the chapel on Tuesday. Mr John Duxbury, the elocutionist, had been engaged for the occasion, and recitations from the Book of Job were finely given by him in the afternoon. The Rev. E. Rees presided. In the evening Mr Duxbury recited various pieces, and songs were sung by Mr H. Mills, of Allerton Bywater. Mr Beer, of Garforth, presided.

PRIMITIVE METHODIST CHURCH.—Special services were held in the Primitive Methodist Church on Sunday, when the preacher in the morning was Mr W. S. Blackburn, of Archy. A P.S.A. service was held in the afternoon, and an address was given by Mr Walter Blackburn, of Archy. The soloist was Miss Evelyn Smith, and recitations were given by Miss Wilkes. A Christy Prince presided. A service was held on Monday afternoon, when the Rev. S. S. Henshaw (ex-President) was the preacher, and a public tea was afterwards held. The superintendent of the evening the Rev. S. S. Henshaw gave a lecture on his recent visit to Canada and the United States. Mr Booker (Allerton) presided. The Rev. S. S. Henshaw moved a vote of thanks to the Chairman and lecturer, and this was seconded by Mr T. Farrer, and cordially passed.

MIDDLETON

SUDDEN DEATH.—A sad affair occurred on Sunday night at the Middleton Pit. Just before 12 o'clock Thomas Wilkinson (41), Myers' Court, Castle Street, was found lying insensible on the waggon lines in the colliery yard by Edward Howden, Penthouse Hill, and Jesse Bayliffe, Burton Grove, Leeds, two deputies, who were leaving work. He was carried by them into the engine shed, but died almost immediately. Moore should have been at work at 12 o'clock for the night shift, and must have been the last man to go, as all miners coming to work are bound to pass the point where he was found. He had only commenced work recently as he had been for some time suffering from injury to the left arm. He leaves a widow and children.

A LOVE AFFAIR.—An extraordinary case of attempted suicide was heard at Leeds Police Court on Saturday. The prisoner was Benjamin Wilkinson (26), coal miner, of 6, Lower Care Street, Hunslet Carr, who attempted to kill himself on Tuesday night after a quantity of ammonia. Harry Brook, beer maker and clog manufacturer, of 38, Balm Road, stated that prisoner came into his shop about six o'clock on the day in question, and asking hold of a bottle which was nearly full of ammonia asked if it was good for headache. Witness replied that some people said it was, and when he had to leave prisoner a moment in order to attend to a customer. A little later witness found prisoner drinking the ammonia. He did not take much, however, and then handed witness the bottle, together with a letter, at the same time exclaiming "Oh, Harry!" Prisoner collapsed, and the fumes of the ammonia nearly choked witness, who, however, eventually secured the assistance of a doctor. A doctor stated that prisoner was very ill for some time afterwards, but was now out of danger. On Wednesday Wilkinson threatened to repeat the attempt on his life, but he had now come to his senses. Prisoner explained that he had been courting a young lady for about six months, and a few days ago he went to her house and asked for a piece of bread. She refused him, and to frighten her he, in fun, picked up a knife and said "I'll stab you for two pins." He was afterwards forbidden the house, and the girl would have nothing to do with him, so he determined to "do himself in." On promising not to repeat the offence prisoner was allowed to go.

ME'HLEY

FOOTBALL.—The Methley Perseverance Club, a side who are rapidly coming to the front, are the first team to spoil the unbeaten record of the Rothwell Parish Church men. They have further had the temerity to upset the calculations of the Rothwell Club, those side in the Leeds and District Cup Competition. The club officials in their early career had many obstacles to overcome, the opposition from the W.M.C. Intermediates being not the least. They are, therefore, to be heartily congratulated on the club's success. On Saturday afternoon Methley Perseverance defeated Leeds Harehills by four goals to one.

MOORTOWN.

AVIATION.—The conditions at Moortown on Saturday were favourable for Mr Hucks' machine to give an exhibition of flying and looping the loop were most wretched, and it seemed as if it would be impossible for the airman to ascend. Shortly after four o'clock, however, with characteristic pluck, Mr Hucks made a fine ascent, and was in the air for three or four minutes. For most of the time he was invisible to the crowd of two or three thousand, and when he came down he said he could not see the ground at 200 feet, and it was impossible to loop. Later he tried again, but the clouds were too low for him to loop, and, addressing the crowd, the airman said that if possible he would fly next Saturday. Mr Harold Blackburn also flew, with Dr Christie as a passenger.

QUILTON

A meeting of the Webster Charity for the purpose of the distribution of doles was held in the schools at Oulton on Saturday, Major Calverley presided.

P.S.A.—On Sunday a P.S.A. service was held in the Primitive Methodist Chapel, and an interesting address was given by the Rev. R. H. Auty, who was the preacher for the day. Miss V. Rinder rendered solos, and Mr J. C. Harrison was the accompanist.

DANCE.—The annual Institute dance was held in the Harold Hall, Oulton, on Friday night, a very enjoyable time being spent by all present. Altogether 111 people attended, and dancing was merrily engaged to to music supplied by Mr Walter Poole (pianist) and Mr C. Margison (violinist). Mr Walter Smith proved a capable M.C., and the stewards (Messrs S. Berry and J. B. Butterick) rendered valuable assistance. The secretarial duties were ably discharged by Mr F. Twohy.

BILLIARDS.—Playing in the senior division of the Oulton and District Billiard League, Rothwell Workingman's Club were defeated by Oulton at Rothwell on Thursday night by 40 points. Details (Rothwell names first):—R. Deakin 56 v. F. Winter 100, S. Wormald 100 v. F. Rookledge 91, J. Hargreaves 100 v. G. Wilkinson 67, H. Ely 100 v. W. Jopling 61, L. Thurwell 27 v. S. Lockwood 100, F. Stringer 87 v. J. Butterick 100. During the match H. Ely and F. Winter made breaks of 31.

CLERGYMAN AND MISSION WORK.—The Rev. R. Garrad, M.A. (vicar of Horsforth), a former curate of Oulton, referred in his sermon on Sunday evening to the Kikuyu controversy. Although there was much about the controversy to deplore, it had, he said, at least two good points. It showed that the Church was alive, and that people were interested in religion. Silence or lack of interest in such a matter would be a far more serious cause for alarm than the commotion which had been aroused. It was a sign of vigorous life in the body of Christ. The second redeeming feature was that such a Conference as the one at Kikuyu could have taken place at all. No one, said the preacher, could be glad that missionaries of the Church of England and other bodies should have had it put into their hearts to come together in the spirit of charity and brotherhood, and confer as to how to work side by side as helpers, and not hinderers, of one another. Ten years ago extreme bitterness existed between Christian bodies in the heart of Africa, and if it was passed away, or had now passed away, it was a matter for great thankfulness. He believed that Christ was never more present with His Church than now, and it was developed

TUBERCULOUS GLANDS CURED.

Fir Ebor Mount,
Hyde Park,
Leeds, 30th August, 1913.

Professor Crosswaite,

Dear, Sir,—

I thought it would interest you to know of THE VERY REMARKABLE MANNER YOUR TREATMENT HAD UPON MY YOUNGEST DAUGHTER, who last year was suffering from TUBERCULOUS GLANDS.

Many of my friends advised me to consult a surgeon, but being myself a nurse, I emphatically declined to have my child exposed to the pain and privations disfigured for life.

As a matter of fact, I consulted no one, but decided to treat her myself, with your valuable remedies, and I am sure the success of my statement will encourage any child in your custody, should it be willing and obedient. I shall be willing at any time to answer any letter of enquiry, and to testify to the wonderful manner in which your treatment has cured my child.

Yours very truly,

AN ULLESKELF TRAGEDY.

"A MOST LAMENTABLE AFFAIR."

MR G. ASKHAM COMMENDED BY THE CORONER

On Saturday an inquest was held by Mr Wood (Coroner), at the County Hospital, York, concerning the death of Albert Frazer, farm labourer, who met his death on Thursday week, while working on a threshing machine at Clergy Farm, Ulleskelf.

Elizabeth Frazer, of Ulleskelf, widow, said deceased was 23 years of age, and a farm servant employed by Mr Askham, of Ulleskelf. Her husband went back to his work early in the afternoon of which he met with the accident, and was in a good state of health.

George Askham, farmer, of Clergy Farm, said deceased, on the day in question along with George Reynolds had got on to the machine. The door over the top—the drum-guard—was shut. Witness saw no more until he heard a thud. He exclaimed "What's that?" The machine stopped instantly, and so-noone said "There's someone in the drum." Witness asked "Who's opened the drum door," and they replied, "Albert is getting ready for starting," and had opened it." The next thing was that witness mounted the machine with a bar, and found Frazer fast in the drum and two or three people trying to get him out; they could not, and deceased from his position, and the latter said to witness "Look sharp with the bar." Witness released deceased with the bar, and the men who were holding deceased lifted him down. Witness asked deceased lifted him down. Witness asked deceased replied "Yes, I very painful;" and deceased replied "Yes." Witness asked how the accident happened and Frazer replied "I lifted open the door of the drum, and was getting some sheaves at the side of the machine, and then I slipped into the drum."

The Coroner: Was it necessary for him to open the top of the drum?

Witness: No. He told me he opened the door so as he would be ready for threshing, but we shouldn't have started for another ten minutes.

What do you think was the reason he opened it?—I think he had opened it to pull a board up and hadn't shut the drum afterwards. I have been threshing 30 years, and I've seen it done before.

Witness added that they got deceased some bread and sent for his wife, and deceased was moved to the station to stop the express train over to York. The stationmaster said he could not stop the express, but witness said he compelled him to.

The Coroner: Quite right.

Witness added that deceased was carried in an ambulance to the station, and on arrival at York was taken to the Hospital. Deceased was perfectly sensible, and witness thought he had had nothing to drink that day.

By a juryman: Witness thought deceased might have opened the drum by mistake and forgot to shut it open. Deceased's face, however, was towards the drum. Witness thought deceased's foot must have slipped, in fact, deceased's left foot was caught by the machine.

George Reynolds, farm servant, said he was on the top of the machine when the mishap occurred. Frazer stood by the side of the drum, the door of which was open. Deceased having opened it began to throw on sheaves to deceased. Deceased had just got the drum opened, cleared ready for putting some sheaves down; but he had nothing to his hands.

The Coroner: What caused him to slip?

Witness: I don't know.

Was he moving?—No, still.

Well, what made him slip—how far was he from the drum?—He was standing with his foot about three inches off the drum.

A juryman: He might have overbalanced. There's always a lot of vibration.

The Coroner: Is there any witness who saw what actually took place?

The reply given to the Coroner was in the negative.

Henry Hebbail, farm labourer, said he was working along with deceased, and was on the top of the threshing machine at the time. He was about a yard or a yard and a half from deceased, and was handing the latter some sheaves to put into position, and while witness was reaching for a further sheaf to hand to deceased he heard a noise like a foot slipping. He looked up and saw Frazer's left leg just going into the drum. There was a crash, and eventually they extricated deceased from his position.

By a juryman: If there had been a protection the deceased would not have got into the drum.

The Coroner: Was everything being done in the usual way?—Yes, sir.

Witness added that the top of the machine was flat as a table, and deceased had lifted off the door; which was part of the flat top. Deceased was a little before time in doing this, but was accustomed to feeding the machine.

Mr Alexander E. Dryman, house surgeon at the Hospital, said deceased was admitted at 2.30 p.m. on Thursday, January 8th, suffering from profound collapse, and a crushed left leg. As "a forlorn hope" the leg was amputated, but Frazer died at 5.45 from loss of blood and shock.

The jury returned a verdict of "Accidental death."

The Coroner referred to the accident as a most lamentable affair, and he considered that the farmer showed great promptitude in getting the express stopped and the deceased removed to the Hospital in so short a time after the accident. He was sure the jury felt the deepest sympathy with Mrs. Frazer.

SQUIRE OF TEMPLENEWSAM AND IMPERIAL AFFAIRS.

GREAT PROBLEMS OUTSIDE PARTY.

The Hon. E. L. Wood, M.P., of Templenewsam, addressed a meeting at Summerbridge, in Nidderdale, on Monday night. He said that South Africa had again been plunged into all the horrors and trouble of a railway strike. In this country, he said, they had had some experience of railway strikes, and they knew what it meant, or might mean, and they would, of course, readily understand that all the possibilities were enormously complicated in a country like South Africa. All party politics sank into insignificance compared with the question of the existence or disappearance of a white race. There was only one question as to the part of the natives employed and working in the mines. He had had the opportunity of seeing something of these matters in South Africa on one or two occasions, and he was quite sure that anybody who had given a moment's thought to the question that where the fortunes of the white men, and the white women, were involved it was the duty of the Government on the spot, and in this country to give what support they could to safeguard them and help them to meet their peculiar difficulties to form an opinion of this particular strike, but he felt very strongly that it was the duty of everyone as voters in the United Kingdom and as the people who elected the Imperial Parliament—the only one they had got—to inform themselves, as far as they could, as to what were the great problems outside party strife which the Empire had to deal. They also had the care of a great rich on the part of the natives and white men. He had no sufficient knowledge to form an opinion of this particular strike, as the people who elected the Imperial Parliament—the only one they had got—to inform themselves, as far as they could, as to what were the great problems outside party strife which the Empire had to deal. They also had the care of a great rich on the part of the natives employed and working in the mines. He had had the opportunity of seeing something of these matters in South Africa on one or two occasions, and he was quite sure that anybody who had given a moment's thought to the question that where the fortunes of the white men, and the white women, were involved it was the duty of the Government on the spot, and in this country, to give what support they could to safeguard them and help them to meet their peculiar difficulties to form an opinion of this particular strike, but he felt very strongly that it was the duty of everyone as voters in the United Kingdom and

CHAPTER XVII.

No one who had seen Mr. Shepheard walk out of Queen Anne's Mansions and make his way into Victoria-street would have guessed that he was inwardly about as much perturbed and disturbed as a man well can be. In his neat dark overcoat, his shining top hat, his lacquered boots, his well-fitting gloves, and with his natty umbrella, he looked a picture of smug prosperity and propriety, and nobody would have thought that he had either a care in the world or a knotty problem to vex his soul. But, in point of fact, Mr. Shepheard was sorely vexed in spirit, and in a fairly clear space of the street he began to proceed at a slower pace and to swing his umbrella as if he were in a state of indecision. This, however, quickly passed, and he set off westward at a sharper walk than before.

"No!" he muttered to himself. "It's not use lingering. If they didn't recapture Ned Penrose within a couple of hours or so they'll never get him. We didn't call him Slippery Dick for nothing! Like as not, he's over the by now. And if he is—ugh!"

This concluding reflection afforded Mr. Shepheard a little pleasure that he involuntarily quickened his pace and cast a backward glance over his shoulder as if he thought somebody was about to hail him or to tap him on the back. Nobody being there he walked still faster.

"And besides," he said to himself, "I'm about sick of Bedford. I never know what's going to happen. I'm standing to win I don't know what—perhaps not so much, and to lose all. Now's my time, if ever. A mere change of name, and Leonie and myself will be Monsieur and Madame Somebody-or-other, proprietor and proprietress of that charming little hotel that we know of. That's a much better prospect—much better. Oh, yes, it's the right thing to do!"

With these and more cryptic—cryptic, at any rate, to whoever had overheard them—references to whatever it was that was in his active mind, Mr. Shepheard made his way beyond Victoria and turned in the direction of Eaton-square. It was almost dark by that time, but he walked about until the darkness was quite fallen; then he went up to one of the houses on the south side, and having first given a preliminary tinkle at the bell descended the steps of the area.

The door was opened by a parlourmaid, who gave every indication of having been disturbed at her supper. Peering out into the gloom she suddenly became aware of the identity of the caller, and opened the door still wider.

"Good evening, Mr. Shepheard," she said. "It's that dark that I couldn't see who it was at first."

"It's not that dark that I couldn't recognise the charming Miss Higginson," said Mr. Shepheard gallantly, as he removed his shining hat and stepped in. "Such charms and graces cannot be hidden by the dark of a summer night."

"Oh, you go along!" said Miss Higginson. "I wonder what Mamsel Leony would say if she heard you?"

"She would say that I did rightly to appreciate such beauty," replied Mr. Shepheard, drawing off his gloves in the little lobby-parlour, furnished with one table, four chairs, a sofa, and a picture of the Black Brunswicker over the fireplace, into which Miss Higginson had shown him. "But apropos, as the saying is, is it possible to see ma'moiselle?"

"Oh, I should think so," replied the parlourmaid. "I don't think she's doing anything, unless it's sewing in the drawing-room. She's rooms. I'll go and see, Mr. Shepheard."

"So shall my soul thank you," said Mr. Shepheard. "But half-a-mo', as the vulgar say—anybody here to-night? Anybody to dinner—any party or anything?"

"Nobody that I know of," replied Miss Higginson. "No, I'm sure there isn't. Sir Herbert's asleep in the study, and Miss is playing the piano in the drawing-room."

"Then summon ma'amselle to our presence," commanded Mr. Shepheard. "But in all secrecy, mind."

"Oh, I know," responded the parlourmaid. "I understand." And she went off giggling, and declaring that Mr. Shepheard was a queer one; while that gentleman, having put out of his gloves, placed them, his umbrella, and his hat, upon the table, and, having smoothed his hair, took a seat on the sofa to bring softest, and awaited the coming of his fiancee.

Mademoiselle Leonie, on arrival, proved to have been, as Miss Higginson had suggested, engaged in sewing, and, like all her industrious countrywomen, she was unwilling at moment if they can help it, she had brought her sewing along with her. Unlike the French ladies'-maids whom one sees in delightful pieces on the stage—always young, always pretty, invariably saucy and piquant, and dressed in ravishing if simple fashion—Mademoiselle Leonie was thirty-five if she was a day, and neither pretty nor piquant. Instead, she was one of those strong, capable, managing-looking Frenchwomen of whom one sees thousands in their own cities, who sit at the receipt of custom in the shops and restaurants, help their husbands to run hotels and cafés, and generally exhibit themselves as possessed of many capacities of which Englishwomen are destitute. She gazed upon Mr. Shepheard with calmness.

"Eh, bien!" she said. "And why this visit to-night?"

Mr. Shepheard gave Mademoiselle Leonie one look and the door another. "Speak in thine own language, Leonie, my dear," he said in French. "I have that to say to thee which is only for thine own ears. Leonie, you remember that packet which I confided to thee some weeks ago, and bade thee to keep in great safety?"

"Well, then?" said Mademoiselle Leonie, placidly stitching away at her sewing.

"Fetch it to me, my dear," commanded Mr. Shepheard.

Still placid, Mademoiselle laid down her sewing on the table and rose to leave the room. Mr. Shepheard arrested her movements with an uplifted finger.

"Hold, Leonie!" he said. "Listen. I want to have speech with Miss Delomosne alone, you understand. It will affect you and me—it will bring the little bridal nearer, much nearer, my dear. Arrange it. Tell her Sir John Bedford's man, Shepheard, has a private message for her—private, eh! Thou understandest, Leonie?"

The Frenchwoman looked at him for a moment, then nodded her head. "Very well," she said, and went away.

For ten minutes Mr. Shepheard sat on his sofa, twirling his thumbs and anticipating more futures, and staring blankly at the Black Brunswicker. Then his lady-love returned, placed a small packet in his hands, and said, briefly, "This way, then—she will see you."

"Half-a-mo'," said Mr. Shepheard, relapsing into English. "Let's see. Yes, that's all right—four seals in red wax, just as I did it up. "Leonie, my dear," he continued, resuming his French, "after I have seen Mademoiselle, I want to see you again. You understand?"

"Perfectly," replied Mademoiselle Leonie. "Here, then, I will await your return. Now follow."

Ushering Mr. Shepheard upstairs, through a house which seemed singularly destitute of life, the Frenchwoman showed him at last into a small room fitted up as a study, and shut the door upon him. Miss Delomosne sat by a writing-table, looking at him with some curiosity. Mr. Shepheard made his best professional bow.

"You have a message for me, Shepheard, Leonie tells me," said Miss Delomosne.

Mr. Shepheard bowed again. "Yes, miss," he replied. "I hope we are quite alone."

Miss Delomosne's fine eyebrows elevated themselves. "Quite alone!" she said. "Of course we are quite alone. You are very mysterious to-night, Shepheard."

Mr. Shepheard took the liberty of drawing a step or two nearer Miss Delomosne's table, and he lowered his voice.

"Well, miss," he said, "you'll forgive me—it's really in your own interests, miss—the fact is, I had to resort to a little subterfuge. The message I wanted to give you is from—myself."

Miss Delomosne looked at Mr. Shepheard with an expression which showed that she for was somewhat puzzled, somewhat annoyed, and somewhat doubtful as to whether her visitor was not mad or drunk. The visitor was quick to interpret the mixed quality of this expression, and he smiled.

"I'm perfectly sober, miss, and quite sane," he said. "Leonie wouldn't have let me come up if I hadn't been so. Truth."

"What is it you have to say to me, Shepheard?" asked Miss Delomosne.

Mr. Shepheard sank his voice to a still lower depth. "This, miss. You're in Sir John Bedford's power."

Miss Delomosne half-rose from her seat, then dropped back. She had turned very pale, and her eyes glowed out of white cheeks as she stared at the valet. "How dare you——" she began.

But Mr. Shepheard, smiling quietly, stopped her with uplifted hand. "It's no use, miss," he said. "I know what I'm talking about. The fact is, miss, there's not much that I don't know about anything with which Sir John has to do. And I know that you are in his power," he concluded, with quiet emphasis.

Miss Delomosne continued to stare at him. "There's no need to be frightened, miss," he went on. "If you only knew it, you'll be all the happier after this interview. And——"

She dropped his voice until it was scarcely audible to the half-frightened, wholly inquisitive woman before him—"you'll feel—safer!"

Miss Delomosne made a supreme effort, and summoned all her powers for a moment she remained silent; then she turned resolutely on her visitor. Say plainly what you have to say, Shepheard," she said. "I'm not quite sure you didn't come here simply to say what you have said."

"No, miss, that's true," replied the valet. "Well, what I have to say is this—I know that you're in Sir John Bedford's power because he's in possession of a secret of yours."

"Go on," she said.

A secret that's referred to in some letters of yours of which he got hold, miss."

"Go on," she said again.

Mr. Shepheard took his time. He smiled. "I daresay you'd give something to get hold of those letters, miss, wouldn't you?" he said.

Miss Delomosne's mind suddenly became illuminated as to the reason of Mr. Shepheard's visit. A fierce, almost tigerish eagerness sprang up in her, allied with a vision of new hope for the future, and she half-leaped from her chair. "Give something!" she exclaimed. "Get me those letters, and I'll give you——"

"Yes, miss, how much?" asked Mr. Shepheard.

But Miss Delomosne had dropped back into her chair, and was shaking her head. "It's no use!" she said. "You might more easily drag a soul out of purgatory!"

"I said—how much will you give, miss?" went on Mr. Shepheard.

Miss Delomosne bent forward eagerly. "You don't mean to say that you could get them, Shepheard?" she asked.

"I mean to say, miss, that I have got them," replied the valet. "They are in my pocket at this moment, and at your service, if you pay me my price. The fact is, miss, I have very particular private reasons of my own for leaving Sir John Bedford, and as I am a modest capital I am willing to sell you the letters we have spoken of for the sum of one thousand pounds—and dirt cheap, too, miss," he added.

Miss Delomosne looked at him steadily for a moment. "Very good," she said. "Let me see that they are all there."

"Quite so, miss," answered Mr. Shepheard; "but you'll allow me to keep a hand on them until you're satisfied that they are."

Half an hour later Mr. Shepheard left Miss Delomosne's rooms with five hundred pounds in notes and a cheque for a like amount, made payable to "cash," in his breast pocket. He had a brief audience with Madame Leonie in the presence of the Black Brunswicker, and subsequently departed, well pleased with himself. But he made no return to Queen Anne's Mansions, and after spending the night near Victoria, and cashing his cheque early next morning, he departed for Dieppe, and felt glad to see the last of Newhaven Harbour.

And that morning Miss Delomosne woke with the feeling that she was at last free. She was the slave of Sir John Bedford no longer. Now she would fight, and fight bitterly, for the other side.

CHAPTER XVIII.

Now that Herman Groot had arrived Laurence himself into his work with an activity which was feverish in its persistency and application. He was at the workshop early and remained there until late in the night. He grudged time for meals, and would carry his breakfast and dinner with him rather than waste minutes in going to and from his lodgings. When he finally broke away from his work at night it was only because he had become so physically exhausted that he could do no more than hasten home, throw himself on his bed, and fall instantly into deep slumber. Before a fortnight had gone by he became so absorbed and so anxious that he bought a camp-bed and had it put up in the office, and on it as often as not he spent his short nights. Meanwhile, Groot worked steadily at the mechanical labour for which Laurence had specially brought him over. He worked in his usual slow, thorough fashion, talking little, but keeping his eyes open, especially on the work which Laurence did with his own hands. And he saw that the rate things were going the invention would soon be complete.

Once more Sir John Bedford at the Café Victorine on the first Sunday evening after his arrival and made his report. There was little for him to tell on that occasion, but a week later there was much.

"The work goes forward as rapidly as at present," said Groot, "he will finish in ten days. The body of the machine is well on its way to completion now."

"Have you learnt any more than you knew before?" asked Sir John.

Groot shook his head emphatically. "No!" he replied. "Everything has been done on the same lines. I don't even know where the engine is being made—I've tried to learn that from his letters, but nothing seems to come there. It's my belief that he'll not fit it until the last moment. One thing I do know—whatever the engine may be, and whatever force it is to be applied to use as motive power, there's one thing certain, and that is that the engine itself must be very small and light, because of the space reserved for it. It is beyond me to conceive what the secret of propulsion is which he has discovered."

Sir John, who thought that Sabatier might be much more likely to inform him on this point, said nothing.

"Well, keep your eyes open, Groot," he remarked as they parted. "What I'm chiefly concerned about is not so much the making of the thing as the exact date when it will be finished. I want to be informed at once when this engine has been fitted."

Groot finished off the lager beer with which he had been provided, and rose to go. "Sir John," he said, "I don't think he'll let me know that," he said. "He'll do the final things himself in secret, and he'll not allow my presence."

"Well, at any rate you'll know when the thing's ready for the engine," said Sir John. "As you get to the end keep me informed—every hour, if it's possible to do so."

"It's not easy to get out when he's there," said Groot. "The place is always locked at both doors, and he keeps the key in his pocket."

An idea occurred to Sir John. He knew that there were no duplicate keys of the workshop, that the locks were of an intricate pattern. It would have been a useful thing to have had duplicates of the keys made before handing them over to Laurence.

"Have you never had the keys in your hands?" he asked.

Groot shook his head.

"Couldn't you make some excuse for getting hold of them?" said Sir John.

"He never parts with them," answered Groot. "He lets me in and lets me out. But supposing I did get them?"

"Take an impression of them in wax," said Sir John. "You have your ingenuity—bring some necessary tool or other, and ask for the keys so that you may go across to get another. Something of that sort—you can manage it. I'll make it all right for you if you do."

"I'll try," said Groot. "But he's as keen as a cat watching a mouse."

There was somebody else in Laurence's workshop who was watching the progress of the invention with even almost as keen as those of the inventor himself. Dickie Wraye, in fulfilment of his agreement with Laurence and himself, had daily taken up his position in the workshop and had quickly made himself a member of its small community. Deeply interested in what he saw the first day, he was absolutely fascinated before the week was out, and Laurence would have allowed him he would have remained in the workshop as long as Laurence himself did. In spite of his infirmities Dickie was active and alert, and his intelligence was keen enough. Like so many cripples he was very skilful with his fingers, and Laurence soon found that the boy could make himself useful in several directions. And so Dickie began to rise an hour earlier in order to get the housework done at the flat before breakfast, and when the washing-up was completed at the end of the meal he stumped away eagerly to the workshop, where his knock sounded on the private door at precisely nine o'clock. It was all that Laurence could do to force him away in time to prepare the evening meal for himself and his sister.

"Look here, Dickie," said Charity one evening, when she thought her brother looked pale and fatigued. "I can't have you doing too much at Mr. Workman's place, you know, strong, you know, and you'll be ill if you go on like that."

"I shan't—I shan't!" exclaimed Dickie. "Don't say anything to Mr. Workman, Charity! I'm all right—I am indeed. Work! Why, you should see how Mr. Workman goes at it. I should think he begins as soon as ever it's light in the morning, and we always leave him there at night."

"Yes, but he's a strong man," said Charity. "And he's beginning to look worn and tired. I passed him in the street the other day, going to the offices, and he was so absorbed that he didn't see me, and he looked as if he'd never been to bed all night."

"Very likely he hadn't," said the boy. "He often looks as if he slept in his clothes. I know he's tired in a morning. I say, Charity!"

"Well—what?"

"Mr. Workman never goes anywhere now," said Dickie. "Don't you think it would do him a lot of good to spend the evening somewhere?"

"I should think it would—a great deal of good," replied his sister.

"Well, ask him to come here, then, some evening soon," said Dickie. "He'd come for you."

Charity, who was sowing, let her work drop in her lap, and stared at her brother with surprised eyes. A bright red colour came into her cheeks.

"Come—for—me!" she repeated. "What do you mean, Dickie—what are you talking about?"

"Oh, I don't know," said Dickie. "But I think he thinks a lot of you. He said the other day that you were a brave girl to work as hard as you do. And why shouldn't he think of you? Perhaps he might want to marry you."

"Don't be so silly, child!" exclaimed Charity. "And don't talk to Mr. Workman or to anybody else about me—it isn't nice to be talked about in that way, Dickie, you know."

"I don't see that it matters if it's only nice things that are said," contended Dickie, stoutly. "And I'm sure Mr. Workman never says anything but nice things about you. He often talks to me about meeting you for the first time at Uncle Wayle's."

"I wish he wouldn't, then," said Charity, sending over her work. "What is there to so talk about in that?"

"I don't know, but he seems to like to talk about it," replied Dickie. "Ask him to come and have supper with us on Sunday, Charity."

"No," said Charity, firmly. "I shan't. But," she added, seeing the disappointment in the boy's face, "if you like, Dickie, you can ask him—for both of us. But I don't think he will come just now—he'll be too much absorbed in his work."

There was someone else who was desirous of Laurence's company, if only for an evening, but from a very different motive from that which inspired Dickie Wraye. Sir John Bedford had made a hurried trip over to Normandy, and had spent a few hours with M. Sabatier, only to find that that great genius was not getting along with his work as quickly as he had expected. Something had gone wrong with one of his calculations, and he was perforce obliged to recommence a good deal of his work. He was in a bad temper, and short and snappy with his confrère, who, in his part, was surly and sullen.

"At this rate," he grumbled, as he and M. Sabatier turned to a cigar and a glass of cognac after a morning's useless task over figures and diagrams—"at this rate the fellow will have finished his machine and very probably sold it to the British Government before you've done!"

"Sacre bleu!" growled the great man. "And is that my fault? Who but I could have done what I have? Who but I in all Europe—yes, in all the world—could have wrung the man's secret out of his memoranda? Who but I could have defined the dry bones of his data with palpitating flesh? Could you? Could Bremont? Could the Armsdale of Berlin? No, my friend, none of you. It is only I, Paul Sabatier, who could do it. Rest tranquil, then, until the task is complete."

"All very well, but he'll get in first if you're not quick," said Sir John.

M. Sabatier sipped his petit verre and waved his hands. "It was to be your task to prevent that, my friend," he said. "You have him and his work under observation—take care of him."

And Sir John decided that it was time Laurence's progress should be retarded. In accordance with the formal agreement between them he could not make any demand on Laurence's services for the firm until a date still far enough removed to make it probable that Laurence's private work would be completed ere it was reached. The thing to do was to get him away from his work now and then. But he must find strong means of doing that. His thoughts turned to Miss Delomosne, and one afternoon, immediately after his return from M. Sabatier's, he repaired to Sir Herbert Armsdale's town house and demanded to see her.

"Look here," he said, without preface or beating about the bush, "you're not doing all that you might do as regards that fellow, Workman. You remember what I said at Hurstdene Manor!"

"I am not very likely to forget it," said Miss Delomosne, coldly.

"Very well, then you speak as if you were in the middle of a refrigerator yourself and desired to freeze me too if you like—all the same, I expect you'll wish to thaw out, by-and-by," he said. "It's in my interest just now to make this chap waste even a little time. You must help."

"Oh! and may I ask how?" she said.

"I'll tell you that without your asking," he answered. "Armsdale's going to take a small party for a week-end up the river, and young Workman's to be asked. You must accept the invitation with a personal note from yourself, which you will carefully word in the best way to make him want to go. Then some time, to-morrow evening I shall make him come and dine with me at the Carlton. Armsdale's coming, and Workman's coming, and——"

"Thank you. And supposing I don't wish to?" she said, "I'll come too," he answered, looking her over with a glance familiar enough to her, "and you'll second your letter in person. I'll see to it that you do. And make the most of your opportunities to-morrow evening—you know how!" he concluded, with a wink.

Miss Delomosne made no reply. She knew that she was out of his power now, but she was not minded to make him aware of the fact yet. A more fitting and convenient time would come—would surely soon be there. She could wait and bide it.

"By the bye," said Sir John, with his hand on the door, "I want to congratulate you, my dear, on your engagement to my man, Shepheard, or something of the sort!"

"I am not aware that Leonie's love-affairs," answered Miss Delomosne.

"I heard something of it," said Sir John. "Bing for her, I think, and ask to her."

"You cannot. Leonie has left me."

"Left you? Suddenly?" he asked.

"Quite suddenly. Being a Frenchwoman, she has taken French leave."

"Then I bet a sovereign to one she's gone off with Shepheard!" he exclaimed. "For he's gone too, and in just the same way. It's a queer thing! There's nothing missing, and his accounts are perfectly straight, too. He'd been with me for years—I'd never had a thought he was a fixture. I treated him quite confidentially, too."

"He must have been in possession of some pleasant secrets!" she could not help saying, with a sneer.

"Not all my secrets—not yours!" he said, meaningly. "Well, I'm off. Bear in mind all I've said."

"I will bear it in mind," she replied.

Sir John waylaid Laurence next morning, and, on the plea of some urgent business, literally forced him into accepting his invitation to dine at the Carlton that evening.

"And you'll do your friend Workman," he said. "Why, man, you'll kill yourself if you go on like that!"

"I will take my chance," said Laurence. "But it's all I can spare. I had an invitation from Sir Herbert for the week-end which I should have liked to accept, but I really daren't. I must get on as quickly as possible."

"How soon will you finish?" asked Sir John, casually.

"Oh, in eight to ten days," replied Laurence. "Ah, you're getting along famously," said Sir John. "Well, we're all anxious to see your finished product. But the secret's still there, I suppose?"

Laurence laughed. "Yes," he said. "It's still there."

A Rothwell woman seems to get an annual baptism. She took the magistrate's bet her husband threw a bucket of water over her on Christmas eve, and when asked if that was the first time he did it, she replied that it was about the same ago. Will it come off again? These are the pleasantries of married life, no doubt.

DISTRICT BREVITIES.

Wetherby folks are agitating for the covering in of the station.

• • •

Garforth is giving Rothwell a lead! Last month there were 16 births to 6 deaths.

• • •

Why? Vagrants are fighting shy of Wetherby. Only thirteen were relieved in two weeks.

• • •

Lady Hawke has presented to Wighill Church a linen cloth and a white brocaded cover for the altar.

• • •

The reduction of pauperism in Tadcaster Union is a welcome sign. Is the old age pension having an effect?

• • •

No chance for competition. The Wetherby "fathers" have appointed a bellman. Do they provide him with uniform?

• • •

The rainfall for Wetherby district last year was 23.61 inches. The wettest month was January and the driest February.

• • •

What next? At a Rothwell chapel on Sunday night a child, who was with its parents, was seen playing with a mechanical toy.

• • •

A bad sign. No plans for houses were passed last month at Rothwell. Yet it is said the demand for houses in the district is good.

• • •

The humour of it! Now that the snowstorm has come and gone the Tadcaster District Council are to invest in a dozen snow ploughs.

• • •

A medicant who told a Stourton "bobby" he was looking for a friend unexpectedly discovered one. He is now one of H.M. guests.

• • •

Is Sherburn the only place in the district where scholars receive prizes for regular attendance? Prize-giving used to be a feature of school life.

• • •

Entitled to the pension, surely! Wetherby District Council have decided that the workman over seventy years of age shall be put on piece work.

• • •

The N.E.R. Co. has issued a list of camping grounds for Boy Scouts, and it includes Linton, Barwick, Thorparch, Collingham, Sherburn, and Selby.

• • •

It is asserted that the roads in Garforth are in better condition than they have been for several years. What have Tadcaster Council to say to that?

• • •

If the electric light is introduced into Garforth there will be competition between the Gas Co. and the Yorkshire Electric Power Co. The prospect, however, is remote.

• • •

"It always seems to me extraordinary," says the Vicar of Scarcroft, "that so many regular communicants are absent at Christmas, but it is an old story in Scarcroft."

• • •

The suggestion to provide a conveyance to take Whitkirk children to school is not a novel one. Scholes children were taken to Barwick School in this way for several years.

• • •

Sherburn magistrates, like their brethren at Tadcaster, had not much business to transact at the fortnightly Court. But the "drunks" must be taught to mend their ways.

• • •

The patients continue to express their gratitude for the kind treatment they receive at the Garforth Infectious Diseases Hospital. This is very satisfactory to all concerned.

• • •

Kippax has a fine army of old folks. Nearly 250 were invited to the old people's treat. No wonder the place is called "a health resort." It will go on, however, intend to compete with Harrogate.

• • •

Poverty is not always the cause of youngsters having to work half-time, says Mrs Philip Snowden. It is sometimes sheer selfishness on the part of the parents who want more luxury and amusement.

• • •

Wetherby "fathers" are dissatisfied with the train service. They want more trains as well as a quicker service. The N.E.R. Co. will really give them additional facilities if they think they will bring more revenue.

• • •

Have you seen him? At a meeting of the Selby Board of Guardians on Monday it was reported that a man named John Walker, who was wearing a suit of clothes belonging to the Leeds Workhouse, had absconded.

• • •

If all statements are true, Tadcaster Guardians and District Council have made claims against Leeds amounting to over £21,000 for the loss of Crossgates. If the Kiddal scheme had been carried out it would have been more.

• • •

Writing in his magazine about a carol service, the Vicar of Marston says: "Not all the carols I sang were old traditional carols that have got into the hearts of English people centuries ago, and not the sentimental lullabys and cradle songs, with catchy waltz-time tunes that pass current as carols nowadays. There is heart in the old tunes and words. There are only nerves in the modern substitutes. The same blight too is upon not a few modern hymns and anthems."

• • •

The public lighting of the town of Wetherby costs about £160.

• • •

The first Gilchrist lecture at Garforth was a great success from every point of view.

• • •

Wetherby has primitive methods. The bellman is to be sent round to ask for volunteers for the fire brigade.

• • •

Scholes threatens to annex the new pump at Barwick when there is a scarcity of water at the "haven of rest."

• • •

Our poultry columns should become more popular. A local man has just sold a cockerel for £42—the price of a horse.

• • •

Barkston Ash farmers must be up and doing! They should see that application is made for exemptions for sheep dogs.

• • •

Despite opposition, the salaries of several teachers in Kippax district have been increased. The labourer is worthy of his hire.

• • •

Before very long, it is stated, a respectable "gullery" will be formed at Swillington. Then the farmers will have to start a gun club.

• • •

Why? A Wetherby man wants to know why the church music looks so thin. "When was the church last scrubbed?" is another query.

• • •

Thief! It is stated that there are poor people in Hunslet Union in receipt of relief who would rather starve than ask the Guardians for coal.

• • •

One Garforth Councillor says that by a rearrangement of their staff, they could, by an expenditure of £40, save £100. How is it to be done?

• • •

Like Tadcaster Board, the Selby Guardians have decided to adopt the way ticket system, as recommended by the Yorkshire Poor Law conference.

• • •

The Vicar of Marston says that the Christmas festival is an enormous number of Church people so a bank holiday with a varnish of religious sentiment.

• • •

A policeman at the Skyrack Court on Tuesday said he saw a man using filthy language. This is as good as the late Lord Cross, who once said he heard a smile.

• • •

The members of the Wetherby Habitation of the Primrose League have decided in the event of civil war, to guarantee the raising of £100 for the people of Ulster.

• • •

Leisurely ways! The resolution passed by the Yorkshire Fishery Board as to a pollution of the Wharfe at Tadcaster has been some time in reaching the District Council.

• • •

A number of parishes in Tadcaster Union are in arrears with calls, and the overseers will find themselves before Tadcaster magistrates if they don't plank down the necessary money.

• • •

What do Barkston Ash folks say? "The country is a most miserable place in the winter if there is no fox-hunting," declares the Marquis of Worcester. The barn-hand will probably agree, eh?

• • •

It has been pointed out as a remarkable coincidence that two persons admitted to Selby Workhouse have the same name (surname and christian name alike), and both are suffering from feeble-mindedness.

• • •

Things are getting lively at Wetherby. A correspondent suggests that ladies with "new bonnets and men with patent leather boots come late to church so that people can admire them." What about other places?

• • •

Scholes water supply question gets no further forward. In the district thousands of gallons of good water are going to waste, yet it seems impossible to utilize it. The "haven of rest" will be kicking up a row some day.

• • •

Mrs Emmet, one of Boston Spa's oldest residents, has passed to the land of shadows. Her husband, the late Mr John Emmet, F.L.S., was a poet of some note, and he wrote on many subjects in the principal newspapers.

• • •

Like Garforth, Selby has secured a courier of Gilchrist lectures, and the subjects are "Shifts for a living among animals," "Defects and curiosities of sight," "The birth of the Moon," "Napoleon," and "Water and its work."

• • •

A return prepared by Mr. Bagenal, Local Government Board Inspector, shows vagrancy during the year ended Michaelmas last. The number admitted to the Selby Workhouse was 1,651, showing a decrease of 452 as compared with the figures for 1909. Altogether the West Riding showed a decrease in vagrants of 85,841.

• • •

The girls at Wetherby are not getting a chance. A writer says that the changing of the hour of the evening service at church from 6 to 6.30, which took place soon after the present vicar's arrival, had its effect upon the marriage market, for the servants complained that their mistresses kept them working until after six o'clock on Sundays, and as they had to be in by nine o'clock it did not allow them to do much sweethearting after church.

HUNSLET RURAL DISTRICT COUNCIL.

HALTON'S TRAMWAY SCHEME.

ATTITUDE OF LEEDS CORPORATION.

ELECTRIC POWER CO.'S BILL TO BE OPPOSED

The monthly meeting of the Hunslet Rural District Council was held at the Council Offices, Leek Street, Hunslet, on Thursday, afternoon—Mr T. Thomas (Chairman), presiding. Other members present were Messrs G. Armitage, W. Verity, J. Flanagan, and D. Hargreaves, with the Clerk (Mr W. B. Pindar), the medical officer of health (Dr Buck), the surveyor (Mr Nuttall), and the sanitary inspectors (Messrs Whitehead and Higgins).

The medical officer presented his report, which showed that during the past four weeks there had been registered sixteen births—three in Oulton-with-Woodlesford, and seven in Templenewsam. During the same period there has been six deaths in Oulton-with-Woodlesford, and three in Templenewsam. Eight cases of scarlet fever in Oulton-with-Woodlesford, and two cases of diphtheria, in addition to three cases of phthisis, had been reported. The cases of scarlet fever occurred in the early part of the month, and were confined to Woodlesford.

The Clerk reported that in accordance with the resolution of the Council he had written to the Town Clerk of Leeds in connection with the proposed tramway to Halton. The Town Clerk had replied that it was impossible to give a definite undertaking that the construction of the line would be commenced two years from the passing of the Act, as it had always been contrary to the policy of the committee to give an undertaking in such cases.

Mr Pindar said he had also received letters from the County Council stating that they would be glad if the Rural Council would co-operate with them as before in obtaining satisfactory conditions. He was of opinion they should do so. He had again written to the Town Clerk stating that as they could not give an undertaking the Council could not give unconditional sanction.

The Clerk's action was upheld, and the Council decided to co-operate with the County Council.

With regard to the application of the Yorkshire Electric Power Co. asking for the Council's support in the laying of mains for lighting purposes, the Clerk said the District Councils' Association had had an interview with the representatives of the Company, and they were not satisfied with the explanation given. The Bill, he said, was totally unprecedented in its nature. It proposed to take powers to supply electric light to a large area, practically the whole of the West Riding. If they got these powers they would get the monopoly, and they might have a repetition of what they had with the tramway undertaking. They would pick out the districts where they might get plenty of customers and leave the other districts to "fend" for themselves. The opinion of the committee of the Association was that it was very unsatisfactory as it infringed the rights of local authorities and gave them no adequate protection or safeguard, and it ought to be opposed.

Mr G. Armitage moved that they carry out the recommendation of the District Councils' Association. Mr Thomas seconded, and the Council agreed.

MR E. H. FOSTER AND MR LANE FOX ON TERRITORIALS.

At the West Riding County Council meeting on Wednesday Mr E. H. Foster raised the question of facilities for teachers to attend Territorial training. He moved that the Education Committee be instructed to report as to the facilities to be given to those teachers who had joined the Territorial Force. The failure of the Territorial Force, he pointed out, meant the failure of the voluntary system. He quoted the cases of two teachers, one of whom had his salary deducted in respect of the time he spent at camp. The other teacher went for the annual training in July, and received a letter from the Education Authority at Wakefield in the following terms:—"I have to say that the Education Committee are not prepared, in view of the serious disorganisation which ensues, to grant leave of absence to members of their teaching staffs for the purpose of attending training for the Territorial Forces." That, commented Mr Foster, seemed to be directly contrary to the resolution passed by the County Council on May 13th, 1908, when the West Riding Territorial Association was informed that facilities for training would be given to the general staff as far as possible. He did not see any difficulty in granting these. There was a number of teachers to go on supply when necessary, and therefore it was only a question of adjustment.

Mr E. Mills Gaskell seconded the motion.

Alderman P. H. Booth said that there was no necessity for the motion. The Education Committee was prepared to carry out the resolution of the Council as far as practicable. One of the teachers took French-leave, and he was informed that a repetition of this action would bring about his discharge.

Mr G. R. Lane Fox, M.P., maintained that that the explanation just given did not correspond with the actual facts of the cases. If the latter was to stand then, he said, that the action of the Education Committee was directly contradictory to the resolution of the County Council. It had been well said that public bodies in this matter should set the lead.

Alderman P. H. Booth: Certainly, we are prepared to carry out the motion of the County Council, and give leave as far as practicable.

Alderman Lupton said the Education Committee had been willing as far as practicable to give facilities for teachers to attend. It must be remembered that the holidays of teachers consisted of eight weeks and eight days in the year, and any interference with the school work was very serious.

Mr Foster, replying to the discussion, said it would be interesting to know in how many cases the Education Committee had given their consent. The fact remained that refusal had been the order of the day.

The resolution was adopted by 35 votes to 26.

SELBY CONSERVATIVES WEEKLY WHIST DRIVES.—Another successful whist drive took place at the Conservative Club on Tuesday, 84 ladies and gentlemen taking part. Mr R. Lodge officiated as M.C., and the following were the prize-winners:—Ladies—1, Mrs Weaver; 2, Miss Housemoor (after a tie with Mrs Hanson); scaled, Miss V. Murrell; consolation, Mrs Rockett. Gentlemen—1, Mr W. Lockhart (after ties with Mr W. S. Bostock and Mr Pickup); 2, Mr W. S. Bostock; scaled, Mr H. Morley; consolation, Mr G. Kilburn. Light refreshments, chocolates for ladies, and cigarettes for gentlemen were handed round during an interval.

HUTTON HALL, MARSTON.

Hutton Hall, Marston, a few miles from Tadcaster, where Prince and Princess Arthur of Connaught are to have their home for a few months, stands on historic ground. From its windows the eye may roam over pleasant lanes and meadows for miles without catching the sight of a single human being. Yet centuries ago this tract of country was the scene of one of the bloodiest battles in British history. Who has not read of the Battle of Marston Moor, where the forces of Fairfax and Cromwell, in 1644, defeated the Royalists under Prince Rupert?

Even to this day, grim relics of that terrible struggle, in which over 4,000 soldiers were slain, are unearthed and preserved. Not so long ago (so a contemporary says) a local rustic, engaged in draughting the land, came across an old and rusty vessel that contained a hundred bullets. He would have made money out of them, too, but the Lord of the Manor, anxious to preserve anything suggestive of the battle, forbade him, and ordered them to be put back into the soil from which they came. Old swords and rifles have been found in years gone by, and are, of course, jealously preserved.

Marston Old Hall, the great house in which Cromwell is reported to have slept on the night of the famous battle, is now no more than a picturesque farm house, still in good repair, hard by the main road.

The Hall is a comparatively modern house, on the other side of the village, shut off from the highway by a clump of trees. For generations it has been the home of the York family; and it is owned by Captain E. York, one of the Tadcaster magistrates. The house contains nearly thirty rooms, all furnished in exquisite taste.

One of the most charming adjuncts of the place in summer is the rose garden, a dainty bower in which the Princess, should she stay long enough, would find objects of infinite interest. In the Hall itself there is a magnificent collection of china, reported to be worth many thousands of pounds.

That the Prince and Princess propose to entertain on any considerable scale is not known, but if they do there is plenty of society in the neighbourhood. What is certain, however, is that they could not have selected a better centre for hunting, of which it is known Prince Arthur is extremely fond. The Hall stands on the border of two hunting countries—the York and Ainsty and Bramham Moor.

On Wednesday the arrival of the Prince and Princess at Hutton Hall was regarded with much interest by the inhabitants of Long Marston and the neighbouring villages, but there was no organised demonstration. A number of the rural folks posted themselves at the junction of the York and Marston Moor roads. They had one or two humps to light up the roadway, and as the motor-car in which the Royal couple were seated, sped past, they cheered heartily.

COPMANTHORPE CHILDREN ENTERTAINED.

The whole of the children of Copmanthorpe under the age of 14 were entertained to tea on Thursday night week, by the Copmanthorpe Carol Singers, viz., Messrs S. Gall, H. Hudson, A. Ward, H. Knowles, T. Holt, W. German, J. Day, P. Wright, D. Backhouse, G. Eastwood, J. Brown, T. Richardson, and Ackroyd, who gave all their takings to the enjoyment of the young guests. The children turned up to the number of 67, and had an enjoyable time.

After tea each child was presented with a new penny, bags of sweets, orange, and biscuits, and those who could not get these gifts were sent home to them.

Songs were sung by the children, and Messrs Backhouse, Ward, Gall, and Germain also contributed songs to the enjoyment of the youngsters.

Mr George Eastwood gave selections on the gramophone, which were greatly appreciated. After singing the National Anthem a very pleasant evening was brought to a close. Mrs Robert Leng catered for the tea admirably, assisted by Miss Leng, Mrs H. Hudson, Mrs Ward, and Miss Hobson.

HOW DYSPEPTICS CAN EAT WHAT THEY WANT WITHOUT PAIN.

In the vast majority of cases, states a leading specialist, indigestion, dyspepsia, and other so-called stomach troubles are in no way due to the fault of the stomach itself, but almost entirely to fermentation of the food contents and the resultant formation of acid and gas which irritate and inflame the delicate lining of the stomach, and unnaturally distend the stomach walls, causing displacement of the vital organs and dangerous pressure on the heart and lungs. His estimate that 96 per cent. of all stomach pains, either acute or chronic, are directly or indirectly due to acid fermentation; all of which he has proved can be avoided by neutralising the acid and stopping the fermentation by means of a simple antacid known among and obtainable from all chemists under the name of bisurated magnesia; half a teaspoonful in a little water immediately after eating, effectively preventing the slightest indication of fermentation and discomfort even in the severest cases. Inquiry among chemists confirmed the remarkable value of his product, but readers are cautioned when purchasing to see that the name is spelled bisurated, as there are other chemical products bearing names similar to bisurated magnesia, but which are lacking in its peculiarly valuable properties.

SHORT OF MONEY.—A smart-looking youth named William Haley (20), who has already been committed for stealing bicycles at Selby and is awaiting trial at Leeds Assizes on another charge, was, at Sedbusk on Wednesday, charged with obtaining 9s. 8d. from the Glass Houghton Colliery Co. by false pretences. Haley, who is a bricklayer's labourer, filled in a time-sheet and went to the office by the pottery, but the entry of J. E. Atkinson, time-keeper, showed that the youth had not worked at all on the days charged for. When charged, Haley said he was short of money. He was sent to prison for one month.

A CUSTOMER'S "JOKE."—Before the Selby Bench on Wednesday James Thomas Atkins, an employe at the oil mills, living at Hemingbrough, was charged with stealing a gill bottle of whisky, value 1s. 4d., at the Royal Oak Inn, Selby, on Monday morning last. Defendant was seen standing on the bar counter, and when asked by the landlord, Mr Frank G. Shaw, what he was doing, he replied: "I have been helping myself." He had a bottle of whisky in his pocket, but placed it on the counter, saying that he took it from a shelf as a joke. He was given into custody. Defendant said he was in receipt of a pension from the Army, which he would lose if convicted. He described it as an act of madness. Prosecutor did not press the case, and it was dismissed on the payment of costs.

BRAMHAM MOOR HUNT.

MEET AT STOCKELD.

On Monday the Bramham Moor met at Stockeld, but although shooting operations are contemplated, Mr Foster did not stop hounds drawing the covers. They went on to Spofforth Hall to draw, and finding, hounds went away with a catchy scent, which was surprising, as everyone expected a great scenting day. Then they ran better by Cocked Hat, and bearing to the left, went nearly to Barrowby. Still coming to the left the fox went through Addlethorpe, Addlethorpe Wood, nearly to Stockeld. Reynard was headed here, and he bore to the left and then made off again in the direction of Cocked Hat, and at a slower pace was hunted over Spofforth Park nearly to Kirkby Overblow. He skirted the hill here, and skirted the Punch Bowl, and then hounds went away as if for Rougmont Carr, but bearing to the right they ran over the hill, and lose the fox near to Weeton—an hour and three-quarters after finding.

They went on to Rougmont Carr, and found, but scent failed at Harewood Bridge.

They found afterwards at Weeton Whin, but could scarcely own the line a yard as they went towards Harewood Bridge, and he was given up. A fox was got going in Swindon Wood, and he left, pointing for the Punch Bowl. Turning as if for Walton Head, the fox was headed, and hounds took a ring back wide of Swindon, and he was lost near to where the previous fox was had, there seeming to be no scent in this region.

Hounds then went on to the Punch Bowl, where they found a brace, and went away with pay amount of music over the hill near to Kirkby Overblow, and on to the directions of Leconfield Whin, and turning back they killed him near to Ingham's Gorse after a sharp spin.

On Saturday afternoon Harewood footballers were defeated by Harrogate M. Church by four goals to nil.

In connection with the National Health Insurance, Mr C. D. Sellers, of Sherburn, has been elected to the Pharmaceutical Committee for the West Riding.

Hotel managers, boarding-house and lodging proprietors, aware from past experience of the advertising value of such a well-known medium as the N.E.R. Furnished Lodgings Hotels, etc., Guilde will no doubt, welcome a reminder that the 1914 edition is now in hand; and they will certainly be well advised to consult the nearest N.E.R. stationmaster in regard to inserting particulars of their establishments in the guide. The forthcoming annual edition is the eighteenth, and it will be issued in still more attractive form, the circulation being large and effective. Application should be made before the end of this month.—See advert.

ODDFELLOWS' MEETING.—The half-yearly meeting of the Knaresborough and District Independent Order of Oddfellows (M.U.) was held at Pannal on Monday night. There was a large attendance, over which P.P.G.M. J. Shutt presided. P.P.G.M. J. Shutt and P.G. S. W. Fishburn were elected to represent the district at the annual conference, to be held this year at Aberystwith. D.G.M. J. E. Ellis was appointed Grand Master of the District for the ensuing year, and P.G. F. Wade was chosen Deputy Grand Master for the ensuing year. P.P.G.M. W. Fishburn was elected District Secretary, and P.P.G.M. F. Inman was appointed District Treasurer. P.P.G.M. B. Dodgson and P.G. E. Wiggins were elected District Auditors, and P.G.M. C. Cawood was appointed Lodge Book Examiner. It was decided to hold the next half-yearly meeting at Harewood.

GOOD DAY'S SPORT IN THE AINSTY.

On Tuesday the York and Ainsty Hunt met at Acaster Malbis, and there was a big field. Lord Furness gave the order to draw the plantation in the Park. Hounds soon had reynard on the move, and he went away on the Stub Wood side. Bearing to the right hounds ran on as if going for Appleton; but going to the right it looked as if Brockett Hagg would be the call, but getting headed to the right from the road by Mr Pond's house, hounds got a view and raced their fox down after a very nice twenty minutes.

Going on to Stub Wood a fox was found. The scent could not be said to be good, just enough for hounds to work. Reynard going away on this riverside got up to Dr. Raimes' gardens, and going over the road ran by the village with Bishopthorpe in front; then going to the left he crossed the road and made a point for Copmanthorpe; but leaving this village on the right, bounds ran on to Mr Arthur Hall's cover, Brockett Hagg.

Hounds rattled through the cover and crossed the road as if for Appleton Roebuck. The fun was of a high order, and the big ditches took toll, the riders getting a cracking. Reynard now turned to the left, and got back to the starting point, Stub Wood. Hounds were hard at their fox in cover, and this gave the horses a chance to recover their wind. It was five minutes before the hallos away, and hounds ran the same line by Acaster, going straight to the railway by Copmanthorpe, up to the village. Hounds hunted the line through the cottagers' gardens. Once clear of the village, it looked as if the hounds would get to the Bogs. Reynard got headed back, and hounds got very close at his brush, but reynard had plenty of go left in him, and riding away from the pack, re-crossed the railway below Copmanthorpe station. The bridge came in handy, and the road helped the road riders to see all the fun. Going straight for Acaster Malbis, they left the village one field on the left, and hounds ran into Brockett Hagg-tion in the Park. The field began to make a long tail, and many the more, and he went away on the Stub Wood had got to the bottom of their mounts as hounds side. Bearing to the right hounds ran on as if went from Mr Hall's cover,

Going to the left the hounds reached the Appleton Roebuck road, and reynard ran the road for some distance. Here hounds and hunts-man showed themselves to great advantage, and working the line ahead from Appleton Roebuck Village, went straight for Nun Appleton covers, going through the corner of Kennel Wood. This stout and good fox gave the other covers the go bye, taking a nice line down to the rived Ouse. Being too tired to face the water, reynard ran the banks for some distance, and hounds got a view, and raced into him close by Acaster Selby. It is a long time since hounds had such a good hunt in this part of the country. Lord Furness was congratulated upon the fine sport shown, and Gumpstone certainly added another feather in his cap. The Earl of St. Germans, who had gone in tip top form throughout the run, had the mask presented to him.

On Saturday afternoon a football match was played between Sherburn and Monk Fryston, and the latter won by four goals to three.

G.F.S.—The members of the Monk Fryston Branch of the Girls' Friendly Society (by the invitation of the Rev. W. M. C. and Mrs Clarke), were entertained to tea at the Concert Hall on Saturday evening. Subsequently the party spent a happy time. Dancing, singing, and games made up the programme.

ROTHWELL & DISTRICT JOTTINGS.

Kippax is one of the places which is suffering from the mistakes of the past. Years ago, when the District Council was young, it was recognised that a system of sewerage for the village was needed, but, instead of adopting an enterprising policy and carrying out a comprehensive scheme, the Council of that day allowed several "potter-ing" little schemes to be adopted, and now the work has to be done over again. The motto of doing a thing well is just as applicable to the work of public bodies as to that of individuals, and it is very unfortunate the District Council did not recognise that years ago. Owing to pressure by the Rivers Board, the District Council have been compelled to prepare a new system, and it will mean the imposition of a fresh burden on the ratepayers. It is, however, necessary, and grumbling will not give any redress.

Barkston Ash lawyers were apparently on the defensive the other night at Selby. It is reported that the Chairman at a meeting of the Conservative Club characterised the present House of Commons as a lawyers' parliament, and Mr C. H. March, a well-known local solicitor, referred to the attack on "a very learned and honourable profession. To say that because they were a lawyers' parliament they were rogues and thieves was almost complete blasphemy." Mr Robert Hodgson, another solicitor, thought "it was wrong of the Chairman to say that they were all rogues and thieves. He thought, too, it was very unfair to say that the majority of the laws were made by the lawyers." This is all very interesting in view of the candidature of Mr E. H. Foster, who is President of the Leeds Law Society. And, of course, the secretary of the Barkston Ash Conservative Association is a well-known local lawyer.

Houses are wanted at Tadcaster, South Milford, Sherburn, and Selby, and something is to be done to meet the need. It is rumoured that a firm of employers at Tadcaster are to undertake a building scheme, and the N.E.R. Co. are to erect a dozen houses at Milford—probably a first instalment—and plans for four houses at Sherburn have been passed. A number of miners employed at Micklefield reside at Sherburn and Milford, and probably were more house accommodation afforded in these villages fewer of the men would live in Leeds. I do not know, however, that this is having an appreciable effect on the marriage market.

In the Rothwell area, it is said, wedding bells are silent because young folks, anxious to have the nuptial knot tied, cannot obtain houses. A local preacher at one of the Rothwell chapels on Sunday, took a thoroughly up-to-date view of his vocation, and dealt with the vexed question of marriage and housing. He stated that several couples cannot get married owing to an inability to get cottages, and that if they became united they would have to reside with parents—always a risky experiment. The Urban Council must investigate this matter, and endeavour to meet the situation. Probably the "burning" question at next election will be: "Are the Council justified in spending public money in the provision of dwellings in order to encourage young folks to marry?"

Business at Tadcaster Petty Sessions was delayed for nearly half-an-hour owing to the non-attendance of magistrates. For the past few months half-a-dozen justices have been on the Bench at every fortnightly petty sessional court, and they have had comparatively little to do. Whether, or not they had become disgusted it is difficult to say, but only Mr J. H. Ingleby put in an appearance on Monday, and it was necessary to secure the offices of Mr J. M. Dawson, of Wighill, the Chairman of the Wetherby Bench. It will be necessary after all, I see, to adopt the plan suggested in this column, and have two magistrates resident in the town. A daily paper, with more enterprise than accuracy, put J.P. after the name of County Councillor Sykes, of Tadcaster, and it may be a correct description some day.

I notice a farmer in Barkston Ash Division has rather extreme views on the Territorial movement. He appears to have engaged a servant who was a "Territorial," and when he discovered he was a member of the force he told him he was no good to him. He was apparently unwilling that any time should be sacrificed in order to make the man efficient. What, I wonder, would the farmer say if compulsory military service became the law of the land? There is only one alternative to the voluntary system, and that is compulsory military training, and the farmer in question is doing his share in driving the country to that. Without expressing any opinion on its merits, there is no doubt that a compulsory system would very materially increase national expenditure, and is not the outcry of the farmers against growing rates and taxation?

Prosperity is returning to Crossgates Literary Society, and, with audiences of one and three hundred, the committee have reason to be well satisfied with their efforts. Last year I suggested that the meetings should be held weekly, instead of fortnightly, as I feared that Crossgates could not find sufficient talent to carry out this plan. Probably they will consider it for next winter. And why should a Crossgates have a course of Gilchrist lectures? A certain monetary guarantee has to be given, and the lectures have to be worked on a well-laid plan, but what Garforth can do surely Crossgates can easily accomplish. I understand that Crossgates could have had Gilchrist lectures this winter, but no application was made for them.

In promoting their tramway scheme to Halton, the Leeds Corporation have adopted high-handed methods, and they have compelled the Rural Council and the County Council to act on the defensive. When the proposal was first brought forward more than a year ago the Corporation came to an agreement with the District Council guaranteeing that a tramway service would be given in three years, but they now decline to enter into such an undertaking, so that if they obtained the powers they could hang the scheme up for as long as they pleased.

It is not unreasonable to assume that this is a dodge, and the ratepayers of Templenewsam are apparently to be made a pawn in the annexation game. Owing to the strong opposition they have now to face, the Corporation know perfectly well that any annexation scheme will be increasingly difficult to carry through, but if they could dangle the bait of a tramway service before the people of Templenewsam they might succeed in getting support in the district to their more important proposal. The ratepayers have already expressed themselves in favour of the introduction of the tramway, but they are hostile to annexation, and it is quite clear that the Corporation intend to play off one scheme against the other. Only one course, therefore, is open to the District Council and the County Council who are co-operating in the matter.

Wetherby has not been long in emulating Tadcaster. For months the conduct of the residents of these petty sessional towns has been so good that the magistrates have had very little to do, and the guardians of law and order, were it not that they have to study law relating to agriculture, would have found their calling practically gone. Some time ago there was a maiden sessions at Tadcaster, and the presiding magistrate was presented with white gloves, and at the last Court at Wetherby a similarly pleasing ceremony was significant of the improvement that has come over the habits of the people. In the good old days, when the prosperous farmers met themselves at Wetherby over the week-end, that vigilance which is now exercised by the police force was not a factor to be reckoned with, and it is recorded that after an election ale flowed down the steps of a local pub, while every man who entered the inn had his hat destroyed and a new one presented to him. With all their faults, the people nowadays have a grain more sense than the roystering residents of old.

Sherburn, owing to its not having an adequate supply of good water is receiving the attention of the Local Government Board and the County Council, and the District Council will be compelled, sooner or later, to carry out a scheme. Opinion seems to favour the obtaining of a supply from Leeds, but last week the ratepayers of the city defeated the proposal to convey water to Doncaster, and a poll will be taken. In the event of a majority being in favour, the scheme will have to receive the sanction of Parliament, and about a year will elapse before that is got, while the work of laying the mains, which will pass through Scholes, Barwick, Aberford, Micklefield, South Milford, etc., will take another year or two. It is obvious Sherburn cannot get water from this source for several years, and it is stated that the price "will not be less than 8d. and might be 9d. or 10d. per 1,000 gallons." In addition, a considerable expenditure, on the laying of a pipe to Sherburn would be necessary, and, having regard to the annual charges, it is surprising that the District Council have not formed a combination of parishes for the purpose of getting a cheaper supply from a local source.

For some reason the County Highways Committee have shown a strange reluctance to acting on the representations of local authorities in regard to fixing a speed limit for motor-cars in certain places but they have been "brought to book," and they may now think it advisable to give heed to local opinion. Although all motorists are not "road hogs," there is always a possible danger from motor traffic in such places as Aberford, Tadcaster, South Milford, Sherburn, Scholes, Barwick, and when Tadcaster District Council asked the County Council to fix a speed limit for these parishes the request was regarded as a perfectly reasonable one. The Highways Committee, however, would not listen to it, and the County Council had the unwelcome duty of referring back the question for re-consideration.

Recently a motorist, who was probably out for a "joy ride" in the district, smashed into a vehicle belonging to a local farmer, with the result that the shafts were broken. The motor-car was damaged, too, and had to be towed home. A few days afterwards the farmer received a claim for £30 damages, but it was sheer "bluff," and it did not prevent the agriculturist from demanding what was his legal due. It will be noticed that in nearly all motor prosecutions and actions, the motorist is never to blame.

CHARGE AGAINST HAZLEWOOD MAN.—On Monday, at the Leeds City and Petty Sessions, George S. Hall, described as a labourer, of Hazlewood, was charged by John R. Cumberland with stealing clothing. Among the articles alleged to have been stolen were a pair of cloth trousers, a pair cord breeches, a vest shirt, pair of leggings, and a metal watch, the total having a value of £2 15s. The father of Cumberland appeared, but Inspector Daniels said he was afraid they could not proceed without Cumberland himself, who was in the Army at Aldershot. The Chairman: Is he coming to prove the case? Cumberland's father said he was not. Britton stated he had Cumberland went to enlist, and he failed to pass the examination. Cumberland told him he could have the box and clothes. The magistrates could not go on with the case without Cumberland, and it was adjourned.

AMUSEMENTS.

LEEDS EMPIRE PALACE.

At the Empire Palace this week there is an excellent programme, at the head of which is Mark Sheridan, whose debonnair style suffi-ciently indicates that he is still "one of the b'hoys." He brings with him some good songs and jokes, and his reception shows that he has not lost even a suspicion of popular fancy. An interesting turn is that of Herbert Brooks, who, after mystifying card manipulation—including even the production, by request, of an Insurance card and a twelve of spades—is put into a small steel trunk, which is fastened, and escapes in less than half a minute. Princess d'Arpa dances gracefully in her new creation "La Belle Alexia," and two other clever dancing turns are contributed by Metz and Metz and Margie and Lemor. A pleasing musical number is given by the Five Symphony Girls; Dave Bryant and Bert Weston provide humorous items; and Alexandra Dagmar is both charming and amusing.

The programme at the Leeds Empire next week will be particularly notable for the production of the very latest "stop press" revue, entitled "What a Game," invented and written by Victor Newman. This will be given in two scenes, showing, (1) Exterior of a week-enders' Hotel, and (2) The Double Escalade. The cast is particularly strong, and includes such well-known people as Mr Victor Newman, the well-known character actor; Mr Edgar Stevens, from the Gaiety Theatre (London); Mr Frank Danby, and the Misses Dorothy Eden, a brilliant musical comedy artiste; Alice Hamilton (late of Duke of York's Theatre, London); Olive Stone, from "Keep Smiling," the revue now playing at the Alhambra, etc. The latest society craze, viz., the Tango, promises to be one of the main features of "What a Game." Among other good turns booked for next week are Velanches Football Dogs; Alf Tack, comedian; Florence and Lilian, in a delightful musical act; Harry Freeman, comedian; Russell Brandon, the dancing darkie from Dixie; and the American biscoope.

LEEDS HIPPODROME.

At the Hippodrome this week the popularity of the cinema is demonstrated. A considerable portion of the bill is devoted to a film entitled "Through the Clouds." It is a most vivid and realistic picture. Two balloons and an aeroplane figure in the production, and the plot unfolded is sufficiently thrilling to keep the audience expectant for over fifty minutes. George Carney presents a new sketch humorously entitled "The Fight Prize," which includes Sam Harris, a very clever American-Hebrew character comedian, whose impersonations call forth roars of laughter. He is a good sketch, full of vigour. A most delightful musical treat is contributed by the Montmartre Quartet. The artistes include Isadore Maurice (a brilliant pianist), a 'cellist, a violinist, and a young lady who sings with much expression. S. W. Wyndham, comedian, sings a couple of songs blithely; Nellie Bly is a versatile comedienne; and Cook and the Idento Brothers with their pretty partner go through a clever juggling act.

Next week at the Hippodrome the attraction will be Miss Florrie Forde's grand pantomime "Red Riding Hood." Miss Florrie Forde will figure as Prince Regent of Patonia, Miss Stella Esdaile will be "Red Riding Hood," and Mr Gilbert Payne will appear as "Soft Sammy." There will be a full London chorus and augmented orchestra.

LEEDS QUEEN'S THEATRE.

At the Queen's Theatre the pantomime "Dick Whittington," as played by Andie Caine's company, affords two hours of thorough enjoyment. There is an unlimited supply of fun, among which are many new gags, all the latest songs and choruses are rendered in capital style, and these are interspersed with some clever dancing. The stage effects are also of an attractive nature. All the comedians are responsible for many a hearty laugh, but Andie Caine, in the role of the Dame, must be termed the "star," his eccentricities creating endless amusement. Miss Eileen Dagnar, in the title role, makes a dashing and resourceful principal boy, and, along with Miss Minnie Milwards, as Alice, gets through a lot of work in praiseworthy style. All the other characters are deserving of special mention for a series of dainty dances in the closing scene. At Monday afternoon's performance the old-fashioned harlequinade was presented, and was highly appreciated, and it is to be repeated at a special matinee on Saturday.

Next week at the Queen's Theatre Messrs Edward Lloyd and Clifford Bown and their celebrated company will appear in the world-wide success "The Old Folks at Home." On Wednesday, February 25th, Mr Charles Bush will have his benefit.

LEEDS THEATRE DE LUXE.

The spectacle of a bursting train is somewhat novel when introduced to the cinematograph, and a picture entitled "The Burning Train," which was shown at the Theatre de Luxe during the first half of this week was thrilling to a degree. "The Rose and the Dagger," was another good drama of a different type, and a capital humorous film which was shown all the week appears under the title of "One Round O'Brien." This is quite a new style of picture, and had a good plot to recommend it. "Pimple's Bull-Fight" was an amusing production.

On Friday and Saturday the "star" attraction will be "A Message to Headquarters."

ROTHWELL EMPIRE.

Exceptionally fine programmes have been submitted at the Rothwell Empire this week. On Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday the chief attraction was "Victory or Death," an Italian drama, which, in addition to providing a sensational theme, illustrated the horrors of a ship on fire at sea. "The broken chisel" was also full of intense interest. There was likewise a good picture depicting the working of a steam locomotive. Mr G. R. Lister (comedian) proved a good turn. For Friday and Saturday nights the principal items are "Lies of a mother," showing the sacrifice of a mother's love; and a detective drama "Charley Colins and the King of Spades." In addition to the above there are two turns, Miss May Vincent (contralto) and Criss O'Neill.

Next week the management have been successful in securing The Russian Dwarfs, a troupe of clever little folk, who will appear throughout the week. The troupe will indulge in conjuring and other feats, in addition to giving a display of the Russian national dances. There will be the usual picture programmes. During the first half of the week the features will be "What the Gods Decree," showing the actors, who were prominent in the film "Proton"; and "A fair duellist." On Thursday, Friday, and Saturday the attractions will be "Nick Winter and the Kidnappers," with the famous detective at his best, and a first rate comedy "Pimple's Ivanhoe." Other good subjects are to be included.

CORRESPONDENCE

LIEUT. BOUGHEY, R.N., AND MR E. H. FOSTER, J.P.

(To the Editor).

Sir,—Lieut. Boughey is no doubt a brave officer, but he is evidently not without that discretion which is the better part of valour. His last letter reminds one of the old couplet:—

"He who fights and runs away Lives to fight another day."

He repeats the statements (which he cannot prove), to the effect that in Nationalist Ireland Protestants have no chance of election to public bodies; but adds "I do not say, of course, that their Protestantism has been the reason assigned for this exclusion."

Now, sir, this admission knocks the bottom out of nine-tenths of the so-called arguments advanced by Unionist speakers and writers. It is notorious that what is called the Ulster difficulty is only kept flickering by constant appeals to religious prejudices, and the appeals are generally based on direct misrepresentation; that is why Lieut. Boughey, and others similarly engaged, at once jib at a direct challenge, and cry out "Radical abuse" when shown up in their true colours.

However, we must not be too severe on those in distress, but seeing that Lieut. Boughey now practically admits that there is not the religious difficulty his friends have taught us to fear, we will rejoice that one (politically) sinner has found (political) salvation, even though it involves the rather unusual spectacle of a British officer showing the white feather.

Lieut. Boughey suggests that the matter on which I have challenged him concerns only himself and Mr Foster. Strange doctrine, indeed! Why was his first letter sent to this journal if he intended it only for Mr Foster? Does he imagine this is a private newspaper, with its wide and influential circulation, is read only by the future Member for the Barkston Ash Division? Sir, this nonsensical suggestion is simply another stale red herring drawn across the path for the purpose of obscuring the real issue, which is, and is likely to remain, misleading statements about religious intolerance in Catholic Ireland, for which not a scrap of evidence has been vouchsafed.—Yours, etc.,

MARTIN HARVEY.

At Barwick School last month the percentage of attendance was 88.96 as compared with 88.91 in December, 1912. The figures for Scholes School were 83.33 and 88.89.

A marriage has been arranged between Robert Evelyn Tissington Tatlow, second son of Mr Tissington Tatlow, formerly of Doncaster, Co. Yorks, and Scotland, eldest daughter of Mr F. W. Lawson, of Adel.

AVIATION.—On Sunday an aeroplane left Leeds about half-past eleven, with Dr. Christie in the pilot's, and Harold Dubberley in the passenger's seat, and they arrived over York in the leisurely time of 40 minutes. Various incidents, however, had delayed the airmen. For instance, at Tadcaster they made a special circular flight for the entertainment of the villagers, while so thick was the fall of mist and smoke over York that they at first missed the acknowledged aerial signpost, the Minster.

WHIST DRIVE AND DANCE.—An Ilbrough on Friday night a whist drive and dance were given by the Hon. Mrs Fairfax, when a most enjoyable evening was spent. The whist drive occupied the first part of the evening, and the prize-winners were:—Ladies: 1, Miss Westerby; 2, Miss Bertram; 3, Mrs. Chapman; booby, Miss Bolton. Gentlemen: 1, Mr Blair; 2, Rev. G. Fargus; 3, Mr Hobson; booby, Mr Blackley. The dance which followed lasted till the early hours of the morning, and was full of spirit and enjoyment for all.

AGRICULTURAL REFORMATORY.—At a meeting in Leeds in connection with Adel Reformatory School, the report showed that the number of boys in the school last December was 132, as compared with 147 in December, 1912, the number on licence 25; as compared with 33, and the number at large one, as compared with none, giving a total of 109, as compared with 180. During the three years ending December 31st last, 132 boys had left the school, of whom 110 were doing well. The school had been doing the work in a satisfactory manner. Attention was drawn to the smaller percentage of re-convictions, which in the past year worked out at only 9 per cent., as compared with 12.2 per cent. of the previous year. The adoption of the report was moved by the Lord Mayor, who mentioned that he had taken a special interest in the band of the institution. Mr F. W. Lawson, who seconded, said the band could be engaged at any time, and the Committee had perfect confidence that their music would be appreciated. The motion was carried.

THE GOLDEN ROPE.

By J. S. FLETCHER

Author of "The Threshing Floor," "Daniel Quayne," "The Harvest Moon," "When Charles the First was King," &c.

CHAPTER XIX.

On the morning of the day on which Laurence was to dine at the Carlton with Sir John Shepherd he received a note from Miss Delomosne. Had Sir John been privileged to look over his shoulder as he read it he very designing gentleman would have been somewhat surprised at its contents. As a matter of fact, Miss Delomosne, who was evolving certain plans of her own—having for their object something not at all in accordance with Sir John's intentions—had decided to write to Laurence in order to put Sir John off the scent. But the note was little more than a mere formality. "Dear Mr. Workman,"—it ran, "my guardian tells me that he has asked you to join his party for the river from Saturday to Monday. I am sure it would give us great pleasure if you could see your way to accept his invitation." She signed herself "Yours sincerely, Lilian Delomosne," and Laurence, who had not seen her handwriting before, was much struck by its grace and firmness. He put the letter away in his pocket-book.

"But I mustn't go," he said. "Three days of absence—even two—no, that is out of the question."

He had several letters to read that morning. The next one he took up, enclosed in a square envelope, addressed in typescript, and bearing the stamp of a S.W. office, was typed on a foolscap sheet, and had neither address nor date nor signature. Thinking it some circular, Laurence merely glanced at it—catching a word here and there; and then he suddenly uttered a sharp exclamation, carried the sheet over to the window of his lodgings, and read it over with a frown on his forehead.

"The writer," he read, "knows that you are engaged in a great enterprise, and, it wishing you success, desires to warn you against persons who are endeavouring to profit by your labours. When you remember that you have had papers and plans stolen from you on two occasions you cannot fail to realise that you have secret enemies, whose methods are as crafty as they are relentless. Those enemies may be nearer than you think. You may be perfectly certain, at any rate, that they are well acquainted with your movements, and are bent on discovering your secrets. Permit the writer to give you a piece of sound advice—do not relax your precautions for an hour, and when it comes to the critical moment of your work be as watchful and careful as if your workshop were surrounded by an army of spies. It is impossible to tell you in this letter how your enemies are reckoned on robbing you of your discovery. They have, the writer repeats, twice succeeded in stealing your plans; take care that the third time does not see them rob you of something much more valuable than they know. One more—be watchful, and be suspicious of even your so-called best friends."

Laurence put this communication in his pocket with a feeling of anger, surprise, and impatience all mingled together. Like all honest and straightforward men he abhorred anything in the shape of anonymous letters, and his first instinct as regards this was to tear it up, and throw the shreds into his waste-paper basket. But there was something in the letter which seemed to him to ring true; it was evidently written by some person who was acquainted with some undoubtedly true episodes in the history of his invention. Who could that person be?

And—most disturbing, perplexing, harassing thought—who could the unknown enemies be who worked, like moles, in the dark?

Laurence's temperament was destitute of desire to injure; to prove himself the deserving enemy of any human being was beyond him; he therefore could not understand how anyone could plot against him in order to rob him of his work. And yet there the plain facts were—he had twice during the past two years been successfully robbed of plans and diagrams. These things were undoubtedly stolen by some person or persons who desired to possess them. Who were they?

Leaving his breakfast untasted, Laurence walked up and down his sitting-room thinking. "Of course," he thought, "there were people who knew that I was always inventing something or other from boyhood. My father knew, and my mother; Francis Armadale knew, and so did some of the heads of department. Any one of them knew that I was during the last year or two I was at work on something uncommon. But who of all these people would want to steal my plans? They were all friends."

He drew the anonymous letter from his pocket again, and referred to one sentence in it—that which referred to his enemies being nearer than he thought. But who could there be amongst those who were near? Because, after all, there was no one so really near but Herman Groot.

The idea of suspecting Herman Groot was as impossible to Laurence as it would have been to suspect his father or mother. Poor, plodding, not-over-lively Groot, with whom he had worked side by side for so long, and for whom he had come to have something like affection. No, he could not doubt his assistant's good faith for a moment. Groot had never been brilliant; he was the sort of workman to whom one had to explain carefully exactly what he was to do, and who would then do it with unquestioning accuracy, but he was not a man of initiative, and Laurence doubted if he had it in his power to plan to form a scheme for robbing him of his ideas. Besides, what use could Groot make of them? No, he could not doubt Groot's honesty.

He made an attempt to eat some breakfast, and then hurried off to the workshop, later than he had been since the great invention commenced operations. Groot was there before him, leaning against the wall and smoking a big-bowled pipe. Groot had a habit of smoking as he walked up, concealed him the very incarnation of innocence. His big, placid face, with its calm blue eyes and great drooping moustache, was childlike in its candour.

Laurence, once inside the workshop, called Groot into the office. He drew from the mysterious letter from his pocket-book and opened it out on the desk at which Groot worked, greatly to his own delight, transacted whatever secretarial work there was to do.

"Look here, Groot," he said. "Read that."

Groot picked up the foolscap sheet, held it within six inches of his nose, and read it through without a tremor; a sigh of relief escaped from him as he laid it down, took off his clerk's cap, and scratched his head.

"That's queer!" he said. "Enemies, eh?"

"Of course, you remember that I had my plans stolen from me, Groot," answered Laurence.

"So you told me," answered Groot.

"That's queer, too."

"Well, there must be somebody who is after my work," said Laurence.

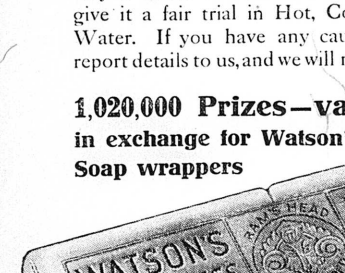
"It seems like it," replied Groot.

"You never see anybody about here, do you?" asked Laurence.

"Me?" said Groot. "No—never. How could they get in? You have the keys."

"Yes, of course. I mean hanging about."

"I never see anybody. I go straight home, and I come straight here," said Groot. "The hours are too long to let one idle about. I'm always in bed when we're off the river."



"Well, we can have a good rest then," said Laurence. "Now look here, Groot, I'm not going to leave this place now, day nor night, until I've finished. But to-night I've promised to dine with Sir John, so I shall want you to stay here on guard. I'll have a good supper sent in for you, and some cigars and beer, and you'll sleep all right on the camp-bed. After that, I'll stay here myself every night."

"All right," said Groot. "I'll stay."

So Groot took possession of the keys. When he went out for his dinner at noon he bought a large lump of wax, and at night, when he supped with great gusto, he amused himself by taking some very accurate impressions of the bits of steel which gave access to Laurence's workshop.

As for Laurence, hurrying home rather earlier than usual so that he might not be late at the Carlton, he came across Charity Wraye in the street, and walked along with her. A sudden idea prompted him to show her the anonymous letter.

"See," he said. "I've always felt that I could trust you in everything ever since I met you at Canterbury, and I want to trust you now—at least, I mean I want to give you a confidence. May I?"

"It is good of you to feel that you can," she said. "Is it anything I can help you in?"

For answer he put the sheet of foolscap into her hands. "Read that," he said.

She read the letter through with brows slightly contracted, and a manner that looked puzzled, and then handed it back to him.

"Can you think who sent that?" he asked.

"I?" she said. "No, I cannot. But—"

"Yes?" he said, seeing her hesitate. "You have been struck by something?"

"Yes," she replied. "The paper is exactly the same as a special paper that we use in the offices. I noticed the water-mark. But ours has an engraved heading."

"Ah! and now I notice something," said Laurence. "There has been a strip cut off from that."

"Yes, I noticed that, too," said Charity. "And I noticed something else."

"Yes," said Laurence, eagerly. "What is it?"

"That this has been typed on the same sort of machine that we use throughout the offices," she answered. "The whole place was equipped with them some time ago, and all the partners got some for their private houses as well."

Laurence considered matters. "Then it seems very probable that this letter was written by someone connected with the firm," he said. "Though, of course, there will be thousands of that particular type-writing machine in use, no doubt, in London alone."

"Yes," said Charity, "but I don't think any firm but ours uses this size and sort of paper. It was specially made for us—there's a tremendous stock of it in the store department."

"That seems proof positive that somebody connected with the firm did send this, then," said Laurence. "Please keep this to yourself; don't mention it to your brother—it might alarm him."

"Oh, no!" she said. "I—I hope you are in no danger."

"Personally? Oh, I'm not afraid of that," he answered, laughing. "Don't be alarmed. I shall have to hurry away now, or I shall be late."

He was conscious as he left her that she had shown some confusion when she expressed the hope that he was in no danger, and he began to question himself as to whether a feeling warmer than mere friendship was not beginning spring up between them.

"She's a dear girl!" he murmured. "And a good one. I'd rather spend the evening with her and Bickie than go to dine with these other people."

However, an hour later he was chatting and laughing gaily to Miss Delomosne, who, for the present moment, quite apart from those of her host, made herself very fascinating to Laurence. But not all her blandishments, nor the enticements of Sir Herbert, nor the worldly-wisdom advice of Sir John Bedford could stir Laurence from his determination not to spend the week-end on the river.

"After to-night," he said, "I won't leave my work night or day until it's complete. You see, I've had a warning."

And therewith he showed them the anonymous letter, carefully refraining from saying anything as to the conclusions Charity Wraye had come to about it. Before them he made light of it, and last none of them seemed to attach any great amount of importance to it soon dropped out as a subject of conversation, Sir Herbert having the final word it saying that he believed every inventor could show a trunk full of such documents if he had kept them.

But later on, as they were about to separate, Sir John contrived to get Miss Delomosne to himself in a palm-shaded alcove. He spoke to her with an anger which he had kept concealed and bottled up for the past hour or two.

"You wrote that letter!" he said. "You can't deny it."

Miss Delomosne faced him boldly. "Yes," she answered, "I did. Now you can perhaps recognise something. By sending him that letter I put myself against you, and I'll fight you to the very death if need be. You think I'm in your power, don't you? Well, I'm not! Not, do you hear? Go home and look in your secret drawer, Sir John!"

CHAPTER XX.

Sir John Bedford went away from the Carlton that night with mixed feelings surging and wandering in his mind. Miss Delomosne had more than once been of particular service and value to him because of her position as his senior partner's ward. Now that she had openly defied him he recognised that she would prove a formidable enemy. She was capable of anything—he knew that from considerable experience of her. More than once she was just one of those women to whom revenge is doubly sweet, and she had cause to care a good deal for her revenge on him. The fortune of life had placed her in his power, and he had used that power as a means to his own ends. Now that she was out of his power, or believed herself to be, she would turn on him like a tigress. But—was she?

"Confound it!" he said to himself as he walked down Whitehall on his way from Pall Mall to Westminster, "there's only one way in which she could have regained her freedom, and that's by getting the letters. Look in my secret drawer indeed! I'd like to see anybody get into that! And yet she spoke positively and sneeringly. There's something wrong—what is it?" Then a sudden thought struck him and brought him to a sharp pause. "By Heaven!" he said. "That scoundrel Shepheard! Can it be possible?"

He was so anxious to know the absolute truth that he entered the next hansom that he hailed a passing hansom, and bade the driver go as fast as possible to Queen Anne's Mansions. Within a few minutes he was in his own flat, had sent the valet whom he had engaged after Shepheard's flight to bed, locked himself in his study, and thrown off his overcoat.

"Now we'll soon see," he said, and went over to a small but heavily-fashioned escritoire which stood in an alcove in one corner of the room. "If Mr. Shepheard really did make a way into this he's cleverer than I took him for—much cleverer. And I can find out no one but him."

He took off his dinner-jacket and, turning up the cuffs of his shirt, pulled the escritoire out of the alcove. Made of old Spanish mahogany and liberally draped and ornamented with brasswork it was by no means easy to move, but he drew it under the truest possible light, and unlocked the drawer. Out of the heavy lid with a curiously-shaped key which he took from his pocket-book. Lifting some papers from the cavity within he touched a secret spring in the side. A panel slid back with a sharp click and revealed an opening. Another touch of another spring, and a drawer appeared—empty.

"Ah!" he exclaimed. "As I thought! Shepheard! But how did he manage it? I'll swear he never had the key."

He began to search about the desk, endeavouring to find out by what means it had been opened. There were no marks upon it that he could detect—not a scratch disfigured the fine satiny polish of its surface. He turned up an exceptionally powerful reading-lamp and examined the various joinings; and at last he saw that the escritoire had been entered from behind by carefully taking out a panel, which had just as carefully been replaced. Sir John locked the escritoire up again, restored it to its place, and sat on his dinner-jacket. Going back to the dining-room he mixed himself a whisky-and-soda and lighted a cigar. With one in his hand and the other between his lips, he walked up and down the room, thinking. Half an hour later, having finished his cigar in an easy-chair, he drank a night-cap of whisky and went to bed. According to his usual habit he dismissed the affairs of the day as soon as he bolted his bedroom door.

But Sir John's mind was wide enough awake next morning when he entered his dining-room for breakfast. From the moment he had opened his eyes his mind had been steadily and busily exercising itself as to the solution of several problems which the present situation necessitated consideration of. The newspapers of that morning lay neatly arranged on a side-table; he picked one up, and, still thinking over a plan of action, ran his eyes mechanically along the columns. Without paying any particular attention to anything they suddenly struck on a name, the sight of which made him start, just as if had made Shepheard start in that very room some days before.

"The convict, Edward Penrose, who effected his escape from Dartmoor more than a week ago, has so far successfully baffled all attempts at recapture. Although every effort has been made to ascertain his whereabouts he has completely disappeared, and the authorities believe that he is safely hidden in London, from whence he will doubtless endeavour to cross to the Continent. It will be remembered that Penrose, a man of great ability and of impressive personality, was sentenced three years ago to a long term of penal servitude for forgery, the victim of his crime being the well-known engineers, Messrs. Armadale, Limited. A sad feature of the case was that Penrose was a protegé of Sir Herbert Armadale, the senior partner, and had been educated and practically adopted by that gentleman. At the time of the forgery Penrose was the chief clerk in the financial department of the firm. It will further be remembered that, in spite of very clear evidence against him, he vehemently protested his innocence."

Sir John read this paragraph carefully over, and threw the newspaper back amongst the rest.

"So that's why Shepheard went off so quickly!" he thought. "Well, I don't wonder. After even three years of it Penrose will have worked himself up to a sufficient pitch of cool daring to deliver a bold stroke the first time if they ever do meet. I remember the look he gave him as he walked out of the dock! I"

He broke off, and, with his usual good appetite, and at exactly half-past nine got into his motor-car. But instead of driving direct to the works he bade his man go to a certain department at Scotland Yard. Here Sir John sent in his card, with a request for an interview with a famous detective-inspector, who immediately sent down an invitation to join him in his office.

"I see," said Sir John, plunging at once into the matter which had brought him there —"I see that Edward Penrose has got away from Dartmoor."

"Yes," answered the inspector. "That's so, Sir John. He's got clear away—been away nine—or perhaps ten—days."

"And they say in the papers that it's thought he's got to London and is hidden here. Is that possible?"

The inspector shrugged his shoulders, and smiled. "Possible—yes," he replied. "Quite possible if he could get away from immediate pursuit and procure clothes and money. He may have had an accomplice."

"But—why London, where he was known?" asked Sir John.

The inspector smiled more cracularly than ever. "London is a big place, Sir John," he answered. "Of course, Penrose was not a criminal of the habitual class—if he had been he'd have made for some of the haunts we know, in the quarters we know. As it is, if he's got funds and clothes he could put up at a good hotel with impunity, and from there make his way to the Continent."

"But surely he'd be recognised here?"

"Might be—might be! It's a sporting chance. So far as I remember him—he'd the barrister, or doctor, or actor type of clean-shaven," said the inspector. "Well dressed and groomed, he might pass a few days in London easily enough. It's a question of his means."

"You remember all the circumstances of the case?" said Sir John.

"Oh, yes, very well," replied the inspector. "Especially the evidence of Shephard?" asked Sir John.

"That's the case. That settled Penrose altogether," answered the inspector. "Let me see, wasn't Shepheard a sort of servant to him?"

"No," replied Sir John. "Shepheard was employed as a species of messenger, footman, run-about man in our offices. Penrose used his services a good deal—Shepheard had been an under-footman at Sir Herbert Armadale's. Well, I should think Penrose was very much after the Penrose affair—he was, I could see, sharp, keen, alert, and I wanted such a man."

"I see."

"Nine days ago," continued Sir John, "Shepheard disappeared from my flat with most amazing quickness. I was quite at a loss to account for it, for he was not only a model servant, but evidently well pleased with his work and place. Went off like a shot! I left him in the flat one evening when I went out to my club, and never saw him again."

"Nine days ago," mused the inspector. "Ah! I understand. He'd heard of Penrose's escape. Do you want him back, Sir John? Did he take anything?"

"He didn't take anything with him," replied Sir John, "and it wasn't until last night that I found that he'd abstracted some papers of mine. However, I know where they got to, and I might as well say for the moon as try to get them back."

But you might as well have Shepheard's description, I've a good idea that he's in France, where he'll probably be found running a small hotel or restaurant in company with a French-woman whom he knew here."

Then, having described Mr. Shepheard and Madame-elle Jeanne, Sir John descended to his motor-car; instead of going towards the south-east he made his man turn to the south-west, and bade him drive to Twickenham.

At Sir Herbert Armadale's house he asked for Miss Delomosne. She was in no wise surprised to receive his message, for she had felt sure ever since the previous night that he would not be long before he called on her. She went down and found him in the morning-room. No greeting passed between them; she merely entered the room, closed the door, and faced him.

"Well!" she said, not without some trace of bitterness and contempt in her voice.

Sir John slowly drew off his gloves. "Look here, Lilian——" he began.

Miss Delomosne stepped him with a frown and a gesture. "No!" she said. "Say what you have to say, and say it as plainly as you like; but don't use my name."

"There was a time when you didn't mind my using it," he said, with a sneer. "However, a mere name's nothing. I want to know what you're going to do."

"Do!"

"Don't let's beat about the bush. You wrote that anonymous letter to Workman!"

"Well, supposing I did!"

"I know you did. Nobody else could have done. Nobody else knew. Now then, as you know so much you shall know more. Either as far of us in at this—prime movers, at any rate, with two or three cat's-paws who can be paid—and we mean to have the lion's share of Workman's one way or the other. Now, you're not rich beyond the dreams of avarice, Lilian—oh, very well, if you like it better—and I can assure you that Sir Herbert is by no means as well off as he was. The firm's done badly these last few years. He'll not leave you what he could have done some years ago. And so——"

"What do you wish to say to me?" she demanded.

"I wish to say—come in with us at this; come in, and have your share."

Miss Delomosne regarded him steadily for a full minute. "Who are you—who are the four?" she inquired.

Sir John frowned at this question. "Oh, well," he said, "I'm in for a quarter, for a pound, I suppose now. Well, there's myself; there's Francis Armadale—the original idea came from him—Bedford, who is awfully hot water through gambling, and he knows there's a perfect gold mine in this young Workman—then there's a fourth, a certain man of French scientist and inventor; and Monsieur Jiremond."

"What—a clergyman—a priest?" she exclaimed.

"Bah! Bremond is no more clergyman or priest than I am," said Sir John. "He's a Belgian speculator, and it suits him and us to have Workman in that way when he comes here—that's all."

"Let me see," she said. "I think you first introduced Mr. Shepheard to Sir Herbert."

"Of course I did—who else!" he answered.

She still continued to regard him steadily. "An outside gang," she said. "Well, and what is my part to be?"

Sir John sat down on the edge of the table and folded his arms across his knees. "There's no doubt," he said, thoughtfully, "that you can do more than anyone else to young Workman. It's my belief he's in love with you—if he isn't, you can make him so. I was watching him last night—it only needs opportunity. Now, why can't you persuade him that, after all, there's great risks about the invention, and that though he may fancy he's going to get a colossal fortune out of this it may be a fiasco. Persuade him that it's not worth while to run any risk, once of it to a company who would give him a handsome price for it. Tell him of the fate of heaps of inventors who thought they were going to be as rich as Dives, and died as poor as Lazarus. Tell him that a bird in the hand is worth two in the bush, and that we understand in good hard cash is worth lots more than hypothetical millions. I should have thought you'd have enough to know how to get round a man."

"I'm clever enough," she said, "to know all there is to know about the proposal. My answer is—No!"

Sir John picked up his gloves and began to put them on. "You rely on your recovery of your letters?" he said.

"I rely on the fact that I am no longer in your power," she thought.

Sir John picked up his hat and gazed on its glossiness. "Oh!" he said. "Well, I'm not quite sure as to that. There's a little piece of news in the papers this morning which may interest you. See here."

He picked up a newspaper and, after turning it over a little, pointed to a paragraph similar to that which had struck Sir John's attention. He watched her as she read it, and saw her face turn pale and her lips compress themselves.

"Not pleasant news, is it?" he said, meaningly.

Miss Delomosne made a weary gesture in laying the paper down. "I don't care," she said. "I'm tired of all of it. I gave you my answer, and I repeat it. You've used me, and treated me abominably and most cruelly. Come what may, I've resolved I will not be your cat's-paw any more. I will not help you."

With that she turned away and left hi

ROTHWELL DISTRICT EDUCATION COMMITTEE.

FLOWER GARDEN AT ROBIN HOOD.

REFUSAL TO ERECT WIRE NETTING.

The monthly meeting of the Rothwell and District Education Committee, was held in the Robin Hood Council School on Friday night—Mr W. Lunn (vice-chairman) presiding. The other members present were: Mr S. K. Chadwick, Mr J. Hirst, Mr P. Thomas, Mr J. Dobson, Mr J. Horner, Mr R. McCullough, Mr. H. Walton, with the Clerk (Mr A. Angus), and the attendance officer (Mr W. Steel).

The headmaster of the Robin Hood School wrote asking for a supply of wire netting for the purpose of putting round the garden in the centre of the playground, as the infants plucked the flowers.

Mr Lunn said he objected to the netting being supplied, as the children ought to be trained to desist plucking the flowers. They did not find the flower beds in the public parks noted off, and no one thought of plucking the flowers.

The Clerk said it was the duty of the teachers to keep the children's fingers off.

Mr Lunn added that when a child knew what to do it also knew what not to do.

Mr Hirst said that when a child knew what to do did it always do it? He agreed with Mr Lunn's remarks.

Mr Chadwick also spoke against the idea of netting the garden in, as he said, it would spoil the whole appearance.

It was decided to refuse the application.

The Clerk read a letter from the headteacher of the Scarrhouse School, regretting that the class for children under five was full and asking that they might stop admitting children under this age.

The Clerk said he had written to the headteacher saying that he did not think the committee would agree to this course being adopted, but suggesting that in order to reduce the number of the children in the lower classes he moved up.

The Clerk's action in the matter was upheld.

It was reported that the caretaker of the Middleton School had had his salary raised, as recommended, from £23 to £30.

Reports of visits of one of His Majesty's Inspectors to the Robin Hood, Rothwell Council (mixed department), and Carlton Schools were received and considered highly satisfactory.

The attendance returns for the district for December showed a percentage of 88.57 as compared with 86.88 in the previous month. The returns for the various schools were as follows:—Rothwell Council (mixed) 90.33; Rothwell Council infants, over five 88.65, and under five 82.42; Stourton Council (mixed) 90.92; Stourton Council, infants, over five 89.5, and under five 83.76; Robin Hood Council (mixed), 95.85; Robin Hood Council, infants, over five 89.58, and under five 88.88; Carlton Council (mixed), 83.05; Carlton Council, infants, over five 73.41, and under five 71.05; Thorp Council (mixed), 90.29; Thorpe Council (infants), over five 79.16, and under five 73.33; Wood Lane (Rothwell Heigh), infants, over five, 91.07, and under five, 80; Rothwell National (mixed), 89.62; Rothwell National (infants), over five, 92.7, and under five, 60.81; Lotthouse National (mixed), 93.01; Lotthouse National (infants), over five, 90.9, and under five, 89.47; Middleton (mixed), 94.29; Middleton (infants), over five 91.3, and under five 85.71.

A FRYSTON SENSATION.

HEARTLESS NEPHEW'S FRAUD.

A remarkable story of deception and fraud was told at the Pontefract West Riding Police Court on Saturday, when the charge was proceeded with against Ralph Nugent Harvey, age 22, an electrical engineer, of Bradford, of obtaining £1,180 by false pretences from his uncle, Mr Oliver Smith, of 14, Sunbeam Avenue, Beeston Hill, Leeds.

Mr W. L. Scarlett Hutton, who appeared for the prosecution, explained that Mr Smith was until last August a travelling draper and clothier, residing at Fryston, near Castleford. He traded entirely with the poorer working-class people, and did not move amongst persons of the education that prisoner possessed. The total sum obtained from Mr Smith by prisoner was £1,205, in addition to a valuable gold watch. On June 2nd last the prisoner arrived at Fryston in a motor-car, with a chauffeur in livery. He told his uncle that the car belonged to a Scottish millionaire of the name of Gregory Andrew Macmillan, who resided at "The Chase, in Scotland," and who was a shareholder in the Cunard and Wilson Steamship Lines. He added that he was in partnership with "Mac," as he called the imaginary millionaire, and, although ordinary people could not invest their money in the Cunard and Wilson Lines, Mr Macmillan was willing for his prisoner's uncles and aunts do so, and they would make at least 20 per cent. On that occasion, the prosecutor handed over £100. The prisoner's aunt again handed over £100. The prisoner came again the following day. "I have come for all the money you can give me." Mr Smith asked what Macmillan had said about the £100, and the prisoner replied that he said that Mr Smith should let him have all the money he could. In consequence five or six further sums varying from £10 to £30 were handed over to prisoner by his uncle. Next prisoner urged Mr Smith to sell his property, and that was duly done. £1,750 being received for it. The net proceeds, amounting to £1050, were subsequently handed over to the prisoner. This included a £300 bank note, which the same day was paid in by the prisoner for a motor car to a Bradford dealer.

In regard to the gold watch, Mr Burton said that after the prisoner had taken a fancy to it he appeared one day and told Mr Smith that Mac, whom he was to meet at Hull that day on shipping business, had given him the gold watch and chain. Shortly after, and it had since been found that prisoner had pawned it in Leeds. Mr Smith had practically lost all his savings, and would have to start business again. All the money obtained by the prisoner had gone. He had spent large sums on hiring taxi-cabs, and £532 in purchasing a motor-car. He had also paid £32 10s. for a cup, which he had presented to the Yorkshire Dragoons in Bradford, and he had bought a considerable quantity of jewellery for a Bradford young lady. Miss Ida Jowett, of Bradford, to whom he had said his father broke off the engagement. A watch, gold bangle, two gold rings, and other jewellery had been recovered. Prisoner had also engaged a chauffeur, to whom he paid 30s. a week at first, and afterwards £2 so long as the money lasted. Then the prisoner sold the car in London for £300.

Mr Smith, in the witness-box, said the prisoner's parents had been in no badly duped as he had, and it was they who first mentioned the matter to him. He believed, however, that they had acted quite innocently.

The prisoner pleaded guilty.

Mr WM Bewley, for the defence, said the case was so extraordinary that if a similar story had been told in a novel it would have been characterised as impossible. The prisoner had told him that he had had an inordinate desire to have a motor-engine or a motor-car of his own. He had also been an omnivorous reader, and he had hit on this method of satisfying his desire. He had first duped his parents, and obtained all their money, about £1000.

The Chairman (Mr W. F. Tempest) remarked that there could be no excuse for what was robbery and nothing else, and prisoner would have to go to gaol for six months with hard labour.

OULTON DISTRICT EDUCATION COMMITTEE

SCHOOLS TURNED INTO NURSERIES.

The monthly meeting of the Oulton and District Education Committee was held in the committee room of the Young Men's Christian Association, Oulton Place, Leeds, on Tuesday night —Mr P. S. Marsden presiding. Other members present were Mr B. Wood Higgins, Mr G. M. Abbey, Mr H. E. Cairns, Mr S. H. Young, Mr J. H. Tomlinson, Mr J. W. Ridyard, Mr J. P. Allison and Mr T. H. Myton, with the Clerk (Mr H. W. Poxell).

Reports on visits of one of H.M. Inspectors to Holton and Oulton St. John's Church Schools were received and considered satisfactory. In the report of Oulton St. John's School, the inspector commented upon the overcrowding of the school space among the younger children, especially in regard to the children of three years of age.

Mr Ridyard said he agreed with the inspector with regard to children of three. It was simply making a nursery of the school, and parents were getting the children off their hands at the expense of the ratepayers.

The Clerk said they could not exclude children under five unless there was no room.

It was reported that the addition of several new desks to the Woodhuford School will dispense with some thirteen old desks of the long type. The question arose as to whether or not these old desks could be sold for "scrap." It was suggested that some recreation club might come along and buy the desks.

With regard to the resolution moved by Mr Young at last meeting in regard to the periodical revision of head teachers' salaries, the Clerk reported that he had forwarded the resolution to the West Riding Education Committee, who had replied that the matter was receiving their attention.

This was considered satisfactory.

The attendance returns for the division showed that for December the percentage was 89.06 as compared with 86.81 in 1912. In the Garforth district the attendance was 91.16 as compared with 85.06. Oulton showed a decrease, the figures being 86.65 as against 87.33. Sherburn was up with a percentage of 91.18 as compared with 89.03. Kippax had a percentage of 87.9 as against 86.14.

SEQUEL TO A SALE OF PIGS AT BARWICK-IN-ELMET.

CHARGE AGAINST A TADCASTER MAN.

On Monday at Tadcaster Petty Sessions Charles Bateson, described as a labourer, of Tadcaster, was charged with the embezzlement of £3 8s., the moneys of his employer, Mr John W. Southron, pig dealer, of Tadcaster.

Inspector Daniels, in opening the case, said the offence occurred on Jan. 13th. Prisoner was sent by his employer with four pigs to Barwick, and those he sold to Mr Baxter, who paid him £3 8s. He returned to Tadcaster, but instead of handing over the money to Mr Southron, he absconded, and a warrant was taken out for his arrest.

John William Southron, pig dealer, of York Road, Tadcaster, said that prisoner had been in his employment for about three months. On Thursday, the 15th inst., he instructed him to take four pigs to the William IV. Inn, Barwick, and he would be paid 17s. each for them if they suited, but if they did not suit he was to bring them back.

Inspector Daniels: What person did you instruct him to see?—Witness: Mr William Baxter, the proprietor of the inn.

Did you see prisoner again that day?—Yes, about 11-45, and he had on pigs with him.

Did you speak to him?—Yes, I told him I would see him in the yard at 12-30.

Did you go to the yard?—Yes, but he was not there.

Did he say anything as to having sold the pigs?—Yes, and he said the man was highly satisfied with them.

Did he say whether he had received payment for the pigs or not?—No.

Witness stated that at 4-30 he heard that Bateson was still in the inn, and he made inquiries and took out a warrant for his arrest.

Supt. Daniels: Had he any business at Wetherby for you?—Yes, on Friday.

Prisoner asked what had happened on previous occasions when he had got money for him.

Witness: You have given it to me.

Prisoner: I have been handling the money and would I have taken a small sum, when I could have gone away with close on £30.

Witness: You were not there at 12-30.

William Baxter, landlord of the William IV. Inn, Barwick-in-Elmet, said that on the 15th prisoner brought four pigs to him from Mr Southron, of Tadcaster, and he paid him £3 8s. for them. The money was to be handed over by Bateson to the prosecutor.

P.C. Bell, of Spofforth, said that on Thursday, the 15th, from something that was told him, he arrested prisoner at Wetherby Railway Station, and charged him with stealing the money. He replied "I am quite aware of that." He searched him and found a ticket from Wetherby to Tadcaster, of that date, and £3 8s. 2d. When he charged him at Tadcaster next day with the offence he made no reply.

Prisoner was ordered to say that he had handed the money to Southron when he saw him at 11-45, and Southron was recalled.

The Chairman (Mr J. M. Dawson): Was any money offered to you?—Witness: I did not see any money.

Was it offered to you?—He asked me if I wanted it, and I told him I would see him at 12-30.

The Clerk: What did he actually say?—Witness: He told me the man was highly satisfied with the pigs.

Did he offer you any money?—No, sir, I never mentioned money to him.

Prisoner: Did I ask you if you wanted the money?

Southron: I did not hear you.

Prisoner: A few minutes ago you said I asked you if you wanted any money, and now you say you did not hear me.

On being formally charged, prisoner had nothing to say. He was committed for trial at the Quarter Sessions on March 9th.

A second charge was not proceeded with.

CORONER AND A WOODLESFORD MAN.

WOMAN'S DEATH—CORONER AND HUSBAND.

WHY WAS NO DOCTOR CALLED IN?

An inquest held at Oulton on Friday upon a married woman named Kate Dennison, the wife of a brewery employee, living at Appleton Wood-hall, who died suddenly on the morning previous Tuesday, the Coroner (Mr P. P. Maitland), made severe comment upon the action of the husband in not calling in a doctor.

A December 13th deceased, who was 42 years of age, gave birth to a stillborn child, and was attended by a midwife only. About a fortnight ago she took to her bed with severe pains in the left leg, but no doctor was called in, and she remained unattended medically until death.

The daughter of the deceased, Miss Annie Durham, Woodlesford, deposed as to the birth of the child, and said her mother was attended by a midwife, but there was no doctor.

The Coroner: Why didn't they get a doctor?

Witness: Because she did not want one.

The Coroner: She ought to have had one. You should not have asked her.

Witness said her mother did not appear to regain strength and about a fortnight ago she had to go to bed with pains in the left leg which was swollen. No doctor was called in for this.

The Coroner: I cannot understand you going on without getting a doctor.

Witness: She did not complain of the pains after she had been in bed a few days. She would not hear of a doctor visiting her.

The Coroner: It was your father's duty to get a doctor and not to let her die like this. I am not blaming you, but your father ought to be here, so that I could talk to him.

Witness: He goes out about six in the morning and does not get back until late.

The Coroner: He could have sent a doctor.

The witness said her mother died quite suddenly on Tuesday afternoon. She appeared to be well during the morning.

Answering a question put to her by Dr. Saville, witness said her mother was short o breath.

The Coroner said that it was all the more reason why a doctor should have been in attendance.

Eliza Hulme, a certified midwife, stated that she attended deceased at her confinement. She left her quite well.

Dr. Saville gave evidence, and said he was called in after death had taken place. He had in accordance with the Coroner's instructions held a post-mortem examination, and found the heart to be fatty. Death was due to heart failure accelerated in a degree by exhaustion of the confinement. He added that he could not have saved the woman's life.

The Coroner, in summing up, said it would have been more sensible to have obtained a doctor, and the husband ought to have been present to explain. Even if the doctor could not have saved her life it would have shown that he had done something.

A verdict in accordance with the medical evidence was returned, the Coroner remarking that he was of the opinion that it was a case of neglect on the part of the husband in not calling in a doctor.

Upon enquiring of the police sergeant Mr Maitland was told that the husband of the deceased was a respectable man.

CROSSGATES LITERARY SOCIETY.

LECTURE BY MR H. CROWTHER, F.R.M.S.

In connection with the Crossgates Literary Society a lecture on "Daily life in Pompeii" was delivered by Mr H. Crowther, F.R.M.S., of Wetherby, at the Schoolroom on Monday night. Mr E. Hawkesworth (President) was in the chair, and there was a very large audience.

The President, in introducing Mr Crowther, referred to the wonderful lectures he had given to both grown-up people and children in Leeds, and stated they after the lecture Mr Crowther gave them last winter it was not surprising that exceptional interest should be displayed in his present visit. The Crossgates Society had been privileged that session in having lectures on different parts of the world by men who had been there, and they were fortunate in having such another lecture, because Mr Crowther had been at Pompeii within the last few months.

Mr Crowther said that in the past no place was so wicked as Pompeii, and it had been said that the best thing that could have happened to it was to have been wiped out by volcanic eruption. Why, then, did they display so much interest in it. It was not a big place, for it was only about a mile square, and there were only ruins to see. They knew something about its history and the origin of its name, and it was rather at one time for its wines. Certain things they associated in connection with its history as taught at school, and one thing was that it was a dead city. They had a longing to go there, and when they had been they wanted to go again. Another thing that they think so much about Pompeii? Because they were able to bridge 2,000 years and get back among the people and realise what they were then. There was no exaggeration. The first was in 63 A.D., and the second in 79, the latter occurring in it.

He then proceeded by means of excellent photographs thrown on the screen to describe the city, part of which had been excavated. The Forum, market place, temples, streets, shops, baths, theatres, houses, etc., were shown, and by means of the artistic drawings and the pictures on the walls of houses it was possible to know something of the daily life of the people. Their customs, amusements, administration, industries were described in very interesting manner, and it was proved that in some things comparatively little advance had been made since Pompeii was destroyed.

A vote of thanks to Mr Crowther, described the lecture as profoundly interesting and highly instructive, and, like a Dickens' character, he asked for more.

Mr Armistead, in seconding, was equally appreciative, and the President described the lecture as about the most wonderful in the history of the Society.

The vote was very cordially passed, and Mr Crowther said it was always a pleasure to address such an appreciative audience.

Mr H. Johnson manipulated the lantern, and he was thanked for his services on the call of the President.

OULTON AND WOODLESFORD AFFAIRS

HOUSING—WOODLESFORD STATION—RECREATION GROUND.

A meeting of the Oulton-with-Woodlesford Parish Council was held in the Horold Hall, Oulton, on Tuesday night—the Chairman (Mr W. Pindar) presiding. Other members present were Mr. W. Higgins, Mr G. M. Abbey, Mr H. Parkin, Mr T. H. Myton, Mr T. Hurdus, Mr F. Owen, Mr W. Smith, Mr E. A. Raynor, with the Clerk (Mr T. A. Coope).

A precept for £10 was issued to the overseers.

Mr Myton moved that the attention of the Hunslet Rural District Council be called to the dangerous condition of Fleet Lane, Oulton, caused by a number of flagstones being left about.

It appears that the Gas Co. at Rothwell have been repairing some pipes, and the flagstones had not been replaced.

Mr Myton contended that these were left in a very careless and dangerous manner.

The resolution was seconded by Mr Raynor and agreed to.

Mr Myton also moved a resolution that the Rural District Council be asked to inquire into the irregular manner in which the ashpits were emptied. In Woodlesford, he said, there had been several cases of scarlet fever, and could they wonder? The ashpits were choked up and the stench was abominable.

This was also passed.

The housing problem in the district was mentioned by Mr Myton, who said it was time the Council tackled the question, as Messrs Briggs had evidently shelved the matter. They ought to let the ratepayers see that they were doing something for them. He moved that it be placed upon the agenda for the next meeting. This was agreed to.

The question of a recreation ground for Woodlesford was also placed upon the agenda for the next meeting, on the motion of Mr Myton.

Mr Myton moved that a memorial be addressed to the Midland Railway Co. about the level crossing at the station.

Mr Higgins said he had brought up the matter some years ago, when he was chairman, but nothing had been done in the matter. He had himself seen a man killed at the crossing.

Mr Myton said that since then the traffic, both of goods and passenger, had doubled.

Mr Higgins: More than that.

Mr Parkin: You would grumble at having to climb steps.

Mr Higgins: Have a subway.

Mr Myton said if it had not been for the vigilance of the stationmaster and the porters there would have been more killed. He moved that this matter be placed on the agenda for the next meeting.

Mr Higgins said that while they were at it they ought to ask the Midland Railway Co. to extend the platform.

The matter will accordingly be placed upon the agenda.

The next meeting of the Council will be held on March 17th at Woodlesford.

AN "AT HOME" AT TEMPLE-NEWSAM

WAIFS AND STRAYS SOCIETY.

Lady Dorothy Wood was "At Home" at Temple-Newsam on Friday, when a number of ladies and gentlemen from Leeds and district were present for the purpose of hearing several addresses on the work of the Church of England Waifs and Strays Society. The Hon. Edward Wood, M.P., presided over the gathering, and others present were the Rev. C. V. R. Scott, chief organising secretary of the Society; Lieut.-Col. W. Beresford-Peirse, diocesan secretary; the Rev. L. E. J. Conway, organising secretary for the diocese; and the Rev. B. Guyer, vicar of Whitkirk. Illustrating the work carried on by the Society, there was offered for sale a number of fancy articles at the St. Chad's Home, Far Headingley.

The Hon. Edward Wood, M.P., said he did not think anybody could study the reports of the Waifs and Strays Society long without the fact that the supreme testimonial of its work was the extraordinarily large percentage of successful cases and of work crowned with success in proportion to the total number of cases that had passed through the Society's hands. It was something like 85 per cent, and all would agree that that was a remarkably good result to have achieved. (Hear, hear.) A great deal was heard in these days of the extension in many departments of the activities of an all-pervading State. Some people might think that the State would supplant and replace almost all voluntary effort as we know it to-day; for his own part, he felt strongly that when the State stepped in to help and reinforce individual effort it was the best thing to do, and where the State supplanted voluntary effort it was almost in every case a step in a retrograde direction. The work of them was always being tested by the world, and there were constantly coming along the path of usefulness things that were as old as years if it had so well trodden. (Applause).

Details of the work accomplished by the Ripon Diocesan Waifs and Strays Society were given by Lieutenant-Colonel W. Beresford-Peirse, who said that the branch now had under its immediate care some 170 children distributed among the six homes in the district. They received valuable help from sympathisers, and their subscriptions during the past year had increased since the previous year. The Society, however, always wanted more help to aid it in the great work it was carrying on, and he appealed to all present to support it to their utmost extent.

The Rev. C. V. R. Scott expressed the thanks of the Society for the welcome extended by Lady Wood and the Hon. Edward Wood that day. The Church of England Waifs and Strays Society was doing an enormous work, but the results by no means represented all that ought to be done. He did not think they would get such a percentage of good results unless they had as the basis of their work the Christian religion. By means of that they touched the root of the whole question. How were they going to eradicate the evil planted in the children's minds unless they built up character upon religion? They had not begun their work unless they took as their foundation a religious teaching and religious practice. Therein lay the strength of the Waifs and Strays Society's work.

The Rev. L. E. J. Conway also discussed the work of the Society, and urged its claims upon those present.

A native of Horsham (Surrey), who is fifty-six years of age, has not once crossed the Thames, which is only a mile and a half away from his home.

A middle-aged man named Kershaw, who was staying with his parents at Eastbourne, was found dead in his bed strangled by the cord of his pyjamas.

SUICIDE OF FORMER TADCASTER UNION OFFICIAL.

EX-MATRON OF BILBROUGH HOME.

The body of Lily Hinde (33), a single woman, was on Monday found floating in the lake at the South Park, Darlington, by Mr T. Morrison, son of Mr M. Morrison, park superintendent. The woman had been missing from home since January 11th.

An inquest was subsequently held, when the deceased's brother, Albert Hinde, a grocer, of Cumberland Street, said that she was formerly matron of the Bilbrough Cottage Home, in connection with the Tadcaster Union. She had been staying with him for a week, having left her position through illness. She had been much depressed, and on the 11th inst. went out for a walk, and nothing was heard of her until her body was found in the South Park lake.

Further evidence showed that she deceased had been mentally troubled, and the jury returned a verdict of "Suicide whilst temporarily insane."

TADCASTER GUARDIANS AND DISTRICT COUNCIL

COMPLAINTS FROM KIPPAX AND ALLERTON.

SHERBURN AND MILFORD AFFAIRS.

On Monday the fortnightly meeting of Tadcaster Board of Guardians was held at Tadcaster—Mr E. Parkin, J.P. (Kippax), in the chair. Other members present were Miss Bethell (Newton Kyme), Rev. Canon Greenwood (Grimston), Messrs W. Simpson (Lead), T. P. Fawcett (Austhorp), J. Wedgwood and E. H. Lowe (Preston), J. G. Linnicker (Micklefield), G. Webster (Huddleston-cum-Lumby), W. Y. K. Young (Monk Fryston), E. Midgley (Colton), J. Ludley (Kirkby Wharfe), F. Myers (Bilbrough), T. Hey and J. E. Cawthorne (Sherburn), R. Wright (Barwick), J. Y. Wheatley (Appleton Roebuck), W. Sykes, J. H. Ingleby, J.P., and J. Nettleton (Tadcaster), Robinson, F. Phillips, and Pearson (Allerton Bywater), W. A. Dickenson and J. Harding (Kippax), W. B. Gray (Church Fenton), W. Crosland J.P. (South Milford), and J. Pick (Ulleskelf), with the Clerk (Mr G. A. Bromet), the surveyor (Mr Scott), and the sanitary inspectors (Messrs Driver and Wood).

The treasurer to the Board was reported to have a balance of £2,394 in hand.

THE HOUSE.

The master's report showed that during the fortnight there had been four admissions to the workhouse and one discharge, and the inmates numbered 89, while there were 19 in the children's home—108 against 113 at the corresponding date of last year.

The thanks of the Board were given to Allerton Bywater Working Men's Club for a gift of magazines to the inmates.

Mr Cawthorne read the minutes of the Finance Committee, but he had nothing special to report.

Mr Wright said that some correspondence had taken place between the Local Government Board and the Guardians respecting the treasurer, and he asked if there was any further information.

Mr Cawthorne said there was not.

The Chairman: There's nothing to report.

The Boarded-Out Children's Committee had a meeting, and the minutes showed that the lady visitors' report was submitted, and it was considered satisfactory.

A letter was received from the Local Government Board approving the increase of salary to Miss Owens, nurse.

DISTRICT COUNCIL.

The District Council treasurer was reported to have a balance of £3,900 8s. 8d. in hand.

At a meeting of the Highways Committee the Oxton Lane improvement was again discussed, and it was adjourned.

In regard to the Sherburn Cross improvement, it was resolved to ask the owner of the land adjoining for terms.

A letter was read from the county surveyor stating that the County Council were prepared to receive applications for surface dressing, and for roads. The surveyor was instructed to make the usual application.

Messrs Myers and Ludley were instructed to examine the new sewer ploughs on Selby Road.

A complaint of the condition of a road and also of a culvert being blocked. The Clerk was instructed to write to the owner of the cottage to have the culvert cleaned out.

The minutes were approved.

SANITARY AND BUILDING.

The medical officer of health reported that during the month there had been one case of enteric fever, five cases of diphtheria, and three of scarlet fever notified.

A complaint was received from the inspector anent the scavenging of Allerton Bywater proper and Kippax (south), and the Clerk was instructed to write to the contractors and state that if the work is not done to the satisfaction of the inspector he will have it done and charge them with the cost.

Fourteen days are to be allowed a Kippax owner to provide privy and ashpit accommodation at his property.

Plans for a malt grinding room by John Smith's, Tadcaster, were passed.

Plans for the erection by Messrs Thompson of four houses in Kirkgate, Sherburn, were approved.

The N.E.R. submitted plans of twelve houses, to be erected at Low School, South Milford, and for a stationmaster's house at Sherburn, and they were passed.

With regard to a water supply to the proposed 12 cottages at South Milford, it was decided to reply that water cannot be supplied for building purposes.

It was reported that the sewer outfall tanks and dykes at Barkston require cleaning, and the Inspector was instructed to have the work done.

A letter was received from the County Council anent the financial adjustment between the Council and Gortorth on the water question. It was stated, generally, that Gortorth had been awarded £200. It was decided that the money be paid in due course.

In regard to Sherburn sewage easements, a letter was read from Mr Foster offering to accept £26 ros. It was decided to reply that the Council cannot increase their offer of £23.

A letter was read from Kippax Parish Council complaining as to the way the scavenging contractor for the south side of the parish did his work. The Clerk was instructed to reply that the matter was having attention.

It was reported that the irrigation area of South Milford sewage works requires ploughing, and the inspector is to obtain prices.

In regard to Kippax sewerage, plans of the proposed scheme, as prepared by Messrs Balfour and Son, the engineers, were submitted, and the sub-committee reported that they had gone thoroughly into them and approved of them. The engineers are to be asked to send in detailed estimates and specifications.

THE LADIES' COLUMN.

HINTS FOR THE HOME.

TO RENOVATE BLACK SATIN TIES.

Take equal proportions of spirits of wine and warm water, sponge the satin on the right side with this, working down the material and not across it. Whilst still damp, iron on the wrong side.

Another plan is to scour the satin with this mixture:—Four ounces of honey, the same quantity of soft soap mixed with an egg, and a wineglassful of gin, using a stiff brush. When the satin appears clean, rinse in cold water; press between clean cloths to dry, or hang up to drain. Iron whilst damp.

A WARNING.

When using a needle for any little surgical purpose, such as pricking a gathering or extracting a thorn from a person's finger, it is important to remember that the minute needle point is quite capable of conveying disease, and should not be used until it has been sterilised. The simple process of passing it through the flame of a candle or a match is quite sufficient to remove the danger, so there is no excuse for neglecting the precaution.

THE ENGAGED GIRL.

"It's queer fun being engaged," is a speech not infrequently to be heard on the lips of young girls, but you may be quite certain that they speakers are not really and truly "in love." Engagement vows should be looked upon as sacred and almost as binding as those of marriage. I always feel that a girl should be admonished about her prospective engagement in the same words as those used in the marriage service—"Marriage should not be entered into lightly, but soberly and in the fear of God." Only serious faults or disclosures should break the bond of betrothal, and the girl who flippantly remarks that she has "been engaged three or four times," shows herself to be unworthy of her womanhood.

CONCERNING SUGAR.

This valuable article was known even as early as the fourteenth century, but still continued to be very expensive, even in James' reign. It is said to have come from Barbary and Cyprus, where the sugar-cane was introduced by the Moors, and from thence to Spain, and the Canaries. From thence, on the discovery of America, it was transplanted to the Brasils and about the year 1506, established in Hispaniola. Before it was cultivated in Africa or Europe, sugar was brought from the Indies by way of Damascus, and from thence to England, by Venice, Genoa or Pisa.

Anciently, honey was the chief ingredient used as a sweetener of our dishes and liquors, particularly in mead and methinglin.

Sugar, however, notwithstanding its extravagant price, was very generally substituted in the place of honey, even as early as the reign of Richard II., by great epicures, as is to be seen in several books of ancient cookery, and particularly in the kitchen accounts of that monarch.

Sack and sugar was a favourite beverage with our ancestors, and is alluded to in several old works.

PREVENTION AND CURE OF COLDS.

If children have been out its wet roads for a long time and come in with cold and perhaps damp feet, a brisk rub with eucalyptus soon warms the feet and prevents a chill. Of course a plunge into hot water is the best, but it is not always practicable, and the other method simple and can be employed at any time.

When a child has a cold, in her room place a basin of boiling water in which a few drops of eucalyptus have been floated. If there is a fire in the room, and the basin is put inside the fender, the mixture will keep hot quite a long time. The effect is magical, and it seems to prevent the cold spreading to others.

HOW CANDLESTICKS GOT THEIR NAME.

The word candlestick is so familiar that we seldom think to trouble to analyse it; yet, like so many other words in common use, it carries with it the history of the thing to which it is applied. The fact is that in the old days, before metals and better materials were employed, a candle was literally carried on a stick. An old writer says: "I have seen a stick slit at one end for the purpose of holding the candle, as also I have seen the candle stuck in a stick for the same use; and we still call this utensil a candlestick, though it may be made of silver, brass, glass, etc." Another form of the word was candlestaffe.

A WET SILK HAT.

A silk hat should be handled very lightly when it is wet. Wipe it as dry as possible with a silk handkerchief, then apply a soft brush. Should any portion of the nap be found to stick together, dampen slightly with a sponge moistened with vinegar and brush it before the fire until dry.

HUSBAND'S TEA.

There is more truth in this familiar phrase than some would admit in these enlightened days. The wife sits down to enjoy her freshly-made cup of tea, comfortably; then she fills the teapot with water and puts it on the fire in the kitchen stove till the return of her good man. This is what he must drink after a hard day's work. Is it any wonder he flies to the nearest public-house?

I do not know that this is done so much in the towns, but I have seen it done over and over again in the country, in the little cottages. Even at big farm-houses, the same thing is carried on. More the household have partaken of the fragrant cup, the pot is filled up with water and sent out to the men working in the fields. Surely this is false economy, for a man would work far better after a really refreshing cup of tea. Anyway, to say the least, it is in such actions as these we are not "doing as we would be done by."

MR. THOS. ISON,
OCULIST and AURIST.
THIS INSTITUTION was ESTABLISHED in 1871. The system of working is the provident one, each patient paying a small periodical fee whilst under treatment, and they may, therefore justly expect to receive the prompt care and attention which in many instances in charitable institutions is too often omitted. The treatment is of a mild and safe character, without operation or the use of Ear Drums, Ear Cornets or other mechanical or painful appliances. Another advantage appertaining to this dispensary is a system of treatment by correspondence, by which sufferers at long distances, and in isolated positions can have the advantage of Mr ISON'S advice and remedies forwarded through the post. No case is undertaken unless there be a reasonable hope of cure, or benefit to the patient.
Attendance at Leeds every Tuesday, from 10 to 7 on Alternate Saturdays, Jan. 24th and Feb. 7th. Hours 10 to 7. Other days by appointment.
TREATMENT WITHOUT OPERATION.

SATURDAY, JANUARY 24th, 1914.

It is asserted that 25 per cent. of the people who seek accident compensation are quite able to work, and, if this is correct, it will furnish an argument for moralists. Before the passing of the Compensation Act, persons suffering from injury or accident, unless they were provided for through friendly societies, were thrown on their own resources, and they doubtless exercised every care and precaution in order to regain physical fitness, so that they could return to work. The Compensation Act is a beneficial measure, passed in the interests of the workers, and it has accomplished an incalculable amount of good. At the same time, if critics are to be believed, it has likewise produced a fine crop of hypocrites and liars. Malingering is quite as dishonest as theft, and, to be successful, it must be backed up by falsehood and hypocrisy. Of course, malingering is no new phase of social life, for the early friendly societies required their members to take an oath on this very matter, but with the extension of opportunity the evil appears to have grown. An authority states that "all malingering is not wickedness; many people remain on the sick list because they are moral cowards, or have pessimistic temperaments, and are influenced by a fear of restart of work." Of course, idleness has an inimical effect, especially when it is extended over a long period, and even when a man who is physically fit has been out of employment for a long time, gets the opportunity to start work again, he may display a strange reluctance to accepting it. He has, in some measure, lost the habit of work. It will, therefore, be realized that in persons of a pessimistic temperament the tendency alluded to will likely be found in an enhanced degree. The detection of the malingerer is no doubt difficult, and many remedies have been suggested. "Doctors," says an authority, "have a powerful weapon in their hands, but unfortunately the exigencies of medical and club practice are a barrier to courageous honesty." Malingering, then, has a degrading effect on doctors, too. Drastic measures to stop it are needed.

Strong opposition is forthcoming to the application of the Yorkshire Electric Powel Co. for powers to provide electric lighting in a large part of the West Riding, including the whole of the district throughout which this journal circulates. The offer of cheap lighting to residents of obscure villages and isolated farm-houses is alluring, and the prospect of the whole country-side enjoying what has hitherto been regarded as one of the polvileges of urban areas is calculated to find for the scheme a favourable reception, but the creation of a huge monopoly in the Riding has aroused the hostility of public authorities, many of which have already presented petitions against the Bill. The undertaking is not promoted for philanthropic purposes, but for purely business reasons, and the men whose capital is invested in the concern naturally expect some return for their money. However alluring a scheme may be, it is always well to remember that dividends are the object of the promoters, and the Yorkshire Electric Power Co. are out for profit. The District Councils' Association have had the question under consideration, and, as a representative organization, they have come to the conclusion that the Bill should be opposed. Without much consideration, the Garforth Urban Council, at their last meeting, agreed to support the promotion, and it is possible that the area, compact and populous, would benefit if an electric cable were introduced, because it would provide competing systems of lighting. On the other hand, by granting powers to the Yorkshire Electric Co. in the area another monopoly would be created, and if, at any time, the Council desired to purchase the undertaking in the district they would have to pay well for it. That is one of the points put forward by the District Councils' Association, and in a district like Garforth it has more application than in a rural area, where the supplying of electric lighting to a scattered population would not prove remunerative. Not many years ago an electric lighting scheme was proposed in Garforth, but, owing to the inability of the parochial body to utilize money received as the price of an old quarry for the purpose, it did not come to fruition. At the present time the rating burdens in the area are fairly heavy, and the Council, in the circumstances, would be chary of either purchasing or starting an undertaking for lighting purposes, although it is not long since the buying of the gas works was advocated by ratepayers. Still, a favourable opportunity for going on with such work might present itself, and it is surely desirable that the Council should find themselves unfettered in any way.

The consent of the Tadcaster and Hunslet Rural Councils, too, has been asked, and the authorities are dealing with the question. If there was a guarantee given to a rural area that every portion of it would be given a chance of utilizing the electric light the feeling of hostility to the Yorkshire Electric Power Co.'s scheme would be considerably minimised, but no such guarantee would be given. Have the Yorkshire Electric Power Co. provided power in all the areas in which they have authority to lay a cable? When the Wakefield Light Railway Co. promoted their scheme they secured support for it by proposing lines through various villages, but these places have no tramway service yet, and the Tramway Co. have been making desperate efforts to get rid of their obligations. They have carried out parts of the scheme which they assume will give a return on the capital invested, and left undone the carrying out of the work in the districts which they think will not yield remunerative returns. They have broken faith with the public, and the District Councils are now endeavouring to prevent their throwing aside their obligations. In a district with such an experience the adoption of the motto "Once bitten, twice shy" may well be excused. At the last meeting of Hunslet District Council it was stated that if the Electric Power Co. "got these powers they would get a monopoly, and they might have a repetition of what they had with the tramway undertaking. They might pick out the districts where they had a chance of getting plenty of customers, and leave the other districts to 'fend' for themselves." Were the Company to give a guarantee, and allow the imposition of a heavy penalty in the event of failure to carry out their scheme in the rural districts it would assume a different aspect, and there would be a chance of the contract being fulfilled. But if no contract was entered into it would be quite open for the Company to apply to the Board of Trade to be released from certain of their obligations, after they had picked the districts which they intend to work. Provided that the conditions alluded to were met, and a reasonable time fixed for the lighting, the rural districts might gain from the scheme, but it would be foolish of local authorities to give countenance to an undertaking of this character without proper safeguards.

ROTHWELL & DISTRICT NEWS.

ROTHWELL

LEEDS WEST RIDING PETTY SESSIONS.—At the Leeds West Riding Petty Sessions on Tuesday the magistrates on the Bench were:—Mr J. W. Morkill (in the chair), Mr F. M. Lupton, Col. A. M. Sugar-Musgrave, Mr E. H. Foster, Mr R. Kitson, Mr S. Hudson, and Mr E. Parkin.

SALVATION ARMY.—The juniors of the Hunslet Corps visited the Rothwell headquarters on Saturday night, and gave a Japanese concert. Those taking part were dressed in Japanese costume, and an enjoyable programme of songs, drills, and recitations was gone through.

DRINK.—At the Leeds West Riding Petty Sessions on Tuesday William Bowery, miner, of Rothwell Haigh, was summoned for having been drunk and disorderly at Rothwell. P.C. Womack stated that he heard the defendant making use of bad language. He was drunk, and, after being spoken to, he was taken home by a friend. A fine of 10s. and costs was imposed.

WORKINGMEN'S CLUB.—On Saturday teams representing the domino, whist, and dart section of the East End Park Working Men's Club visited Rothwell to oppose the local Working Men's Club. Rothwell lost both in dominoes and darts, the scores being:—Dominoes 30, darts 3-324. East End Park, dominoes 46, darts 3-005. Rothwell beat the visitors at whist by six points, gaining 40 points to 34.

BILLIARDS.—Playing in the junior section of the Oulton and District Billiard League on Saturday night Rothwell Mechanics' Institute defeated Rothwell Workingmen's Club by 200 to 20 points. Details (Workingman's Club names first):—H. V. Sidebottom 100 v. R. Priestley 71, L. Thurwell 100 v. H. Priestley 78, W. Aikin 87 v. J. Parker 100, T. Naylor 70 v. C. Berry 100, R. Deakin 100 v. Drury 76, and H. Bennett 88 v. L. Elstob 100.

FOOTBALL.—Rothwell Wednesday played West Riding Wednesday at Rothwell on Wednesday. The home team attacked at the outset, and S. Heaton, Arch, and E. Heaton scored. Leighton responded for the visitors, but Tiffany, Arch, Ellis, and Taylor added goals for Rothwell. In the second half Ellis, Bulmer, S. Heaton, and Taylor increased the home team's lead, while Leighton kicked a good for West Riding. Result:—Rothwell Wednesday 11 goals, West Riding Wednesday 2 goals.

PICKWICK SOCIETY.—The Pickwickian Society still flourishes, and at all its meetings the Pickwickian spirit is manifested abundantly. On Mr W. Nodding is an admirable reader of the Society's testament "The Pickwick Papers," and on Thursday last he read with his usual ability from the 53rd chapter. Mr J. Bramley also gave a reading by W. W. Jacob, "The Boatswain's mate." A Yorkshire reading by John Hartley, of Clock Almanack fame, and entitled "You never can tell," was contributed by Mr W. Sidebottom.

ROTHWELL MAN AND PARLIAMENT.—The Holmfirth Divisional Representation Committee of the Labour party held a conference at Penistone on Saturday, for the purpose of selecting a candidate for the next election. The name of Mr William Lunn, checkweighman, of Rothwell, it is understood, was before the meeting, but no definite decision was arrived at, as Mr Lunn's name is also before the Yorkshire Miners' Association. Mr Lunn contested the seat against Mr Sydney Arnold, the sitting Member, at the by-election in 1912.

TRIPPED OVER HEARTHRUG.—A simple accident was, according to the evidence given at an inquest in Leeds, on Friday, the cause of the death of Wilfred Hallas, aged two years, the son of a miner, living at Woodland Crescent, Rothwell, who had died in the Leeds Infirmary as the result of a fractured hip. On Sunday morning the child was playing on the hearthrug and caught his foot against the edge of it. It fell, and the father, after a consultation with a St. John Ambulance man living in the locality, sent for a doctor, who ordered the child's removal to the Infirmary. "Accidental death" was the verdict.

BOWLING CLUB.—Success attended the annual whist drive and musical evening promoted by the Rothwell Bowling Club, and held in the Church Schools on Wednesday night. After playing sixteen hands as whist the following were announced as winners:—Ladies—1, Mrs Oldfield, 2 Mrs Price. For the gentlemen's prizes Mr Price and Mr Dobson tied for the first place, and after "cutting" Mr Price was allotted the first prize. Mr H. J. Martin acted as steward for the whist, and Mr H. Turner was musical director. Songs were given by Mrs A. Adamson, Miss Adamson, Mr N. Varley, and Mr G. R. Lister, the latter giving a humorous item. Mrs Adamson and Miss Adamson contributed a duet, and a trio (flute, 'cello, and piano) was played by Messrs H. and F. Stainer and J. Young. Mr F. Stainer contributed a 'cello solo and Mr H. Stainer a flute solo.

WESLEYAN CHURCH.—An interesting address on the great "Manchester Mission and its work" was given on Tuesday evening by the Rev. W. Kedward, one of Rev. S. F. Collier's colleagues. The speaker gave a graphic description of the wonderful and gratifying improvements at this well-known Mission, including the rescue home attached to the Mission. Here some hundreds of life's wrecked humanities are brought to harbour, and an opportunity is given for launching forth once more on what may prove a happier voyage. Not only women and children are admitted and helped (the doors are open night and day), but "lost" men, doctors, ministers, tradesmen, artisans, as well as many of the lowest classes, have been given a good meal, a comfortable bed, and a new start in life. In the absence of Mr Walter Hargreaves, C.C. (who generously gave financial help), the chair was occupied by Mr W. Stephenson, and the Rev. N. W. Thomlinson, and Mr J. Hutchinson also took part in the meeting. A collection was taken in aid of the Wesleyan Home Missionary Society.

BOWERS ALLERTON

At Bowers Allerton Council School last month the percentage of attendance was 89.77 as compared with 90.23 in December, 1913.

OLD FOLK'S TREAT.—The seventh annual old folks' treat was given in the Mission Schoolroom on Monday evening, when over 80 aged people did justice to a capital supper, consisting of an ample supply of beef, mutton, and rabbit pies, with vegetables and sweets. After supper a concert was commenced with the singing of the well-known hymn, in which the guests heartily joined. In the absence of Mr J. W. Blackburn (who has not completely recovered from his illness), Mr W. S. Blackburn presided, and he sincerely wished the aged guests good health and happiness during the present year. Mr Silkstone sang "Sally in our Alley," Miss Blackburn "Gipsy's warning," and Mr F. Bulkley "The truest friend," while Misses Robinson and W. Ward gave the duet "Sweet convent bells." Mr J. Sproston (humorist) caused hearty laughter by singing "Contrasts," and Mr F. G. Dyer, the well-known violinist, played "Home, sweet home." After this Mr Hutt gave an address to the old people. Miss W. Ward then sang "To-morrow will do," and Mr F. Bulkley gave "God shall wipe away all tears." Miss Blackburn delighted the audiences with her singing of "Darling, good night," and Mr J. Sproston's ditty caused much fun. Mr F. G. Dyer (violin) rendered "Old folks at home." Miss L. Wigglesworth, A.L.C.M., very tastefully supplied the pianoforte accompaniments. Mr J. W. Milner proposed a complimentary vote of thanks, in which he included Mr J. W. Blackburn, Sir Jos. C. Rickett, M.P., Mr G. R. Lane Fox, M.P., Mr R. H. Foster, J.P., C.C., Mr L. J. Dewhirst, C.C., the Kippax Co-operative Society, Mr Curtis, Mr A. Firth, and Mr I. Robinson, who had again so generously assisted in providing the meat; Mrs Oxley, Mrs Collinson, Mrs Silkstone, Mrs Hutt, Mrs Simpson, and Mrs Nicholson, who had once more so excellently cooked and served the provisions, and all those who had so well entertained the old people. In seconding, Mr I. Robinson said the "good old days" were not as good as these, and times would continue to improve. The debt which the young owed to the older people was gradually being recognised; these gatherings proved it locally, while the old age pensions proved it nationally. At the close each lady was given ¼ lb. of tea, while the old gentlemen received 1 ozs. of tobacco each. Mr Samuel Street was the oldest guest present, being almost 92 years of age, and he still continues to indulge in his two miles walk every day after an early breakfast.

CARLTON

CARLTON CRICKET CLUB.—The annual meeting of the Carlton Cricket Club was held on Saturday night at the Queen's Hotel, Carlton—Mr J. Dobson presiding. The hon. sec., Mr Hiram Ward, read the report of the doings of the club during the past season, showing the organization to be in a better financial position. The season was begun with a deficit of £7 4s. 6d., but closed with a balance of 8s. 9d. in the hands of the treasurer. The first team played 21 matches, of which nine were won, nine lost, and three drawn. A total of 1,959 runs was scored for the loss of 177 wickets, an average of 11.1 runs per wicket. The best batting average had been made by the captain, Mr Lawrence, who had just beaten Mr Clarkson by the decimal point. Outstanding batting performances had been given by Mr H. Corns against Rothwell (72 runs) and Mr L. Brown against Lofthouse (51). The bowlers had secured 107 wickets at a cost of 1,024 runs, giving an average of 9.7 runs per wicket. Mr Clarkson, a slow left arm bowler, captured 70 wickets, with an average of 6.7 runs per wicket. The second eleven played fifteen matches, winning four, losing ten, and one was drawn. Mr B. Fozzard wins the medal offered by Mr R. Ellis for the highest score in either team, having scored eighty runs. Mr J. Ashton headed the batting averages, with 8.8 runs per innings. Master W. Newman led the bowlers with an average of 6.5 for 37 wickets. The officers for the coming season were also elected.

CROSSGATES

In connection with Crossgates Golf Club a dance will be held in the Recreation Hall on Friday, Jan. 30th. See advt.

SWEET PEAS.—Our gardening expert deals this week with sweet pea culture, and the article should have an exceptional interest for members of Crossgates Sweet Pea Society. Our gardening column is one of the best published in the North.

ILLNESS OF MR DEWHIRST.—Mr I. J. Dewhirst, C.C., of Whinmoor Lodge, has been laid aside by illness for about three weeks, and was in consequence unable to attend the last quarterly meeting of the County Council, this being the first meeting he has missed since he was elected four years ago. We are pleased to state, however, that Mr Dewhirst is very much better, and all will wish for Him a speedy recovery.

FORESTERS.—The annual meeting of the Crossgates Court of the I.O.F. was held on Thursday night in Crossgates Wesleyan School-room, and the following officers were installed by the Grand Treasurer, Bro. C. A. Goodall, Court Deputy, Bro. Lewis, and Court Physicians, Bros. Haygarth and Bean:—Chief Ranger, Bro. A. H. Whitfield; Vice Chief Ranger, Bro. A. K. Rhodes; Recording and Financial Secs., Bros. A. R. Milford and W. Flather; Treasurer, Bro. H. Mann; Orator, Bro. Hall; Organist, Bro. Thorp; Trustees, Woodcards, Bros. H. Fidgett and Flather; Beadles, Bros. Whitehead and Stott. After the installation ceremony the High Chief Ranger, Bro. W. J. Sutcliffe, presented Bro. A. R. Milford with a piece of plate and Bro. Flather with a cheque in recognition of the services they have rendered to the Court, and he complimented the members on the efficiency of their offices.

CROSSGATES BOWLING CLUB.—The annual general meeting of the members of Crossgates Bowling Club was held on Wednesday evening at the Station Hotel, Crossgates, a large number of members being present. Mr J. C. Nowell (the retiring President) was in the chair. The balance sheet, which showed that the club was in a good financial position, was adopted. One of the important items on the agenda was a recommendation by the committee to alter a large number of the rules of the club, and, after a long discussion, the alterations were, with slight modifications, approved and passed. A discussion as to the advisability of continuing in membership with the Barkston Ash Bowling Association and of joining the Leeds and District Bowling Association took place, and it was resolved that the club's membership with the Barkston Ash Association be continued, but that the Leeds and District Association be not joined, as past experience had shown the club could derive no benefit from being members of the latter Association. The election of officers and committee for the ensuing year was then proceeded with, the following being elected:—President, Mr C. Holiday; additional vice-presidents, Messrs J. A. Hodgeel, P. Hardcastle, and R. Barker; secretary, Mr J. A. Rymer; treasurer, Mr I. Semper; committee—Messrs G. W. Burch, W. Bryan, W. H. Morton, R. Aske, H. Burnett, H. Whitfield, J. L. Herbert, and G. F. Armytage; captain, Mr J. Firth; vice-captain, Mr W. Holdsworth; auditor, Mr W. Flather. The new President, in thanking the meeting for his election, expressed the opinion that the efforts of the old committee at the end of last season, when a considerable amount was laid out in materials, with a view to getting the green into a thoroughly good condition for the coming season, would be rewarded, and that if the result justified that opinion the green would be one of the best in the Barkston Ash Division.

GARFORTH

SCHOOL ATTENDANCE.—The percentage of attendance at the schools in Garforth division last month was 91.16 against 85.06 in December, 1912, being sixth in the Riding. The figures for the various schools were:—Garforth Council, 92.89 against 92.78; Garforth Council infants, 90.36 and 72.94; East Garforth, 92.81 and 88.41; Garforth Parochial, 89.54 and 88.09; Garforth Parochial infants, 90 and 76.15; Garforth R.C., 90.48 and 91.43.

"CLEAN TONGUE IN HIS HEAD."—At the Leeds West Riding Petty Sessions on Tuesday a youth named Albert Kilbride, described as a labourer, and living at Garforth, was summoned for using obscene language. P.C. Jackson stated that when on duty on the Aberford Road, Garforth, on January 8th, he heard defendant make use of the language complained of. When told that he would be reported he replied that he was very sorry. The defendant's mother, who was in Court, said her son was deaf and was a bit deficient in imposing a fine of 1s. and costs, the Chairman told the mother to warn her son to keep a clean tongue in his head.

MODEL BUTTER MAKING.—Before the members of the Leeds Technical Schools Bakery Students' Society on Saturday night, at the Leeds Institute, Miss McKerrow, of the Garforth Model Farm of the West Riding County Council, lectured and demonstrated on "Butter and Curd Making." Mr W. Armistead presided. Miss McKerrow showed the methods by which, under the most hygienic and modern conditions, butter might be made on English farms to equal, to, and even superior to, the Danish and other foreign butter which was now so largely imported. The purest milk was an important factor in butter and curd making, and it should contain from 3¼ per cent. to 4 per cent. of fat. The composition of the best butter should be:—Butter fat 85.80 per cent., water 12.30 per cent., casein 0.54 per cent., ash 1.30 per cent. One could generally reckon 5 lb. of butter to a gallon of cream. Butter made from perfectly sweet cream turned out very flavourless. The introduction of proper colouring matter was not harmful. A great deal of English butter was spoilt by keeping the cream too long, and the farmer's persistence in maintaining, whatever the circumstances, one definite churning day. The Chairman said Miss McKerrow's methods cast a reproach upon hundreds of English farmers

PICTURE HOUSE.—A very enjoyable all-round programme has entertained satisfactory audiences at the Picture House during the first half of this week, and a good bill will be presented to-night and to-morrow, including such fare as "Jean's Evidence," wherein a collie dog displays almost human intelligence, and is the means of unravelling a mysterious robbery and bringing the real culprits to book; "A Wild Ride," a story in which a young girl is enabled to save a homestead from an almost hopeless situation by a wonderful ride on the back of an ostrich, and other pictures of rollicking humour. Next week two good bills are promised, that for the first half including a sporting picture "The Line Up," founded on an attempt to win an important football match by trickery, which fails; "The Lost Combination," containing a thrilling situation arising from the imprisonment of a child in a safe, and a good Western drama "The Ranch Feud." For the second half of the week the outstanding features are a drama, entitled "The Mystery of the Great Diamond," a good detective story of the Nat Pinkerton series, and a Keystone comedy called "A Noise from the Deep," said to outrival that great mirth-provoker "Heinze's Resurrection." Other good pictures complete interesting programmes. For times and prices see advt.

GREAT PRESTON

The attendance returns for last month show that at Great Preston School there was a percentage of 87.27 as compared with 81.77 in the preceding December.

A good number attended a dance on Saturday evening, the proceeds of which were for the upkeep of the Infants' School. Mr A. Dyer was the pianist and Mr G. Nowell M.C.

EDUCATION.—At the Leeds West Riding Petty Sessions on Tuesday application was made to the justices by Mr H. W. Powell, Clerk to the Garforth District Education Committee, for an order against James Binley, a miner, of Great Preston, to send his daughter Martha Lewis Binsley (10) to school. It was stated that out of a possible 528 attendances the girl had only been to school eighty times. The mother pleaded that the child had been unwell and unable to attend. The order was made.

CHURCH WORKERS' GATHERING.—A very profitable time was spent in the Infants' Schoolroom on Tuesday evening by the workers of St. Aidan's Church. The Rev. J. Gregory (curate-in-charge), who presided, said how completely he had felt himself at home amongst them during the nine months he had been there, and how thankful he was for the valuable work of the various organizations of the church, including the sewing meeting, the Sunday School teachers, the magazine distributors, and also the choir. His efforts had been very well backed up, and he hoped they would continue to work together, and that the heating apparatus recently installed in the church at a cost of £20 would soon be paid for. The Rev. E. B. Smith (vicar), said how pleased he was that the work was progressing so well. They had now a fine body of Sunday School teachers, and also a promising choir, and he trusted the good work would continue. Mr Lowther was also present. Songs were then contributed by the Rev. J. Gregory, Miss J. Summers, Mrs Cooper, and Mr H. Backhouse. Mr Ernest Bell played a violin solo, and Mr G. Bell was the accompanist. Mr Milnes gave a recitation, and a number of games were afterwards indulged in. Refreshments were provided, and a very enjoyable evening terminated with the singing of "Auld Lang Syne" and the National Anthem.

HALTON

Burman (Halton) is one of the team chosen to represent Leeds schoolboys in a Rugby football match with Huddersfield lads at Fartown.

Leeds and Bradford A.C. Harriers met at the Irwin Arms, Halton, on Saturday for a friendly inter-run, which extended over about seven miles.

ENTERTAINMENT.—At Halton, on Saturday, in connection with the 18th North-East Leeds Baden-Powell Boy Scouts, Whitkirk Troop, a special young people's performance of "Alice in Wonderland" was given. The Hon. E. Wood, M.P., who opened the entertainment, was introduced by the Rev. B. Guyer, vicar of Whitkirk.

GUN CLUB.—A new organization, to be known as the Halton Gun Club, has been formed at Halton, with a membership of about 30, the headquarters being at the Irwin Arms, Halton. By way of inauguration ten members on Wednesday decided to run sweepstakes at five birds each, which was divided by Messrs R. Morris, E. Taylor, and G. Green, with four kills each. A three-bird sweepstakes at 2s. 6d. each obtained 14 entries, and was won by F. Hemingway, Morley, who was the only competitor who killed all his birds. Second and third prizes were divided by Messrs T. Clarkson and E. Taylor. A three-bird sweepstakes at 2s. 6d. each obtained 18 entries, and was divided by Messrs F. Hemingway and E. Taylor.

HALTON INSTITUTE—BILLIARDS.—On Monday evening Burman (Halton, two stars) had a League match with British Workman's Institute (170 start), at Chapeltown, and the latter won by 1,034 to 752. Details (Halton names first):—J. Thompson 85, V. P. Oliver 150, E. Green 121 v. H. Coates 150, G. Botterill 95 v. H. Johnson 150, G. O. Bell 150 v. G. Craven 114, J. F. Loveday 114 v. E. Coates 150, V. Schofield 87 v. D. Dales 63, J. W. Kitson 100 v. C. Potter 51, W. Kenny 97 v. E. Turner 100, H. Schofield 36 v. E. Turner 100, H. Simpson 84 v. A. Swales 100, and G. Harrison 100 v. G. Marshall 88. Owing to the increased membership of the Institute the Committee have been obliged to purchase a new full size billiard table, and this was erected on Wednesday by Messrs Hall and Sons in the large reading room. Two exhibition games were played during the evening, F. W. Hughes playing Mr G. Botterill and Mr E. Green, conceding 300 up. Mr Hughes won both the games, beating Mr Botterill by 20 points, and Mr Green by 15 points. The chief breaks were 28, 30, 40, 49, 55, 66, and 92 by Mr Hughes; 17, 20, and 30 by Mr Green, and 13 by Mr Botterill.

KIPPAX

WESLEYAN CHURCH.—The Wesley Guild in connection with this church held a very helpful meeting on Tuesday evening—Mr J. Beeston presiding. The weekly meeting of the Band of Hope was well attended on Monday evening.

SCHOOL ATTENDANCE.—In Kippax School district last month the percentage of attendances was 87.90 as compared with 86.14 in December, 1913. The figures for Kippax Schools were:—Boys, 92.85 against 87.50; Girls, 89.56 and 81.17, and infants 80.72 and 81.77. The attendance at the infants' school was affected by measles.

Mr Thomas Simpson, retired grocer and wine and spirit merchant, of Preston Lane, Kippax, left £26,015.

UNITED METHODIST CHURCH.—A social promoted by the young people was held on Wednesday evening. The Young People's Own, along with their President, Mr Jas. Farrant, are hoping to augment the finances connected with the Trust by these special efforts held from time to time. The usual games and amusements were indulged in by these present during the evening, and refreshments were handed round by the lady members. A very pleasant time was spent.

BILLIARDS.—Playing in the senior section of the Oulton and District Billiard League Kippax were defeated at Oulton on Saturday night by Oulton Institute by 107 points. Details (Oulton names first):—T. Cain 74 v. C. Eastwood 100, F. Rockledge 100 v. F. Edwards 91, G. Wilkinson 100 v. E. Turnpenny 66, W. Winter 100 v. E. Tiffany 25, S. Berry 75 v. P. May 100, and A. Nettleton 100 v. G. Lund 90. Rockledge compiled a break of 40.

DRINK.—At the Leeds West Riding Petty Sessions on Tuesday, John Cooper and David Clayton, miners, of Kippax, were summoned for having been drunk and disorderly at Kippax on Saturday, January 10th. P.C. Davies said his attention was called to the defendants by a disturbance in High Street. On proceeding to the scene he found Cooper and Clayton, who were in a drunken condition, along with two other men. Cooper was fined 20s. and costs and Clayton 10s. and costs.

BIRTHDAY CELEBRATION.—One of the many old people of which Kippax can boast celebrated his 82nd birthday on Monday evening. Mr George Firth has resided in Butt Hill, and in the same house for a number of years, and is still active and able to get about quite nimbly. Mr Firth was a prominent member of the Kippax Old Band for a good many years, being one of the pioneers. His long service as a member of the band, the interest he took in its welfare, and his love for music caused him frequently to be consulted by musicians when difficulties arose. Mr Firth filled the position of foreman steeper in the employ of Messrs Locke and Waddington at Kippax pit before his retirement, and he had worked in the pit previous to that for a good many years.

LEDSHAM

The attendance returns show that at Ledsham School last month the number of scholars on the books was 46 and the average attendance 39, giving a percentage of 84.78.

LOFTHOUSE

On Saturday afternoon Lofthouse Glenfield overname 5th Battery R.F.A. by five goals to one.

COLLIERY OFFENCES.—Albany Swales, a Wakefield trammer, was at Wakefield, on Monday, fined 7s. 6d. and 12s. 6d. costs for breaking the colliery rules by riding on a pony in Lofthouse Pit on the 9th inst. The Chairman (Mr Percy Tew) said there had been far too many cases of this class before the Court lately, particularly from this colliery. The Bench were determined to do their best to put a stop to offences in the pit.

METHLEY

On Saturday a football match was played between Methley Mill Moor and Altoffs W. S., and the latter won by 7 goals to 0.

RABBIT COURSING.—At the City Grounds, Wakefield, on Saturday, a £3 rabbit coursing sweepstakes for 32 dogs (the best of one course) was decided. In the final, Taylor's Jimmy Methley, beat Russell's Prince, Wakefield, and the two losing dogs were Moodie's Fan, Featherstone, and Dawson's Floss, Wakefield. The winner took 30s., the second 15s., and the two losers 7s. 6d. each.

MICKLEFIELD

The attendance returns for last month show that at Micklefield School the percentage was 87.25 against 88.68 in December, 1912, and at the infants' school 89.13 against 84.46.

OULTON

BOWLING CLUB.—The annual dinner of the Oulton Bowling Club was held in the Three Horse Shoes, Oulton, on Saturday night. Mr B. Wood Higgins presided over a company of about sixty. The dinner was followed by a lengthy musical programme.

THE CHURCH.—The fourth of a series of services for men was held in St. John's Church on Sunday afternoon, when the address was given by the new curate, the Rev. H. T. Pattinson. The subject of the address—"The call to men"—took with in an able manner.

WHIST DRIVE.—On Wednesday evening a moonstre whist drive promoted by the Oulton Bowling Club was held in the Harold Hall, the players numbering about 160. Mr A. Sharp discharged the duties of M.C. The winners were as follows:—1 Mr J. Mannion (a load of coal), 2 Miss Webster (ham), 3 Mr S. Jackson (box of cigars), 4 Miss Holmes (lady's umbrella). Refreshments were served by Miss Bell and others.

ROBIN HOOD.

P.S.A.—At the P.S.A. meeting held on Sunday afternoon in the United Methodist Church an address on "The Prodigal Son" was given by Mr H. McKay, of Leeds. Mr J. Keighley presided over a good attendance, and the solos "Calvary" and "I will give you rest" were rendered by Madam Hawkes, of Leeds. Mr S. Hartley was the organist.

ROUNDHAY

On Saturday afternoon Roundhay hockey players were beaten at home by Bradford by five goals to four. The A teams also had a match, and Huddersfield won by five to two.

BOXING.—On Monday night at the Athletic Club, Leeds, Young Ryan, Leeds, and Gorley, Roundhay, met to box ten rounds, Bryan was by far the stronger lad, and forcing the work, soon had Gorley in trouble. When a minute and a half of the first round had expired Gorley went down, and was counted out.

STOURTON

P.S.A.—The speaker at the weekly P.S.A. meeting at the Primitive Methodist Chapel on Sunday afternoon was Mr Holgate, of Morley, who spoke on "Thanksgiving." Mr Turton presided over a good attendance. Mr Waterson was the organist.

LECTURE.—An interesting lecture on the work of the Free Church Council Rescue Home was given in the Privitive Methodist Chapel on Saturday night by Miss Burns, the matron of the Home. The lecture proved a most enjoyable speaker, and her account of the good that is done in the institution was greatly appreciated. Mr Wiseman presided, and at the close a collection was taken up on behalf of the Home.

SHADWELL

FOOTBALL.—On Saturday morning a match in the Schools' Cup Competition was played at Shadwell between Armley Church and the home team. The first half was noticeable for the long shooting of the Armley forwards, who were upset by the worrying tactics of Sharp, Frost, and Hodgson. Greenwood and Sheldon came very near scoring on one or two occasions. The second half was a replica of the first, neither team being able to notch a goal.

At the monthly meeting of the Committee of the Leeds Hospital for Women and Children, a resolution was passed expressing deep sympathy with the Chairman, Mr Henry Barran, of Shadwell Grange, in the great loss he has sustained by the death of Mrs Barran, and appreciation of the interest in the hospital shown by the late Mrs Barran.

SWILLINGTON

At Swillington Parochial School last month the attendance returns show a percentage of 80.83 against 89.02 in December, 1912, but the attendance was affected by measles. Swillington Common School had the excellent percentage of 94.04 against 91.35.

WHITKIRK

A PRETTY INCIDENT.—On Friday a meeting of ladies was held at Starbeck with the object of forming a Women's Unionist Association, and was attended by the Hon. E. L. Wood, M.P., and Lady Dorothy Wood. Mrs McDowall presented Lady Dorothy with a handsome bouquet, and both she and Mr Wood made speeches, thanking the ladies.

HOCKEY.—The visit of Harrogate to Whitkirk for the return match had been keenly anticipated by the home club, Harrogate being the only team that has defeated Whitkirk's colours this season. The homesters, however, proved to be in capital form on Saturday, and ran out winners by six goals to one. J. Pendergill at full-back, and J. Popplewell at centre-half, were very prominent for the victors, and Harrison did fine work for Harrogate.

COURT CROSSGATES ANNUAL DINNER

FIRST AGAIN IN YORKSHIRE FORESTRY.

The annual dinner in connection with Court Crossgates, of the Independent Order of Foresters, was provided at the Griffin Hotel, Leeds, on Tuesday night, and there were about sixty guests, including ladies and friends. After dinner a short toast list was gone through, and Bro. A. H. Whitfield, C.R., gave the loyal toast.

Bro. J. W. Powell, P.C.R., proposed "Our Order." He stated that, although one of the principal objects of the Order was insurance, its greatest success was attained by seeking to cultivate the spirit of fraternity, which existed in such measure among the members of Court Crossgates. He did not believe in a paid organizer, and he contended that better results were secured when the members, among whom a brotherly feeling existed, were responsible for the introduction of new members, who could not fail at the very outset to notice the social side of the work. That, he believed, was the secret of the success of Court Crossgates, and he was almost sorry that his term of office as Chief Ranger was at an end, because it had been such a happy time, backed up, as he had been, by the older members and officers of the Court.

Bro. W. J. Sutcliffe, H.C.R. (Leeds), in reply, agreed with Bro. Powell, and said they should not work merely for the insurance, but do their utmost to promote fraternity among men. He stated that when he arrived at New York, on his way to the Supreme Court meeting in Canada, he was tackled as soon as he landed by a man, who shook him by the hand, then cuddled him, and afterwards kissed him. (Laughter). That, he thought, was a bit too fraternal, so he asked "Well, my friend, and who may you be?" The man had another look at him, and then apologised, saying he had made a mistake. However, a little later he was met quite as fraternally, if not as effusively, by Bro. Martin, of the Head Office. Referring to Court Crossgates, he said that one outstanding feature was that while they had different opinions about working the organization—and they did not hesitate to express their opinions when they differed—they had achieved one of the most notable successes in the Jurisdiction of Yorkshire. (Applause). But he believed that it had not yet attained its greatest success, and he hoped to see it in the premier Court. All their functions were graced by the presence of the ladies, and this was a pleasing feature, because when they managed to get the ladies interested in the work happy results were sure to follow. Court Crossgates had, he said, again won the Shield for Yorkshire for the greatest number of initiations by any Court. He recalled that a year ago Bro. Powell stated that he would not be satisfied if the Court did not again secure the trophy during his term of office, and he was sure that Bro. Powell would have a greater appreciation of the honour because it had been achieved without any assistance from the organizer. (Applause). Thereafter, in appropriate terms, he presented Bro. Powell with a Past Chief Ranger's badge.

Bro. Powell, in returning thanks, said he was pleased that his name would be inscribed upon the shield, and he hoped that his successor, Bro. Whitfield, would have a similar honour next year. (Applause).

An excellent musical programme was gone through in the course of the evening, and the artistes gave a capital account of themselves. The entertainers were Mrs Whitfield, Miss Dawson, Miss Fisher, Mrs Tattersall, Mr Driffield (humorist), Bros. H. Mann, J. T. Johnson, G. E. Brook, W. Nussey, A. H. Cam, and A. R. Milford, while Master T. Lee gave a recitation. Miss Fisher was an efficient accompanist.

Bro. H. J. Thomas, P.C.R., in a delightful little speech, proposed "The ladies, visitors, and artistes," and the toast was enthusiastically pledged.

FOOTBALL

South Milford school last month had excellent attendance returns, being 93.19 per cent. against 91.09 in the previous December.

HOCKEY.—South Milford mixed team played Aberford mixed team at South Milford on Saturday. The game was keenly contested and ended in a victory for Milford by four goals to nil.

SELBY CONSERVATIVE CLUB.—The annual meeting of the members of the Conservative Club was held on Monday night, Mr H. Connell being voted to the chair. A large attendance included Dr. G. D. Todd, Mr J. H. Richardson, Mr Wm. Armstrong, Mr A. R. Swift, Mr A. Chambers, Mr R. Hodgson, Mr J. Townend, Mr J. J. York, Mr T. E. Blanshard, Mr R. Petty, Mr Jas. Quinn, Mr Fitzpatrick, Mr G. Owen, Mr W. H. Latimer, Mr W. Weaver (hon. sec.), and Mr R. Lodge (Conservative agent). Mr W. Weaver (hon. secretary) submitted the annual report, showing that the membership steadily increased. The alterations to the club are in progress, and the committee hoped that in the spring the members would be in the enjoyment of the extended premises. The financial report showed a credit balance of £26. The Chairman said the report was highly satisfactory, and he moved its adoption. The report was then adopted. Dr. Todd stated that the contributions already given for the alterations amounted to £300, and a further £200 was promised. The total amount required would not be less than £800. He felt sure that by next year the committee would be able to raise about £1,000. Mr J. J. Richardson added that when the extended premises were opened he believed there would be an additional 200 members.

SELBY CONSERVATIVE WEEKLY WHIST DRIVE.—Another successful whist drive took place at the Conservative Club on Tuesday evening, there being 19 tables, and Mr R. Lodge officiated as M.C. The following were the prize-winners:—Ladies—Mrs Tuck (after tie with Mrs Maddox); 2, Mrs Maddox; sealed, Mrs Skelton (after tie with Mrs Perkins); consolation, Mrs Rockett. Gents—1, Mr Rowan; 2, Mr T. Wright; sealed, Mr Garland; consolation, Mr B. Cartwright. Light refreshments and chocolates for ladies and cigarettes for gents were handed round during the interval.

The treasurer of Leeds Infirmary has received £122, proceeds of Newthorpe Charity Sports, per Mr W. Bramley.

On Saturday afternoon in the second round of the York Junior Football Cup Competition Monk Fryston and Cherry Mission played a drawn game—three goals each.

The attendance returns for Saxton School for last month show that the percentage was 87.84 against 90.67 in December, 1912, while Barkston School had the splendid percentage of 96.15 against 86.67.

GARFORTH DISTRICT EDUCATION COMMITTEE

The monthly meeting of Garforth District Education Committee was held at the offices of Garforth on Wednesday night—Mr John Wordsworth (Chairman) presiding. The other members present were Mr H. Gascoigne, Mr T. S. Slater, Mr H. Sugden, Mr J. Hulse, Mr H. Richardson, Mr W. Y. K. Young, and Mr J. B. Breed, with the Clerk (Mr H. W. Powell).

The attendance at the evening schools at Garforth was reported to be satisfactory.

The Clerk stated that the examination for county minor scholarships, etc., would be held at Garforth on March 25th.

It was reported that the managers of Garforth Parochial School had appointed Miss Binns, of Hull, an assistant teacher, at £45 a year.

In a Garforth school attendance case it was reported that the father of the child had been asked to attend two successful meetings, and on an explanation as to the irregular attendance of the child, but he had ignored the request.

The Chairman said the man had not treated them very courteously.

The school attendance officer said that when he informed the mother the case would be reported, she replied "Go and report it. It is all right."

Mr Breed said they could not allow the man to flout the committee.

The Chairman: He defies both the law and the committee.

It was unanimously agreed to summon the man.

The Chairman said the school attendance for last month had shown a great improvement.

The Clerk said the district stood sixth in the Riding.

An application for an increase of salary was received from Mrs Eddington, caretaker of the Garforth Council School. Her present salary is £52 per annum.

The Chairman said the work was excellently done.

After the Clerk had explained her duties and given comparisons of caretakers' remuneration, it was unanimously resolved to recommend an increase of £5 per annum.

The Clerk reported that the Authority had confirmed the Committee's decision to let a plot of land at East Garforth School, to Mr Chadwick for 10s. a year, but Mr Chadwick had declined to take it unless the fences were repaired.

Mr Chappell said they had better let it go to waste than spend £1 on fencing.

Mr Breed: It will cost more than £1 to fence it.

Mr Chappell said that if he wanted the fencing repaired he should pay a rent that would permit of it being done.

Mr Rayner said it was rather unfortunate Mr Chadwick should go back on his offer. He should certainly oppose fencing it.

Mr Breed: If we fenced the land we could get 30s. for it.

Mr Slater asked if it was intended the produce should go to the school.

The Clerk: No. Mr Chadwick would be tenant, and the produce would be his own.

Mr Chappell: If it was to be a school garden we should put the fence into repair.

Mr Rayner said the question of the fence was taken into consideration when they let the land for 10s.

The matter was allowed to drop, and the land is still without a tenant.

The Earl of Londesborough has been appointed president of the Selby Golf Club for the ensuing year.

SCHOOL ATTENDANCE.—For last month Sherburn school district had a percentage of 91.18 as compared with 89.03 in December, 1912. Sherburn Endowed was first in the Garforth division with 96.46 against 93.33; Sherburn Girls, 92.66 and 91.43; Sherburn infants, 91.75 and 86.00. It will be seen that the attendance at Sherburn Schools was very creditable indeed.

COLLISION.—A collision took place on Friday morning on the North-Eastern Railway Company's line at Gascoigne Wood Junction, and though no serious damage was done, the enginemen received a severe shaking. It appears that a goods train was standing in the down-siding, when a pilot engine came along and crashed into the train. The driver, fireman, and guard of the goods train were slightly injured, but later were able to proceed on their journey to Hull.

SELBY URBAN COUNCIL.—The Selby Urban Council on Wednesday night agreed to a recommendation of the Gasworks Committee to petition against the Yorkshire Electric Powers Bill. At a previous meeting the Council asked the War Office to reconsider their decision not to provide a jetty outside Selby for unloading explosives for the Barby Magazine. At present the cordite is unloaded at the railway jetty in Ousegate and the Council represented that this was attended with danger to the inhabitants. The War Office once more replied that after further consideration they adhered to their previous decision. Cordite, unlike gunpowder, was not exploded by fire, and although inflammable, was packed in such a way as to reduce to a minimum any risk of ignition.

THE OPEN WINDOW QUESTION.—The inconvenience caused by a passenger to several other people travelling on the Lancashire and Yorkshire Railway between Leeds and Crossgates on December 9th was described in the Leeds Police Court on Wednesday, when Edward Sissons Potts, commercial traveller, of Sherburn, was summoned for interfering with the comfort of passengers. The defendant did not appear but was represented by Mr J. W. Rhodes, of Sherburn. The train was the 6.32 p.m. from Leeds to Hull, and the defendant sat in a corner seat with his face towards the engine. The carriage was fully occupied except the corner seat opposite Potts. He had his feet on it, and his boots were also on another passenger's coat. The window of the carriage was down, and as a strong, cold wind was blowing several men wanted the window up. The defendant, it was alleged, objected, used bad language, threatened the men, and generally made himself most objectionable until the passengers sought other seats. Potts, the station-master was informed. When the official went up and asked Mr Potts for his name and address he gave it as "John Johnson, John Street, Hull." Proved to be employed by a servant of the Company, Mr Potts said: "Yes I know all about it, but I am not going to have the window closed and the fire put out." The opposite side of the carriage had been closed. Previous to that a gale was blowing through the carriage. The Stipendiary Magistrate (Mr H. Marshall), in inflicting a fine of 20s. and costs, said it was evident that Potts had made himself a general nuisance to everyone else in the carriage.

BARKSTON ASH CHURCHMEN AND FINANCE

VIEWS OF MR LANE FOX, M.P., AND MR BROOKSBANK.

The 25th meeting of the York Diocesan Conference was held on Thursday in the Exhibition Buildings at York, when the report of the Board of Finance on the first year's working of the diocesan scheme was submitted, and the budget for the current year presented and approved. The Archbishop of York presided, and besides him on the platform were the Bishop of Beverley, the Bishop of Sheffield, the Bishop of Hull, the Rev. Canon Greenwood (Rotherham), Mr. G. R. Lane Fox, M.P., and Alt. E. C. Brooksbank, J.P.

Mr D. S. Mackay (York) submitted the balance sheet, showing that the quotas from the 531 parishes in the diocese amounted to £5,278 3s. 9d., the subscriptions to £1,093 15s. 10d., the donations £173 1s. 1d., and the bank interest £21 10s. 3d. The quotas were divided into three classes, donations, subscriptions, and church collections. Donations, subscriptions, and the proceeds of meetings. In Hull, in addition to the quotas, a sum of £580 had been received from laymen. (Applause). The quotas from Sheffield stood at £800, and already £728 had been received. They had disbursed £5,030, and there was a balance in the hands of the Board of £332 12s. 4d.

The Rev. H. E. Wall presented the report on the Board. He stated that the total quotas, £5,278 3s. 9d., compared well with the £4,585 10s. 11d., the amount of Church collections in 1912. Of the parishes sending quotas, 393 sent over, and 84 (compared with 84 last year) had made no return. Five deaneries sent 100 per cent. of their quotas, eight with one exception, ten with two exceptions, and nine made a larger total than the quota asked. After reading a tabulated list he said the deficiency came from the country parishes, and those in which some form of freewill offering scheme was at work. It was anticipated that there would in future be fewer parishes making no return.

In York deanery £341 9s. 4d. was asked for and £328 13s. 2d. given; in Ainsty deanery, £93 1s. 4d., and £115 7s.; in Pontefract deanery, £300 and £248 12s. 5d.; and in Selby deanery, £473 8s., and £404 18s. 4d.

The Bishop of Beverley (Dr. Crosthwaite, of Bolton Percy, moved:—"That this Diocesan Conference, in receiving the report of the Diocesan Board of Finance for the year 1913, desires to express its satisfaction at the amount of support accorded by the diocese as a whole to the scheme of finance placed before it, and also to express its gratitude to all those who have contributed to the successful result of the year's experiment on the lines recommended by the Archbishop's Committee on Church Finance."

Alt. E. C. Brooksbank (Healaugh), who moved, said he set greater value on the way the scheme had been carried out than on the financial result itself. For the first time they had really found a way to look over the hedge into the next parish to their own, and they had a more united diocese than ever in the past. He most thoroughly approved what the Archbishop had said about the friendly rivalry amongst the rural deaneries in regard to the scheme, and if they could encourage that spirit in other Church work it would be very satisfactory. They had been encouraged largely by the poorer country areas—areas which would not benefit so much from financial assistance under the scheme. (Hear, hear).

The Bishop of Beverley said that last year they had asked for £6,000, and they proposed to ask for £8,000 this year again. He moved:—"That the Diocesan Conference adopts the Budget and apportionment prepared by the Board of Finance for the year 1914, subject to such revision by the Board of Finance as it may deem desirable on appeals on the part of the several deaneries or by resolution of the ruridecanal conference."

Mr Lane Fox seconded. He thought they must all agree that the sum that was asked for was not excessive. He did not want to strike any discordant note, but it seemed to him that there had been a great deal of self-congratulation, and he thought, perhaps, they had overdone that. (Hear, hear). It was satisfactory that they had not fallen short of the amount of the minimum quota, but they had to remember that they had not raised the amount asked. He hoped in the next year they would rise above and beyond that. (Applause). He knew there was a certain amount of feeling in some parishes over the basis on which the various quotas were assessed, but the method of roughly rating the assessment, and he hoped they would continue it. He knew of one parish in which the incumbent had taken no steps that he knew of to bring the scheme before the parishioners. He knew of a case in which a great deal more money could have been raised if the matter had been pushed home. (Hear, hear).

The resolution was agreed to.

AN ABERFORD ASSAULT CASE

SCENE AT THE "ROYAL OAK."

At the Leeds West Riding Petty Sessions on Tuesday Dixon Gray, miner, of Aberford, was summoned by William Lock, licencee of the Royal Oak Tavern, Aberford, for assault, and for having been disorderly and refusing to quit.

Prosecutor said that about to pm. on January 7th the defendant came into the inn, and after he had been in about three minutes commenced to quarrel with one of the customers. He used very bad language, and witness, who was in the kitchen at the time, went to him and found him with his coat partly off. Mr Lock spoke to him, who resented the turned and struck him a blow in the face. Defendant also refused to go outside, and, in a struggle which ensued, tripped up the prosecutor, assaulting him in the down.

Defendant, asked if he had any questions to put to the prosecutor, said he wished to explain that he had not used any bad language. He was not a drunkard, but owing to a bad cold he had taken some rum, which must have got into his head. He asked the Bench to be lenient with him.

Alfred de la Pole spoke to seeing the defendant assault Lock.

Gray was ordered to pay a fine of 40s. and costs for the assault, and 10s. and costs for refusing to quit.

INQUEST ON A WOMAN AT ACASTER.

RECOGNISED BY HER BOOTS.

At the Ship Inn, Acaster Malbis, on Friday, an inquest was held by Mr J. R. Wood (Coroner) on the body of Miss Fanny Lupton, of 7, Brigg Street, Fountayne Street, York, which was recovered from the river Ouse.

Mr Thomas B. Harrworth, of 38, Neville Street, York, shoemaker, said he had seen the body, clothing, and boots of the deceased, which he recognised as having belonged to his sweetheart, the deceased, a single woman aged 33 last year. She was first missed on October 8th.

The Coroner: Had she good hoots?

Witness: No, the doctor ordered her to get out as much as possible. She had very poor health indeed. She was afraid of a nervous breakdown. She left home at 5 o'clock in the afternoon. But she did not come back in the usual time, and we thought she must have gone to see one of her married sisters. When it got to 9 o'clock we began to get a bit anxious. But she used to go to see her married sisters a lot. We made enquiries and found that she had not been to any of them. The police were informed, but we heard nothing of her until the police found her—except when her umbrella and clothes were found on a seat on the New Walk. They were found on the Wednesday night she left home.

The Coroner: How do you recognise her?

Witness: I recognise her boots very well, and the stockings had been re-footed, and there were one or two other small things that I could tell her by; but the boots were the main thing. I could tell by a froot tooth she had.

What was peculiar about that?—It projected a little. It was rather larger than the others. She had very bad teeth. The police were straight, but we were advised to stop it until there was a clue.

James Clark, carpenter, Acaster Malbis, said he found the body at 4 o'clock on Wednesday afternoon at the dam, Naburn Locks. He recovered it and removed it to the Ship Inn.

Dr. A. Raimes said he had examined the body of the deceased, which was consistent with its having been in the water for three months. There were no apparent indications of death having taken place from causes other than drowning.

The jury returned a verdict of "Found Drowned in the Ouse."

LOCAL GUARDIANS AND MARGARINE.

Monk Fryston, Burton Salmon, and Hillam are in Pontefract Union, and the residents should note that the Guardians had an hour's discussion on Saturday as to whether butter or margarine should in future be supplied to the inmates of the House and the cottage homes. The matter arose out of a motion by the Rev. F. E. Egerton that margarine should be supplied after March 31st, as recommended by the Local Government Board Inspector. He said the Clerk had informed him that the average cost for butter was £445, and if they could save half that amount conscientiously he thought it was their duty. He reminded the Board that they had it on the highest authority that some margarine was better than butter, and he never had anything in his own house, but family or visitors, but margarine. Margarine was very largely used by the working classes, and they would be quite satisfied to have the same in the workhouse. It was not a question of competing with the trade market, as they already provided Danish butter.

Mr Holdridge seconded.

Mr Batten, in a long speech, opposed and gave a description of what he stated to be some of the constituents of margarine. He challenged the statement that the working classes largely used it, but, he added, if they did, it was because the wages they earned would not permit of it by getting butter. The Guardians gave the inmates at present sugar at 2s. a stone, tea at 1s. 6d. a pound, a big hunch of bread, and a little sugar—all good food. He hoped they would not spoil the menu by the proposed substitution.

Some enterprising local manager having heard of the motion, sent a large sample of margarine, and the Board proceeded to sample it, a few members declining, however.

The Chairman (Mr Bentley) said it was certainly very nice to taste. It was for the Board to consider whether there was anything wrong or improper for them so supply margarine to the inmates, and, if they thought not, he saw no reason why they should not do their duty to the ratepayers and save £5 a week. He certainly believed that if their inmates were providing for themselves they would buy margarine; though some might say the Bench replied that if they had Mr Egerton's income they would stick to butter.

Mr A. Taylor, a farmer, favoured the provision of margarine, but on voting, the motion was lost by 30 votes to 11.

Mr. PAUL BLANCHARD,

HUNSLET BOARD OF GUARDIANS.

The fortnightly meeting of the Hunslet Board of Guardians was held at the Union Offices on Wednesday—Mr T. Thomas (vice-chairman) presiding. Other members present were Mrs Dickinson, Dr. Groves, Rev. T. Cady, Messrs G. Armitage, W. Verity, J. Butterick, P. S. Hargreaves, Banister, J. W. Cowling, Dr. Haydn Marsden, Banister, J. W. Cowling, Dr. R. Pickersgill, W. A. greaves, J. Gawtin, J. R. Pickersgill, W. A. Appleyard, G. W. Peace, Hemingway, J. R. Chappell, and T. Bennett, with the Clerk (Mr F. W. Moy).

It was reported that during the fortnight there had been one death in the Workhouse, and the number of vagrants relieved was 99 as against 90 last year.

The minutes of the Children's Homes Committee showed that a further letter was received from the R ttwell Urban District Council with reference to the supply of water by rent, and the reference to the supply of water by rent, and the Clerk reported his reply thereto and that he had asked for a copy of the new scale of charges which the Council are reported to have made, but had not received it. It was resolved that the Chairman, vice-chairman, and the Clerk be appointed and empowered to meet a similar committee of the Council in the endeavour to agree upon an equitable water rent.

A further report was received from Mr G. Bogue Smart, Chief Inspector, Department of the Interior, Canada, with reference to the proposal that Margaret Egan should try her vocation with the Sister of St. Joseph, Montreal, stating that he had been to St. Gabriel's Academy, where the girl is employed as a maid at the Convent of the Holy Cross, and that she had arranged to defer coming to a decision in the matter until she is able to better judge of her its significance. It was resolved that the Clerk write the Catholic Emigration Association and say that the girl is not proceeding with her application, and that they be asked to keep the proposal that Margaret Egan should try her vocation with the Sister of St. Joseph, Montreal, stating that he had been to St. Gabriel's Academy, where the girl is employed as a maid at the Convent of the Holy Cross, and that she had arranged to defer coming to a decision in the matter until she is able to better judge of her its significance. It was resolved that the Clerk write the Catholic Emigration Association and say that the girl is not proceeding with her application, and that they be asked to keep the proposal in view should she change her mind.

The minutes of the Workhouse Committee showed that the application of Miss Gerrard, superintendent nurse, for an increase of salary was considered on a reference from the Board, and it was resolved that the Guardians be recommended to increase the salary from £45 to £50 per annum.

The Clerk reported that on 1st January last according to a return made by him to the Local Government Board, there were 20 children in the workhouse not receiving education or instruction, three only being above 5 years of age. A letter was received from the master stating, in answer to enquiry, that none of the children were eligible and suitable for the Homes.

The minutes, with the exception of a portion relating to an alleged aberration in the heating system, were passed.

Mr Thomas (vice-chairman) and Mr T. Bennett, along with the Clerk (Mr F. W. Moy), were appointed as delegates to the Central Poor Law Conference to be held in London next month.

A letter was read from Mr Sharp, one of the relieving officers, reporting that after making his report to the Board re the giving of coal to each recipient of out-relief he had found that there were five people in his district who had been given a supply of coal privately, and asking under these circumstances if he should adhere to the instructions of the resolution passed at the last meeting of the Board or withhold the coal until the loads had been used.

A resolution that the Guardians supply coal to the people referred to as soon as necessity arises was passed.

TWINS CURED OF ECZEMA.

A GRATEFUL MOTHER PRAISES THE WONDERFUL ZAM-BUK TREATMENT.

CUTS, SORES, AND PILES.

The twin babies of Mrs Mary Haredean got in a terrible state with eczema and skin rash, but Zam-Buk cleared away all their sores and gave them beautiful new skins. To an "Ecko" field Weekly" reporter the grateful mother, who lives at Field Cottages, Framfield, Sussex, said:—

"James and Joseph were only a fortnight old when inflamed spots with mattery heads came on their faces. The outbreak spread very quickly to their necks, feet, hands, arms and legs, and some of the sores being as big as half-crowns. Their skin got dry and crusty and scaled away. The spots, too, burst and discharged matter.

"The poor mites must have been very severe, for both babies were constantly crying and got very fretful. A doctor said they had eczema. As they didn't get better under his treatment, I tried other remedies.

"But the rash and sores got worse. We really didn't know what to do and I feared that neither of the twins would pull through.

"I kept up the Zam-Buk treatment and the twins' sores and rashes gradually died away. Beautiful new skin grew, and to-day there isn't a mark of any kind on either child."

Zam-Buk is an unrivalled cure for poisoned sores, eczema, ringworm, scalp sores, ulcers, piles, bad legs, chapped hands, rheumatism, etc. Sold only in sealed boxes at 1/1½ and 2/9. Of all chemists and drug stores. All imitations are worthless!

Zam-Buk Medicinal Soap, sold in large shilling tablets, is very valuable in connection with the treatment of children's skins.

SELBY

After a lingering illness the death took place on Friday at Willoughby House, Selby, of Mrs Cracroft, who was one of the oldest local preachers in the Wesleyan body in Selby. He was 76 years old.

The death took place suddenly at Selby on Friday night, after a seizure, of John Connell, who was for many years the look-keeper on the Aire and Calder Canal at Selby.

CONSTABLE'S SMART CAPTURE.—On Monday at Selby Police Court, Joseph Bourer, of no fixed abode, was charged with having been on enclosed premises at Selby early on Sunday morning. P.C. Snelling saw the man on the enclosed premises in front of the house of Mr J. Wetherell, grocer, on Leeds Road. The man was against a window with a knife in his hand. When charged at the police station, defendant said "That is right. It is a fair cop." Defendant, replying to questions, said he was going to use the knife to open the window. It appeared he came from Preston, where he had been convicted of housebreaking. He was committed to prison for two months.

FOOTBALL JOTTINGS

BARKSTON ASH CUP—SATURDAY'S MATCHES.

On Saturday afternoon the second round of the Barkston Ash Cup Competition will be played, and the contestants are:—

Boston Spa v. Tadcaster.
Garforth W. R. v. South Milford.
Wetherby v. Wetherby Cor.
Selby Holme Mill v. Monk Fryston.
Aberford v. Whitkirk.
Sherburn v. Barwick United.
Harewood v. Barwick United.

If Tadcaster play their best team they should defeat Boston Spa, and I fancy Garforth, Wetherby, Monk Fryston, Aberford, Cawood United, and Barwick as winners.

DERBYSHIRE SHIELD.

In the Derbyshire Shield Competition on Saturday afternoon Wetherby overcame Harewood by five goals to one, and maintained first place in their division. Cawood and Whitkirk had a close game, the latter being beaten by the odd goal in five, and South Milford managed to wrest the points from Aberford by three goals to two.

HOSPITAL CUP SEMI-FINALS.

Rothwell Parish Church had an unlucky day at Morley, where they played the Heckmondwike team. The Churchmen attacked in fine style at the outset, and after Green had saved twice, Hirst netted for Rothwell. At one time it looked as if the Churchmen were certain winners, for they were all over their opponents. The backs defended stoutly, and Boyes and Stringer were prominent. However, there was no more scoring up to the interval. Afterwards Heckmondwike improved, and the Churchmen fell away, and a change came over the game. Heckmondwike netted five times, and won by five goals to one.

Fryston Colliery and Woodhouse Britannia were the other semi-finalists, and the miners had a decisive win. Stone and Burt netted for Fryston in the first moiety, and they were leading by two goals to nil. Five more goals were obtained by Fryston, and their opponents had to be content with one.

LEEDS SENIOR LEAGUE.

In this League on Saturday afternoon Great Preston accomplished a good performance by defeating Wortley United, and Waterloo Main (Templetownsham) defeated Benson Lane R. R. by a goal to nil.

The match between Great Preston and Wortley United was at Holbeck. The Prestonians gave the better exhibition in the first half, and Graham giving Tonce a nice pass, this player netted. A second goal came from a long shot by Smee. In the second half Graham netted, and Preston won by three goals to nil.

ROTHWELL W. R. WIN.

Rothwell White Rose were away at Horsforth on Saturday, gaining a victory by two goals to nil. Rothwell won the toss, and played downhill. About five minutes from the kick-off Wilks, with only the goal-keeper to beat, was shouldered off the ball. Owing to a mistake by Ossett, Hughes centred the ball in front of the goal, and Parfitt netted, giving the goalkeeper no chance. Abrahams scored for Rothwell from a pass by Tiffany. Arnett, the Horsforth goal-keeper, made a magnificent save, and Ward when he was only two yards from goal.

RUGBY NOTES.

ROTHWELL'S DOINGS.

On Saturday Rothwell entertained Pontefract, who were about the first to defeat the homesters in this season's fixtures. However, away from home Rothwell's tables completely turned on them, suffering defeat by eighteen points to three. The match was a benefit in aid of Lazenby, who had the misfortune to break his leg when playing for Rothwell during November last. The official referee was again a missing quantity, and a late start was made. Tetlow commenced downhill for the visitors, who played strongly in the early stages. To an "Ecko" field Weekly" reporter the grateful mother, who lives at Field Cottages, Framfield, Sussex, said:—

"James and Joseph were only a fortnight old when inflamed spots with mattery heads came on their faces. The outbreak spread very quickly to their necks, feet, hands, arms and legs, and some of the sores being as big as half-crowns. Their skin got dry and crusty and scaled away. BRAMHAM MOOR HUNT.

MEET AT WALTON.

On Friday the Bramham Moor meet was at Waltons. Mr Lane Fox, M.P., was in charge, and hounds found at once in the Hall Parks. They slowly hunted to Walton Whins and the village to Thorparch Whins, where the fox got to ground.

Another fox got away from the Whins, and he ran up to the Gate House, down on by Walton to Hall Parke, and parallel with Rudgate, down to Wighill Ings, where the quarry got into the rabbit earths.

At Champagne cover hounds found a brace, and went away quickly with one that went to Thorparch Whins and to ground. Hatfield's Plantation and Swinnow as well as Ingmanthorpe Big Wood and the New Plantation were blanks.

Hounds found again in the Willow Garth, and ran hard through Lincroft to the Goathorpe covers. From Heslock Field Rash they ran through Goose Moor, and checked as they pointed for the White Gate.

Fiercely heard of the fox going to the Duck Pond, and hounds ran on over the road, just missing both Champagne and Hatfield's Plantation. They worked the line nearly to the Wetherby steeple chase fencing, and then bore away to the left, and ran on by Spring Wood, across the railway near the Gate House, and they checked again on the way to Thorparch.

HUNTING MEET AT NUN APPLETON.

A LADY'S MISHAP.

On Tuesday the York and Ainsty hounds, meeting at Nun Appleton, appeared to be as unfortunate as on Monday in not finding foxes, for hounds drew all the gorse coverts in the vale without a whimper, and then they drew the plantations and willow garths up to the Pallathorpe cover without the sign of a fox. They had to make a call upon the resources of Bilbrough's preserves, taking Steeton Wood in the line. The welcome note rang out, and the huntsman's cheer for hounds to get to the cry. Hounds made the best of a moderate scent once on the fox's line, going through Pickering Wood, and leaving the Steeton Old Hall to the left, they ran up to the railway, which was crossed by Bolton Percy Station. Hounds put in some excellent work. Going to the right, they re-crossed the railway, and getting on to some grass more spirit was put into the chase. Ostons Hall could be seen ahead, and many thought th's would be the fox's point; but getting turned to the left, he got back to Steeton Wood. Here Cumpstone made certain of another kill, but though hounds were close at their fox's brush he managed to slip through the pack and get clear. This fright caused reynard to leave the wood at once, and he went away from the cover towards Ostons, and reached Colton village, where hounds drew up. Cumpstone made all the ground good, but failed to handle his fox. It had been a very nice hunt, only it wanted a little more pace.

Hounds then went to the Colton Whin, and in a very few minutes the cheery voice of the huntsman got the pack together. They had hard work to hunt their fox, but by great perseverance on Cumpstone's part they were again away, going over Mr Myers's farm, with Colton village on the left, and crossed the road with Colton Lodge on the left hand. Here the pace of fore now quickened and caused a division in the pack. The main body ran on at a good pace up to the Old Steeton Hall, and going to the right reached Pickering Wood. This also put everybody on the ride, and here hounds appeared as if they would have killed, but scent was wretched to cover, and they could hardly hold the line. The fox halloa told Cumpstone that reynard had gone away to Old Steeton Wood, and going from the Steeton Wood they went away with Pallathorpe cover wide on the right. This bit of country hounds ran over wanted doing, and those who rode up to hounds had their work cut out up to Bumper Hill. Reynard ran up to a plough team, and turning short to the left reached Colton village, where hounds got off the line.

Cumpstone made a quick cast forward for the Colton Whin, holding hounds on, but did not succeed in recovering the line. Coming back to Colton, however, he recovered the fox, and hunting reynard from Colton Whin, went to the left over Mr Jaggar's farm, and reached Mr Lawson Smith's house, Colton Lodge. Hounds could not make much of the line, being on folled ground. Huntsman and hounds had a very hard day, so the order was for home.

Mr Payne Galbwey had a fall last week, and put his shoulder out, and is wearing it in a collar-bone. Miss Galbwey when following the pack on Monday staked her horse and had to retire from the hunt. On Tuesday, at the Nun Appleton meet, the same lady had a nasty fall through her horse putting its foot in a rabbit hole when galloping in the open. Although she was much shaken and bruised, she is not so seriously injured as was feared.

BARKSTON ASH CHURCHMEN AND FINANCE

VIEWS OF MR LANE FOX, M.P., AND MR BROOKSBANK.

The 25th meeting of the York Diocesan Conference was held on Thursday in the Exhibition Buildings at York, when the report of the Board of Finance on the first year's working of the diocesan scheme was submitted, and the budget for the current year presented and approved. The Archbishop of York presided, and besides him on the platform were the Bishop of Beverley, the Bishop of Sheffield, the Bishop of Hull, the Rev. Canon Greenwood (Rotherham), Mr. G. R. Lane Fox, M.P., and Alt. E. C. Brooksbank, J.P.

Mr D. S. Mackay (York) submitted the balance sheet, showing that the quotas from the 531 parishes in the diocese amounted to £5,278 3s. 9d., the subscriptions to £1,093 15s. 10d., the donations £173 1s. 1d., and the bank interest £21 10s. 3d. The quotas were divided into three classes, donations, subscriptions, and church collections. Donations, subscriptions, and the proceeds of meetings. In Hull, in addition to the quotas, a sum of £580 had been received from laymen. (Applause). The quotas from Sheffield stood at £800, and already £728 had been received. They had disbursed £5,030, and there was a balance in the hands of the Board of £332 12s. 4d.

The Rev. H. E. Wall presented the report on the Board. He stated that the total quotas, £5,278 3s. 9d., compared well with the £4,585 10s. 11d., the amount of Church collections in 1912. Of the parishes sending quotas, 393 sent over, and 84 (compared with 84 last year) had made no return. Five deaneries sent 100 per cent. of their quotas, eight with one exception, ten with two exceptions, and nine made a larger total than the quota asked. After reading a tabulated list he said the deficiency came from the country parishes, and those in which some form of freewill offering scheme which some form of freewill offering scheme was at work. It was anticipated that there would in future be fewer parishes making no return.

In York deanery £341 9s. 4d. was asked for and £328 13s. 2d. given; in Ainsty deanery, £93 1s. 4d., and £115 7s.; in Pontefract deanery, £300 and £248 12s. 5d.; and in Selby deanery, £473 8s., and £404 18s. 4d.

The Bishop of Beverley (Dr. Crosthwaite, of Bolton Percy, moved:—"That this Diocesan Conference, in receiving the report of the Diocesan Board of Finance for the year 1913, desires to express its satisfaction at the amount of support accorded by the diocese as a whole to the scheme of finance placed before it, and also to express its gratitude to all those who have contributed to the successful result of the year's experiment on the lines recommended by the Archbishop's Committee on Church Finance."

Alt. E. C. Brooksbank (Healaugh), who moved, said he set greater value on the way the scheme had been carried out than on the financial result itself. For the first time they had really found a way to look over the hedge into the next parish to their own, and they had a more united diocese than ever in the past. He most thoroughly approved what the Archbishop had said about the friendly rivalry amongst the rural deaneries in regard to the scheme, and if they could encourage that spirit in other Church work it would be very satisfactory. They had been encouraged largely by the poorer country areas—areas which would not benefit so much from financial assistance under the scheme. (Hear, hear).

The Bishop of Beverley said that last year they had asked for £6,000, and they proposed to ask for £8,000 this year again. He moved:—"That the Diocesan Conference adopts the Budget and apportionment prepared by the Board of Finance for the year 1914, subject to such revision by the Board of Finance as it may deem desirable on appeals on the part of the several deaneries or by resolution of the ruridecanal conference."

Mr Lane Fox seconded. He thought they must all agree that the sum that was asked for was not excessive. He did not want to strike any discordant note, but it seemed to him that there had been a great deal of self-congratulation, and he thought, perhaps, they had overdone that. (Hear, hear). It was satisfactory that they had not fallen short of the amount of the minimum quota, but they had to remember that they had not raised the amount asked. He hoped in the next year they would rise above and beyond that. (Applause). He knew there was a certain amount of feeling in some parishes over the basis on which the various quotas were assessed, but the method of roughly rating the assessment, and he hoped they would continue it. He knew of one parish in which the incumbent had taken no steps that he knew of to bring the scheme before the parishioners. He knew of a case in which a great deal more money could have been raised if the matter had been pushed home. (Hear, hear).

The resolution was agreed to.

AN ABERFORD ASSAULT CASE

SCENE AT THE "ROYAL OAK."

At the Leeds West Riding Petty Sessions on Tuesday Dixon Gray, miner, of Aberford, was summoned by William Lock, licencee of the Royal Oak Tavern, Aberford, for assault, and for having been disorderly and refusing to quit.

Prosecutor said that about to pm. on January 7th the defendant came into the inn, and after he had been in about three minutes commenced to quarrel with one of the customers. He used very bad language, and witness, who was in the kitchen at the time, went to him and found him with his coat partly off. Mr Lock spoke to him, who resented the turned and struck him a blow in the face. Defendant also refused to go outside, and, in a struggle which ensued, tripped up the prosecutor, assaulting him in the down.

Defendant, asked if he had any questions to put to the prosecutor, said he wished to explain that he had not used any bad language. He was not a drunkard, but owing to a bad cold he had taken some rum, which must have got into his head. He asked the Bench to be lenient with him.

Alfred de la Pole spoke to seeing the defendant assault Lock.

Gray was ordered to pay a fine of 40s. and costs for the assault, and 10s. and costs for refusing to quit.

INQUEST ON A WOMAN AT ACASTER.

RECOGNISED BY HER BOOTS.

At the Ship Inn, Acaster Malbis, on Friday, an inquest was held by Mr J. R. Wood (Coroner) on the body of Miss Fanny Lupton, of 7, Brigg Street, Fountayne Street, York, which was recovered from the river Ouse.

Mr Thomas B. Harrworth, of 38, Neville Street, York, shoemaker, said he had seen the body, clothing, and boots of the deceased, which he recognised as having belonged to his sweetheart, the deceased, a single woman aged 33 last year. She was first missed on October 8th.

The Coroner: Had she good hoots?

Witness: No, the doctor ordered her to get out as much as possible. She had very poor health indeed. She was afraid of a nervous breakdown. She left home at 5 o'clock in the afternoon. But she did not come back in the usual time, and we thought she must have gone to see one of her married sisters. When it got to 9 o'clock we began to get a bit anxious. But she used to go to see her married sisters a lot. We made enquiries and found that she had not been to any of them. The police were informed, but we heard nothing of her until the police found her—except when her umbrella and clothes were found on a seat on the New Walk. They were found on the Wednesday night she left home.

The Coroner: How do you recognise her?

Witness: I recognise her boots very well, and the stockings had been re-footed, and there were one or two other small things that I could tell her by; but the boots were the main thing. I could tell by a froot tooth she had.

What was peculiar about that?—It projected a little. It was rather larger than the others. She had very bad teeth. The police were straight, but we were advised to stop it until there was a clue.

James Clark, carpenter, Acaster Malbis, said he found the body at 4 o'clock on Wednesday afternoon at the dam, Naburn Locks. He recovered it and removed it to the Ship Inn.

Dr. A. Raimes said he had examined the body of the deceased, which was consistent with its having been in the water for three months. There were no apparent indications of death having taken place from causes other than drowning.

The jury returned a verdict of "Found Drowned in the Ouse."

LOCAL GUARDIANS AND MARGARINE.

Monk Fryston, Burton Salmon, and Hillam are in Pontefract Union, and the residents should note that the Guardians had an hour's discussion on Saturday as to whether butter or margarine should in future be supplied to the inmates of the House and the cottage homes. The matter arose out of a motion by the Rev. F. E. Egerton that margarine should be supplied after March 31st, as recommended by the Local Government Board Inspector. He said the Clerk had informed him that the average cost for butter was £445, and if they could save half that amount conscientiously he thought it was their duty. He reminded the Board that they had it on the highest authority that some margarine was better than butter, and he never had anything in his own house, but family or visitors, but margarine. Margarine was very largely used by the working classes, and they would be quite satisfied to have the same in the workhouse. It was not a question of competing with the trade market, as they already provided Danish butter.

Mr Holdridge seconded.

Mr Batten, in a long speech, opposed and gave a description of what he stated to be some of the constituents of margarine. He challenged the statement that the working classes largely used it, but, he added, if they did, it was because the wages they earned would not permit of it by getting butter. The Guardians gave the inmates at present sugar at 2s. a stone, tea at 1s. 6d. a pound, a big hunch of bread, and a little sugar—all good food. He hoped they would not spoil the menu by the proposed substitution.

Some enterprising local manager having heard of the motion, sent a large sample of margarine, and the Board proceeded to sample it, a few members declining, however.

The Chairman (Mr Bentley) said it was certainly very nice to taste. It was for the Board to consider whether there was anything wrong or improper for them so supply margarine to the inmates, and, if they thought not, he saw no reason why they should not do their duty to the ratepayers and save £5 a week. He certainly believed that if their inmates were providing for themselves they would buy margarine; though some might say the Bench replied that if they had Mr Egerton's income they would stick to butter.

Mr A. Taylor, a farmer, favoured the provision of margarine, but on voting, the motion was lost by 30 votes to 11.

Mr. PAUL BLANCHARD,

HUNSLET BOARD OF GUARDIANS.

The fortnightly meeting of the Hunslet Board of Guardians was held at the Union Offices on Wednesday—Mr T. Thomas (vice-chairman) presiding. Other members present were Mrs Dickinson, Dr. Groves, Rev. T. Cady, Messrs G. Armitage, W. Verity, J. Butterick, P. S. Hargreaves, Banister, J. W. Cowling, Dr. Haydn Marsden, Banister, J. W. Cowling, Dr. R. Pickersgill, W. A greaves, J. Gawtin, J. R. Pickersgill, W. A Appleyard, G. W. Peace, Hemingway, J. R. Chappell, and T. Bennett, with the Clerk (Mr F. W. Moy).

It was reported that during the fortnight there had been one death in the Workhouse, and the number of vagrants relieved was 99 as against 90 last year.

The minutes of the Children's Homes Committee showed that a further letter was received from the R ttwell Urban District Council with reference to the supply of water by rent, and the reference to the supply of water by rent, and the Clerk reported his reply thereto and that he had asked for a copy of the new scale of charges which the Council are reported to have made, but had not received it. It was resolved that the Chairman, vice-chairman, and the Clerk be appointed and empowered to meet a similar committee of the Council in the endeavour to agree upon an equitable water rent.

A further report was received from Mr G. Bogue Smart, Chief Inspector, Department of the Interior, Canada, with reference to the proposal that Margaret Egan should try her vocation with the Sister of St. Joseph, Montreal, stating that he had been to St. Gabriel's Academy, where the girl is employed as a maid at the Convent of the Holy Cross, and that she had arranged to defer coming to a decision in the matter until she is able to better judge of her its significance. It was resolved that the Clerk write the Catholic Emigration Association and say that the girl is not proceeding with her application, and that they be asked to keep the proposal that Margaret Egan should try her vocation with the Sister of St. Joseph, Montreal, stating that he had been to St. Gabriel's Academy, where the girl is employed as a maid at the Convent of the Holy Cross, and that she had arranged to defer coming to a decision in the matter until she is able to better judge of her its significance. It was resolved that the Clerk write the Catholic Emigration Association and say that the girl is not proceeding with her application, and that they be asked to keep the proposal in view should she change her mind.

The minutes of the Workhouse Committee showed that the application of Miss Gerrard, superintendent nurse, for an increase of salary was considered on a reference from the Board, and it was resolved that the Guardians be recommended to increase the salary from £45 to £50 per annum.

The Clerk reported that on 1st January last according to a return made by him to the Local Government Board, there were 20 children in the workhouse not receiving education or instruction, three only being above 5 years of age. A letter was received from the master stating, in answer to enquiry, that none of the children were eligible and suitable for the Homes.

The minutes, with the exception of a portion relating to an alleged aberration in the heating system, were passed.

Mr Thomas (vice-chairman) and Mr T. Bennett, along with the Clerk (Mr F. W. Moy), were appointed as delegates to the Central Poor Law Conference to be held in London next month.

A letter was read from Mr Sharp, one of the relieving officers, reporting that after making his report to the Board re the giving of coal to each recipient of out-relief he had found that there were five people in his district who had been given a supply of coal privately, and asking under

THE FLOWER GARDEN.

SWEET PEAS.

Sweet peas are so indispensable in the flower garden that no risk of a lack of bloom should be taken. If seeds were sown in October as recommended in these columns the seedlings should now be growing freely and will be ready for potting on into larger pots. A rich compost should be used for this potting, and if the seed pots are of the 48-inch size, 6-inch pots may be used for the weaker, and 7-inch for the stronger clumps. The plants will require the protection of the cold frame for 6 or 8 weeks yet, but should be freely ventilated on all favourable occasions. The plants grow rapidly during late February and March, and should be supplied with suitable supports in good time to prevent them falling over. Two of the most important points in sweet pea culture are the provision of a deep, rich rooting media for the final planting, and sufficient space for each plant to develop to its full extent. Sweet peas are so accommodating and give such good returns under somewhat careless treatment, that they rarely receive the amount of attention necessary to persuade them to give of their best. There are numerous ways of raising young plants. The most natural way is to sow the seed where the plants are intended to bloom. The greatest objection to this is that in our northern districts the plants from outdoor sowing do not commence to bloom until late in the season. Probably the best results are obtained from an autumn sowing in pots. The best method is to sow in pots early in February. The seed germinates rapidly in a slightly heated greenhouse, but care must be taken to prevent the seedlings getting drawn. They should be put within a few inches of the roof, and when about 3 inches high should be removed to the cold frame. If a heated structure is not available the seed may be sown in a cold frame, the only difference being that its progress will be much slower. For spring sowing in pots, 3 or 4 seeds in a four-inch pot are a suitable number. The young plants should be kept as near the light as possible right from the first, and free ventilation, without direct draughts, will keep them strong and sturdy. The preparation of the ground intended for sweet peas is an important matter. No half measures will answer. The ground should be broken up from two to three feet deep and manure should be added unstintingly, but the subsoil is of a poor quality it should not be brought to the surface unless with the object of renewing it in favour of some new loam or soil. The sweet pea is such a gross feeder that anything in the nature of plant food seems to come amiss to it. When preparing the soil, any or the following may be added. Any kind of animal manure, poultry manure, decayed vegetable matter, ashes from the rubbish fire, wood ashes, soot, and powdered lime rubble. If available bone meal, basic slag, or any prepared chemical manure may also be used. Some degree of reason must be used in applying any of the above, and of course the character of the soil must be taken into consideration. For instance, sandy soils are too porous for the roots to get a good grip of the ground. Any additions that are made should be of such a nature as to produce more stability and retentiveness of moisture. Stable manure is excellent for retaining moisture. Vegetable refuse, pig and cow manure, light dressings of lime and salt are all good, and if the soil is extremely sandy it may be further improved by the addition of powdered clay. Heavy soils are improved by the addition of gritty soil, lime, ashes, burnt earth, strawey manure, and bone meal. Autumn digging should always be practised, and if the soil is laid up in ridges it will enable the frost to work more freely amongst it. The planting out, or sowing of seed outdoor, cannot be safely carried out on any fixed date. Every thing depends upon the state of both the ground and the weather. Approximately it is safe to sow seed outdoor the latter part of March. Some growers sow in February and if the spring is not severe good results are obtained. Pot grown plants may generally be hardened off and planted out about the middle of April. A light sprinkling of superphosphate of lime may be forked lightly into the ground immediately before planting. The National Sweet Pea Society publish an annual list of the best varieties, and we can offer no better advice to readers than to make a selection from this list. Growers who only grow a few varieties may find the following list useful. Othello Spencer, (maroon), Lady Grisel Hamilton (lavender), Freda Unwin (blue), Stirling Stent (orange), Sutton's W. P. Wright (pale blue), Thomas Stevenson (orange scarlet), Maud Holmes (crimson), Nora Unwin (white), Mrs Hardcastle Sykes (pink), John Ingman (carmine), Barbara (salmon), Edith Taylor (cerise), Etta Dyke (white), Helen Lewis (orange), Countess Spencer (pink), Clara Curtis (primrose), Asta Ohn (lavender), American Spencer (crimson and white). If only a mixed row is required Eckford's "giant mixed" will be found to contain many varieties equal to the named ones. For garden decoration mixed rows or clumps are more effective than separate colours. The dwarf Cupid varieties are very pretty for small beds. They rarely reach a foot in height.

PLANTS IN POTS.

FUCHSIAS.

Fuchsias that have been kept dry at the roots during the winter may now be started into growth. Last year's growths should be reduced to a few eyes on each. Turn the plants out of the pots, and carefully reduce the ball of soil. The roots should be preserved as nearly intact as possible. Repot into as small a pot as possible, using a mixture of 3 parts loam to 1 part leaf mould, and a sprinkling of sand. Place in a temperature of about 65 and syringe daily to encourage new growth. Pot on as required, using a richer compost when the plants are in full growth.

ANEMONE CHRYSANTHEMUMS.

The value of this section of chrysanthemums for decorative purposes does not appear to be realised in many gardens. There are comparatively few varieties, but of these a few are really excellent. Descartes, a deep mauve, is very free-flowering, and the flowers are produced on firm, erect, long stalks. W. W. Astor, Thorp Junior, Ernest Carr, Souvenir de Madame Blandiniere, and Miss Margaret are all very good. They should be thinned to one on each stem.

CALADIUMS.

These beautiful stove foliage plants may now be started into growth. Some growers start them in cocoa-fibre in the propagator, but we find it an advantage to start them in small pots and pot them on when necessary. A rough compost made up of peat, loam, leaf-mould, and dried cow manure, in equal parts, with a generous sprinkling of silver sand, will grow them well. The base of the tubers should be allowed to rest upon silver sand. A temperature of about 70 degrees will grow them admirably.

COLEUS.

There are few plants of easy culture that can compare with the coleus for brilliancy of colour in the foliage and variety of markings. If cuttings are available they will root readily in a warm house at this time of the year. Seedlings are more robust than plants raised from cuttings, and from a shilling packet of seed dozens of varieties may be obtained. Seed may be sown at once, and it is advisable to prick the seedlings out separately in boxes. When they are a few inches high the best varieties may be potted up and the coarse ones discarded.

NOTES ON TABLE PLANTS.

The following are amongst the most elegant and graceful plants adapted for room decoration, and which continue to thrive for many years with ordinary care.

Araucaria.—These beautiful plants are of the easiest culture, and are not nearly so well-known as they should be. The handsome foliage is produced in successive tiers. For halls, porches, tables, etc., they are very fine ornaments, and will succeed with people who cannot make a success of growing palms. A sandy loam, admixed with some boneneal, is the best soil to use. Good drainage is essential; and the soil must always be kept damp, though not wet. The great enemy of this genus is red spider, but it can be kept away by frequently lightly spraying the leaves, especially on their undersides.

Aspidistra.—Of all ornamental table plants this is the very easiest to grow. All it requires are a good loam soil and an abundance of water. Boneneal is the best fertiliser to use, and should be furnished from time to time. Insect pests never seem to attack the plants, which will thrive in corners too dark for other species.

Asparagus.—Asparagus plumosus nanus, the dwarf asparagus fern, is a delightful subject for room decoration. The lace-like foliage, when well grown, is more attractive than that of ferns. When intended for table decoration the young shoots must be pinched off when nine inches high, as this results in the production of numerous film-like side branches. Combined with a few grasses, this plant makes a very perfect centre for a table, quite as good, indeed, as an expensive florist's arrangement. Asparagus sprengeri, another beautiful asparagus fern, is specially adapted for hanging baskets, as it possesses drooping foliage.

Aucuba.—The common spotted laurel is a charming plant for halls, though one rarely sees it used for them. It is fully as attractive as a palm there, and does well in any good loamy soil, while it increases in beauty year by year.

ADDRESS BY MR LANE FOX, M.P.

HOME RULE—INSURANCE—LAND QUESTION.

Mr George Lane Fox, M.P., was the principal speaker at a Conservative meeting at Consett on Saturday night. He said that no political party in post history had created more peers and found good positions for their friends than had the present Liberal Government. Respecting Home Rule, he said the Government had themselves to blame for the muddle in which they found themselves by disregarding the protest of Ulster, and to get out of it they would either have to appeal to the country or exclude Ulster from the scope of the measure. At the present moment the Government made a great many promises of what they were going to do in the way of social reform. He would remind his hearers, however, of the attitude the Liberal party took up when the Opposition introduced into the Commons a Bill to improve the housing conditions of the working classes. All honour was due to the Labour members for the support they accorded the Unionist party. The Liberals, however, would not have the Bill, and they referred it to a committee, who so mutilated it that it was eventually rejected by the Commons.

Dealing with the Insurance Act, the speaker averred that it had done a great deal of mischief in destroying the voluntary efforts of the Friendly Societies. He maintained that if the scheme had been non-compulsory, the working classes would have taken more kindly to it, and its effects would have been more beneficial. He considered the scheme hindered the workers from being continuously employed, because the more hands an employer engaged the greater was the insurance contribution he was called upon to pay. This he regarded as one of the most serious defects of the Act. He thought if the Unionists were returned to power they would endeavour to remedy many clauses of the Act.

Speaking on the land question, he said he regarded Mr Lloyd George's proposals as unworkable. Mr Lane Fox upheld the necessity for a strong Navy, and agreed with Mr Winston Churchill that it was essential that Great Britain should have command of the seas. In conclusion, he hoped the electors of North-West Durham would return Mr Hardicker, and send a message throughout the country that they were not afraid of the misdoings of the present Government. (Applause).

At a meeting of the Luton Board of Guardians one of the relieving officers reported a case of a woman aged eighty-four who was found sleeping in the open. Inquiries showed that the woman had been offered a home with her daughter, but she always refused.

The Earl of Plymouth of Musgrave, Kirkby Stephen, have joined in festivity to celebrate the golden wedding of Mr and Mrs Jonathan Grimshaw, and the freemasons of the district have made Mr Grimshaw a presentation to mark the event, which has occurred during his year of office as Master of the Uter Pendragon Kirkby Stephen Lodge. Before his retirement, Mr Grimshaw was a manufacturer in Hunslet for many years. He began his commercial life in 1853 as a clerk in the offices of the Leeds Northern Railway. At one time the cofapie resided in Templenewsam district.

A SUCCESSFUL BREEDING SEASON.

FERTILITY AS THE SEASON ADVANCES.

It is generally an accepted theory that after a hen has laid a fair number of eggs the percentage of fertility is greatly reduced, the reason assigned being that the male bird is no longer sufficiently vigorous, or in other words the introduction of a fresh cockerel will remedy the wrong." Here I venture to disagree, and although I have not personally conducted enough experiments at present, I hope at the end of this season to be able to throw more light on the subject.

My theory is that the decreased fertility is entirely due to the hen; it must be borne in mind that our present races of domestic fowls have been radically changed from their natural condition by the artificiality of man, and that generations back it would have been the hen's vocation to lay a few eggs simply to perpetuate its species. To-day we have the 200-egg strain bird, due to scientific breeding, careful housing, attention to diet, &c. This has been accomplished by many, but I doubt whether he can alter her productive organs in the same ratio. Not from actual experiment. A pen of birds commenced to lay, fertility was excellent, but in the course of about three months began rapidly to decline. Bear in mind, the eggs were still impregnated, but the germ of life was too weak to hatch, and "dead in shell" increased until, with the hen that first laid it reached 100 per cent. Now was the time to test my theory, were the hens or the cockerel at fault. Three hens were removed and given to a fifteen month, unmated cock, and three hens, just commencing to lay, substituted in their place; the supposedly impotent cockerel fertilised over 80 per cent. of their eggs, whilst "dead in shell" and infertility were the only results from the new mating.

My opinion has been further strengthened by reading in "Poultry" last season like results to a similar series of experiments; unfortunately I have not the paper by me as I write, but I received my former impressions and determined me to conduct further tests this year.

FINAL SELECTION OF BREEDING PENS.

If attention has been given to the foregoing, and its contents thoroughly digested, you are now in a position to mate up your pens, either by selection from your own stock, or to acquire what is necessary by purchase, or both. Some there will be who will now recognise that poultry-farming is not such easy going as they anticipated, and with the increased feeling of responsibility there may be a corresponding diminution of confidence; to them I say, deal only with those who have a reputation to maintain, or seek the assistance of one with experience and in whose integrity you have trust. Do not assert a knowledge you do not possess, it makes the unscrupulous take advantage of you, and it is far better to pay a small fee for expert services than to make an initial mistake which cannot be rectified before next season, and then pay a pecuniary sacrifice, as well as loss of time, temper, and dignity.

HEREDITY.

The law of heredity is as pronounced with the feathered tribe as with us; if anything, it is more noticeable, as frequently special characteristics may be absent from one or two generations to reappear in the third or fourth; with human beings a generation averages a period of thirty years, and it is therefore apt to lose sight of the peculiar trait, disease, or whatever it may be; on the other hand, with our fowls a generation is only twelve months, and should a characteristic be omitted for one or two years, the intervening period is not of sufficient duration to have obliterated our memory.

A BIRKIN MASTER AND SERVANT CASE

FARM HAND WHO BOUGHT "BACCA" AND CIGARETTES.

On Monday at Selby Petty Sessions James Wright, a farm servant, of Goole, appeared on a judgment summons for having failed to pay £8 10s., successfully claimed against him at a previous court by his former master, Mr Richard Mollett, farmer, of Birkin.

Defendant, after hiring for a year, had suddenly left the plaintiff's service.

Defendant now stated in determined tones that he would not pay anything to Mr Mollett.

Mr Claude Kemp, for the plaintiff, stated that defendant had offered to pay £2 3s., but it was not accepted. It was known that he had had at least £3 in his possession. At the time he was engaged he had over £10 in his pocket.

Defendant admitted having had £3 in his possession.

Replying to questions he said that some of the money he had spent "in bacca and cigarettes." He also said he had bought sweets.

Mr Kemp: You have squandered it in luxuries.

Defendant stated that in his present place of service he was to receive £27 10s. next Martinmas.

An order was made that defendant pay £3 within seven days, or be committed to prison for 30 days. After that there was an order for the payment of 5s. per week.

The Clerk: He may lose his week.

Mr Kemp: I think not, but I will take the chance.

WETHERBY CHAMBER OF AGRICULTURE.

IMPROVEMENT OF LIVE STOCK.

A meeting of Wetherby Chamber of Agriculture was held on Thursday, and Mr H. Crossley, who presided, was supported by Messrs J. T. Dawson, W. Mather, J. Thompson, J. H. Eldridge, G. W. Saddler, H. Hardcastle, R. F. Fearby, L. Isaacs, G. H. Whitehead, J. H. Hooks, G. P. Wright, J. F. Holdsworth, T. Blaken, and J. H. Thompson (secretary). A letter was read intimating that a deputation to the meeting was read from Mr G. Lane Fox, M.P.

The following gentlemen were appointed as representatives on the various committees of the Yorkshire Union:—Mr Dawson (Manure and Feeding Stuffs Committee); Mr Fearby (Dairying Committee); Mr Dawson (Railway Rates Committee), Mr Thompson (Central Chamber and Farmers' Protection Committees); Mr G. P. Wright (General Purposes); Mr Lane Fox (Parliamentary); Mr J. T. Dawson (Railways); and Mr J. T. Thompson (Farmers' Protection).

Mr W. R. Crawford (Live Stock officer for the Board of Agriculture's scheme for the improvement of live stock), who was present, explained the working of the scheme, as issued by the Board, briefly indicating the general lines on which the schemes were going to be demonstrated. He thought they would glean a lot more information and understand the scheme better if they had a general discussion afterwards. He would be pleased to enlighten any of the members respecting the scheme if they would ask questions. They could probably be aware that a certain sum of money had been set apart for the county of Yorkshire for the purpose of improving live stock; and this money was administered through the Live Stock Committee in Leeds, representing the whole county, who would be primarily responsible for awarding the grants. They had appointed a local assistance with a regular live stock officer represented by himself for the purpose of organising the scheme. Under that scheme £2,444 was available for Yorkshire, subsidised into grants for premiums for pedigree bulls, boars, and milk recording societies. For bulls, if it was possible, a society would be organised, and allowed one-third of the money provided to be utilised for individuals to place a bull at the service of their neighbours. In most cases preference was given to the small farmers, who could not exceed one acre in extent or an income not above £100. The amount allotted to stallions was £800; and was allocated in grants of £80 each to ten different societies in the county. A society given a premium for a stallion would receive a direct grant of £40, but the remaining £40 of the £80 would be paid for the purpose of giving society nominations to mares—and the latter must absolutely belong to the farmer. The society would select the mares for the smaller farmers. A society that wished to purchase or hire bulls for the use of their members would be paid £20 per annum for five years in connection with each bull they put out. Those would be inspected by the live stock officer before getting a grant. A society might purchase bulls to the extent of ways—either by raising the capital amongst themselves for the purpose of purchasing; or make arrangements with any individual member of their society or outside farmer who would provide the bull for the use of their members. If they decided to purchase, they would have to raise the necessary capital, insure the animal, and take the usual means of protecting themselves from the loss, and make a nominal fee. In working out the scheme he would advise most societies to hire, and make arrangements with some farmer in the district, or gentleman who usually kept a bull, and arrange a certain fee for use. Of course, they paid that gentleman a certain sum for the service they got in grants. The bulls would always be inspected at the end of each season so see if they had qualified for the grant for the next year. It would be their own benefit therefore to look after the animal. Under the same scheme there would be milk recording societies. The scheme was briefly that a number of farmers agreed together to keep records to ascertain the weight of the, milk of each cow one day in the week—night and morning.

Their society could take up any of the schemes and put in their application. There were 63 Yorkshire applications for bulls; about 16 applications for stallions; and very many for boars. A certain proportion of these would not be awarded at the present time, because some of the districts were too close. It was his object to get them spread all over the county as equally as possible (Hear, hear).

Answering various questions, Mr Crawford said the society would appoint some of its own members to go and select the stallions. The stallions would have to be entered in the usual qualification asked was that they must be on the Board of Agriculture's Register of 1913-14. They could hire any horse on the register. There were many of them already on the register. The society would have the control of the nominations, and they would get their grant or proportionate grant as per numbers. There was only 16 societies in Yorkshire that had already got it.

No action was taken respecting the stallion question, it being thought to be rather too late now for the year. Neither were any steps taken for the subsidy to bulls, it being left to the members to bring the matter up at any future meeting.

The Chairman said they were very much obliged to Mr Crawford for his remarks, which had proved very interesting. Personally, he thought if agriculture meant to improve more calves would have to be bred here, and not have to depend so much upon Ireland for their cattle. (Hear, hear). He, however, thought it would be little use Wetherby going in for the scheme just now, they were so well supplied.

A hearty vote of thanks was accorded Mr Crawford for his address.

A TADCASTER MAN AND THE "TRADE."

MR W. SYKES AND CONFISCATION.

The fifty-eighth annual banquet of the Leeds Licensed Victuallers' Protection and Benevolent Association was held on Thursday night week in the Great Northern Hotel, Leeds. Mr William Sykes, C.C., of Messrs. John Smith's Tadcaster Brewery Company, Ltd., presided, and over two hundred members and friends of the association were present.

Mr Sykes was greeted with loud applause, when he rose to propose "The Leeds Licensed Victuallers' Protection Association," the company heartily singing "For he's a jolly good fellow" before he was allowed to proceed. At the outset Mr Sykes mentioned that the association was in its 60th year, and that since its early days its duties had changed somewhat. In the early days they devoted their time primarily to beneficence and charity, but now they were compelled to direct their attention to a much more serious and important business. It had now to meet with the Government, who were continually drawing upon the resources of the association. He congratulated the Executive on the large and influential assembly gathered together that evening, and it was gratifying to himself also. There were not only members of the trade present, but gentlemen of the city, who showed by their presence that they were common sensible people and were prepared to hear the other side of the question, the side of licensed victuallers. (Applause).

It was not within the province of many people to understand the difficulties of the licence holder. He would give a few figures to show how the Government were regarded by licensed holder. He had dotted down the figures in the form of a debtor's and creditors' statement, and he was very sorry to say that he could not find anything on the creditor's side of the statement. The first item he had to speak about was what was called the War Tax, which was introduced in 1900, and which was only supposed to be of a temporary character. But it was still taking from the trade £1,700,000 each year. Next he came to the question of the retail licences, and in 1908-9 licences paid amounted to £1,794,592. By the Finance Act, these figures were raised to £3,542,534—("shame")—which showed an annual increase of £1,747,942. If this continued over twenty years, supposing they had purchased premises for that period, the sum to be paid out in these duties would amount to about £35,000,000. And he considered that a very serious and important matter, a confiscation very unfair to the traders. (Applause). The question of retail licences brought him to that very broad question, the difference between licence duties charged for Ireland and that charged for Great Britain. In Great Britain, where there was a population of from 5,000 to 10,000 the publican had to pay £25. In Ireland where the population was less than 10,000 the publican had to pay only £5, and above 10,000 £7 10s. For a beerhouse in England they had to pay £10 and over; in Ireland, only £2 10s. They found as a result that they were paying equal to a rate of 1s. 1d. per head of the population for licences, whereas in Dublin it only cost 1½d. per head. It was a gross injustice, and he would have it must have had the job nicely in hand to have squeezed that unprincipled bargain out of them.

In addition to the enormously increased taxation he had mentioned there were the duties on the spirit trade amounting to £5,690,625, and £268,630 on the manufacturer yearly. These figures represented increases. The total increase from 1908-9 to 1912-13 reached no less a sum than £9,425,203, and every reasonable man would admit that it was an unreasonable burden for the trade to bear. The Government income from the trade amounted yearly to £40,000,000. When licen-ing matters were considered again they ought to see that the preference was not given to Ireland, and certainly see that moneys invested by the people in a legitimate business were not confiscated by huge standing charges in the form of licence duties. Whatever the Government might think about it, they knew it was not fair, it was not honest. In conclusion Mr Sykes briefly referred to the question of compensation. He hoped that when the magistrates had the facts put before them the magistrates would give them their very careful consideration. (Hear, hear).

Mr Scholes responded to the toast, and announced a number of gifts which included one of 100 guineas from Messrs John Smiths' Tadcaster Brewery Company, Limited.

INDIGESTION CURED.

SICKNESS AND VOMITING.

17, Shaw Lane,
Headingley, Leeds.

Dear Sir,—I feel it a duty upon me to inform you, and through you the public at large, of the WONDERFUL BENEFIT I have received from taking your Herbal Medicine. I was troubled with sickness and vomiting owing to Indigestion, and for many weeks I vomited my food back, and NOTHING WOULD STAY ON MY STOMACH. I gradually grew weaker and weaker. I also suffered terribly from pains in my back, my tongue was dry and thickly coated, and at times so swollen that I could scarcely speak. Eventually, I got so weak that I COULD NOT WALK WITHOUT ASSISTANCE, and my friends said I was dying fast. The doctors said no medicine in the world would do me good, and the only thing that could save my life was an operation. At that time I only weighed 5 stones and did not feel inclined to undergo the operation owing to being so weak. Having heard a good account of your skill I decided to give you a trial. During the first nine weeks of your treatment my weight increased from 5 stones to 7 stones, and now I have been cured over 2 stones, being 9 stones. The soureness and acidity of the stomach, the pain in the back, and the dizziness have all left me, and I can honestly say that I NEVER FELT SO WELL AND STRONG IN MY LIFE. Thanking you for your kind and careful attention.—I am, Sir, yours sincerely.— (Miss) L. TATE.

PROVISIONS.

SELBY, Monday.—Eggs 7½ and 8 for 1s.; butter 1s. 3d. per lb.; ducks 6s. 6d., chickens 5s. to 5s. 6d. per couple.

POTATOES

SELBY, Monday.—A fair supply, but inquiry was less brisk. Sound Up-to-Dates 52s. 6d. to 55s., sound King Edwards 52s. 6d. to 60s., warp King Edwards 60s. to 65s. per ton; retail, 5d. per stone.

CATTLE

SELBY, Monday.—Messrs Richardson and Son disposed of 84 beasts, 8 sheep, and 70 pigs. The usual attendance of buyers. Trade, however, excepting for the best qualities, was of a dragging character. Best quality beef made 8s. 6d. to 9s. per stone; secondary quality 8s. to 8s. 6d. Best in-calving cows in demand. Store cattle at late rates. Sheep and pigs unchanged from last week's prices. Fat bullocks made to £23 15s., fat heifers to £21 5s., fat cows to £27 6s., fat sheep to £3 13s., fat pigs to £10 5s., pork pigs to £6 15s., store pigs to £2 3s. 6d., store beasts to £12 5s., cows in milk to £18, and in-calving cows to £22 per head.

TADCASTER, Monday.—Messrs Cundall and Son had on average display of prime fat stock at their Wharfedale Mart yesterday. Trade ruled similar to last market, there being a good demand for all classes of well-finished cattle and sheep. Best qualities of beef made from 8s. 3d. to 8s. 6d. per stone; useful beef about 8s., rough sorts and cows 7s. 6d. to 7s. 9d. per stone. The sheep trade, if anything, favoured buyers, but satisfactory prices were obtained. Choice shearlings made up to 70s., and extra good ewes and shearlings from 54s. to 63s., butchering hoggs 48s. 6d. to 64s., ewes 52s. to 61s., and tups 58s. to 70s. 6d. Choicest light-weight mutton made from 7½d. to 10½d. per lb., heavy sheep 6d. to 7d., hoggs to 10½d., and ewes and tups 6d. to 7d. Grazing hoggs from 38s. to 45s. each.

TADCASTER, Monday.—Messrs Thomlinson and Son had a good entry of fat stock in all classes. Beasts were an excellent display of well-finished stock, which met a satisfactory demand and made fully late rates, from 8s. 3d. to 8s. 9d. per stone. There was a capital entry of both sheep and pigs, making a shade less money. Choice shearlings and hoggets made from 10d. to 11d. per lb.; ewes about 7½d. per lb. Bacon and pork pigs good to sell at 8s. to 8s. 6d. per stone; stores from 15s. to 45s., and good to sell. The sale was fairly satisfactory from a vendor's point of view. Numbers sold: 118 fat beasts, 12 in-calf cows, 211 sheep, 119 pork and store pigs. Mr C. Gupson, Grimston Grange, sold five grand bullocks at £26 15s., £26 10s., £24 17s. 6d., £21 7s. 6d., and £18 17s. 6d.: Mr R. MARRIAGE OF MR GERALD FOSTER, STOCKELD PARK

A PICTURESQUE WEDDING.

The wedding took place in the Parish Church of Birling, near Maidstone (Kent), on Wednesday, of Mr Gerald Foster, eldest son of Mr Robert Foster, of Stockeld Park, Wetherby, and of Harrowins, Queensbury, to Miss Olivia Ogilby, only daughter of the late Major A. H. R. Ogilby, D.S.O., of Baldoon, Strathmartine, Forfarshire, and of Mrs Ogilby, of Birling. The bride is the eldest grand-daughter of the Hon. Ralph Neville, of Birling Manor, and sister of Sir Gilchrist Nevill Ogilvy, Bart., of the Scots Guards.

The wedding was very picturesque, and the quaint old church was decorated with palms, flowering plants, cream lilies, and pink begonias—was crowded. The bride, who was given away by her brother, wore a costume of silver Lame renaissance brocade, draped with the finest old lace, the Court train being of silver cloth veiled with similar lace. She also wore a veil, with a wreath of orange blossom, and carried a sheaf of lilies.

There were twelve bridesmaids—Miss Foster (sister of the bridegroom), Miss Charlotte Ogilvy, the Hon. Sybil Harding, Miss Wingfield-Stratford, the Hon. Gwynedd Mostyn and Miss Mackinnon, of Mackinnon (cousins of the bride), Miss Iris Cornwallis, Miss Rycroft, Miss Honor Meyrick, Miss Joan Cobbold, Miss Camilla Style, and Miss Joan Nevill. They wore gowns of rose taffeta, with blue moire sashes and lace fichus of Louis XVI. design. Their shoes were of blue moire, and they had wreaths of pink roses, tied with blue moire bows. Their Victorian bouquets, in pink and blue, were the gifts of the bridegroom, as also were their watches, in pale blue enamel.

The little pages—the Hon. Caryl Hardinge and Master Alastair Cobbold—were in blue velvet, with blue moire sashes and lace collars (Louis XVI.). They also wore blue velvet shoes and white socks, and their ruby and enamel tie pins were the gifts of the bride.

The service was conducted by the Revs. Lionel Staniforth Hugh Rycroft and K. Cordeaux. The best man was Mr Cecil Foster (brother of the bridegroom

SHERBURN PETTY SESSIONS

A NEWTHORPE MATRIMONIAL CASE.

At Sherburn Petty Sessions on Thursday the magistrates present were the Rev. B. Hemsworth (Chairman) and Mr William Crosland.

Walter Cator, miner, of Micklefield, was charged with using obscene language on the 10th inst. at Ledsham, and he was fined 5s. 6d. and 7s. 6d. costs.

Robert Lazenby, labourer, Sherburn, was charged with using obscene language at Sherburn on the 12th inst. Fined 2s. 6d. and 7s. 6d. costs.

Charles Stather, farmer, Ledsham, was charged with failing to deliver up a swine movement license on the 10th inst. The defendant said he did not intend to do wrong; it was an oversight. Fined 1s. and 7s. 6d. costs.

Bartholomew B. Ellis, shoemaker, of Leeds, was charged by Alice Ellis with wife desertion. Defendant did not appear. The complainant stated that she resided at The Barracks, Newthorpe. She was married on the 4th of March, 1913, at Sherburn, and defendant left her a week before Christmas. She did not see him again until last Saturday, and she asked him what he was going to do for her, and he answered "Nothing." He had not given her anything for herself or child. He had a pension as a married soldier. His pension was £2 6s. per quarter. He was a quarryman at £1 per week at Newthorpe quarries. Maria Wilmer, of Newthorpe, said complainant was her sister. She saw the defendant on Friday before Christmas, and he told her he was going away and would not come back. She had not seen him since. The Bench made an order on defendant to pay 7s. 6d. per week.

Antonia Vizzelli was charged with begging in Lumby Lane on the 22nd inst. Defendant, who had been several times convicted for begging, was committed for one month.

BOSTON SPA AFFAIRS.

The monthly meeting of Boston Spa Parish Council was held at the Trustees' Hall on Monday evening. A communication was read from the Electric Light and Power Co. for small villages, asking for the moral support of the Council in forming a company for Boston Spa, and asking for an interview. It was decided, on the proposition of Messrs Foster and Galpine, that a reply be sent to the effect that the Council did not object to hearing more on the subject, if the promoters had anything definite to bring forward.

A short discussion took place on the subject of street lighting, complaints having been made as to the lamps not being lighted on dark nights about the time when the moon should be at full. Discretionary power to ask for the lamps to be lighted on such nights, and left unlighted on other nights to make up for the difference, was given to the Chairman.

On Saturday afternoon Harrogate Athletic hockey players defeated Wetherby L. by seven goals to two.

The treasurer of Leeds Infirmary acknowledges receipt of £6 7s. 6d., part proceeds of carol singing by Wetherby Wesleyan choir, per Mr S. S. Whitfield, and £4 17s. 3d., collection at Stockeld Chapel, per Rev. C. M. Cordeaux.

FOOTBALL.—On Saturday afternoon a York and District League match was played between Tadcaster and the East Yorks. Regiment. Tadcaster were beaten by eight goals to nil. Tadcaster had also a team playing Copmanthorpe, who went under by three goals to nil.

PATENTS.—Patent List compiled by John E. Walsh, Chartered Patent Agent, of 25, Royal Exchange, Boar Lane, Leeds, at at Crossley Street, Halifax:—Applications—J. Bromet, F. Thorman, and H. C. Wood, Tadcaster, centrifugal treatment of sewage, etc. (patent of addition); and Richard Earnshaw, Goole, improvements in ships' lifeboats. Patents sealed—F. and A. Leach, Leeds, chilled bearings for wheel centres; and Ernest Webster, Kirkstall, burners for acetylene storm lamps.

SUFFRAGE MEETING.—Under the auspices of the York branch of the National Union of Women's Suffrage Societies a well attended meeting was held in the schoolroom, Wighill, on Monday evening, when Mr Whitehead, Wighill House, presided. Mrs Meyer and Miss Thompson, York, dealt with the question of women's suffrage and the position of women under the present laws. A vote of thanks to the speakers was proposed by the chairman, and Mr J. M. Dawson seconded. At the close of the meeting several new members were made.

BREACH OF CONTRACT.—Martin Garra, a farm servant, of Selby, was summoned on Monday for a breach of contract by leaving the service of Mr Nolan Hare, West End Farm, Wistow. Defendant, a youth, was engaged on December 1st, but he left 10 days later. Defendant said his master had told him that as he was in the Territorials he would be no use, owing to having to go to camp. He had also said he asked defendant to stay until he got another man, but he would not do so. The claim, which was for over £3, was allowed as the extent of £2 16s., payment to be at the rate of 5s. per month.

MR MYLECHREEST'S AUNT.—Miss Mary Ann Firth, of Jessamine Villa, Chapel Allerton, whose death occurred early on Sunday morning, at her residence, was the daughter of the late Mr John Firth, of Bradford, who was engaged in the export clothing trade, dealing with America, and who afterwards resided at Hope Lodge, Maroon, Isle of Man, and Murina House, Douglas. Miss Firth, who was the aunt of Mr T. G. Mylchreest, of Thorner, went to Chapel Allerton in 1881, and was loved and respected by all who knew her for her kindly and generous nature. (It may most truly be said of her that she was "full of good works and alms deeds which she did" and there are very many who will be the poorer in every sense by her death. The Unmarried Women's Benefit Society and the Albert Asylum were especially the subjects of her loving care and generous support, and for both she acted as a collector, while those who knew her best know that it is impossible to enumerate the societies and individuals who received the most cheerful and ungrudging assistance, given in the simplest and most unostentatious fashion. Both locally and in the Isle of Man, and in many a humble home, Miss Firth had shown what a good woman can be and do to those in need, and her memory will long be treasured by those whom she has helped.

SOUTH MILFORD CRICKET CLUB DINNER

ANNUAL DINNER

On Tuesday evening the annual dinner in connection with South Milford Cricket Club was held at the White Swan Hotel, South Milford, and about fifty persons partook of an excellent repast, provided by Mr and Mrs Alf. Johnson.

Mr William Crosland, J.P., (President of the Club), was in the chair, and he was supported by the Rev. E. J. Barry, M.A. (rector of South Milford), and Councillors J. Carr, E. Pettinger, and R. T. Hill, Messrs P. Porter (Sherburn Hall), Dr. A. H. Radcliffe, Messrs Arthur Dennison, (Sherburn), James Powell, J. B. Hill, W. Ledger, Hy. Sutton, etc. After the loyal toasts had been honoured,

The Hon. Sec. (Mr F. Hyman) read the report, which showed that the club, eleven had played 15 matches, won 11, lost 2, and 2 were drawn. The second eleven played 11, won 4, lost 5, and 2 were drawn.

Mr J. Wice, the hon. treas., read the balance sheet, which showed a balance in hand of £9 13s. 2d., and commented on the fact that during the 33 years' existence of the club there had never been an adverse balance.

"Success to South Milford C.C." was proposed by the Rev. E. J. Barry. He said he had played cricket when a young man, and had always been interested in it. The hon. secretary's and hon. treasurer's reports were of a very gratifying nature. Mr Wice had remarked about the difficulty of the wall at the field side, where people watched the games without paying, and which was called the "grand stand." It appeared to him that at Moortown flying ground people there had copied that "grand stand." (Laughter). He hoped the playing members would still play in the pure amateur spirit. He noticed that in football there was professionalism, and they had a "strike." He hoped they would strike, but let them only strike the cricket ball. He heartily wished the club every success. (Applause).

Mr R. Pickering responded, and said there was great encouragement for the future, and he hoped they would have a successful year in all respects.

Mr. Hy. Heselgrave, the new captain, also spoke. He said he hoped they would use their best endeavours to win the Barkston Ash Cups next season. (Hear, hear).

Mr Powell proposed "The President," and said Mr Crosland had always taken a deep interest in the club, formerly as captain, and financially he had done his best for it. (Hear, hear). The toast was drunk with musical honours.

The President said he hoped the players would give their captain their solid support on and off the field. He wished the club every prosperity.

Mr Wice proposed "The host and hostess," and Mr Johnson responded.

Dr Radcliffe gave a recitation, and songs were rendered by Messrs Cliff (Aberforth), P. Porter, J. Wice, J. Hill, J. Wallis (Micklefield), J. Walls, J. T. Jackson, G. Pettinger, and R. Houlden.

The magistrates at Tadcaster Petty Sessions on Monday were Mr J. M. Dawson (in the chair) and Mr H. Ingleby.

AMBULANCE WORK.—At the recent examinations held in connection with the Voluntary Aid Detachment the following passed for First Aid certificates:—Mrs Atkin, Miss Ellis, Miss Foster, Mrs Hepworth, Mrs Lupton, Miss M. Prudence, Miss Richardson, Miss B. Rishworth, Mrs Roberts, Mrs Simpson, Miss M., Simpson, Mrs Thompson, Mrs B. Whitehouse, Miss Wiley, and Miss J. Wither. Mrs E. PRESENTATION TO TADCASTER POSTMASTER.

On Friday evening a presentation was made at the Falcon Inn, Tadcaster, to Mr T. G. Berwick, postmaster, of Tadcaster, who has received a better appointment at Downham Market, Norfolk.

Mr J. H. Hull presided, and there were also present Mr W. Sykes, Mr C. Moverley, Mr C. Jackson, Mr J. H. Froggatt, Mr S. Buxton, Mr E. Payne, Mr E. Jackson, Mr L. S. Collins, Mr W. Milsom, Mr A. T. Fitton, Mr F. Hullay, Mr W. Wilcock, Mr J. Cowap, Mr T. Waddington, Mr H. A. Smith, Mr T. Doyle, and others, practically all the interests in the town being represented.

One of the presents had been subscribed for by friends in the town, on whose behalf it was handed over by Mr Sykes, and it consisted of a beautifully chased silver-plated tray, and an electro-plated tea and coffee service.

Mr Ramsdale, on behalf of the inside staff of the post office, presented to Mr Berwick a case of silver salts and spoons, and Mr C. Iredale, for the postmen, presented a dinner cruet.

At a smoker which followed songs were sung by Messrs F. Hullay, E. Jackson, W. Milsom, C. Walker, and L. S. Collins, and a recitation was given by Mr C. Jackson.

ROTHWELL EDUCATION COMMITTEE.

A meeting of the Rothwell Education Committee was held on Friday.

The Clerk read a letter from the headteacher of the Stourton School, reporting that the class for children under five was full and asking that they might stop admitting children under this age.

The Clerk said he had written to the headteacher saying that he did not think the committee would agree to this course being adopted, but suggesting that in order to make room some of the children in the lower classes be moved up.

The Clerk's action in the matter was upheld.

It was reported that the caretaker of the Middleton School had had his salary raised, as recommended, from £23 to £30.

The Inspectors to the Robin Hood, Rothwell Council (mixed department), and Carlton Schools were received and considered highly satisfactory.

Aberford Church School had the best attendance of all the schools in Garforth district last month. The percentage was 94 against 83.64 in December, 1912.

At Tadcaster Petty Sessions on Monday Mr Henry Turton, of Tadcaster, applied for an exemption from vaccination for his child, and it was granted.

Mr G. R. Lane Fox, M.P., and Mr John Pickering, of Thorner, and Major Dent, Ribston Hall, have been appointed by the County Council members of the Yorkshire Fishery Board.

DRINK.—On Monday at Tadcaster Petty Sessions Emily Smith, married woman, of Marston, was charged with drunkenness. She did not appear, and, after evidence by P.C. Cole, she was fined 2s. 6d. and costs.

ROTHWELL & DISTRICT JOTTINGS.

The Garforth Urban Council have had under consideration a scheme for re-organizing their staff with a view to obtaining greater efficiency in the various departments, and I understand to the recommendation of a committee will be brought forward at the meeting next month. Although I do not know the details of the proposal, upon which the Council are not unanimous, I believe it involves certain changes, and it is possible a lively discussion will ensue on the question. It seems that the ratepayers—if not the Council—have had this subject under discussion for some time, and a number of people have expressed an opinion upon it. Of course, until one learns what the committee's proposal is it would be idle to say anything about it.

Will Tadcaster, Wetherby, and Selby Guardians follow suit? In the Hunslet Union, which includes Rothwell, Templenewsam, Middleton, and Oulton-with-Woodlesford, coal is supplied during the cold weather, which, I presume, means winter and early spring, to all recipients of outdoor relief, and a return of the additional cost at the end of the year will be interesting. At last meeting of the Guardians it was stated that five persons had received coal from a private source, and the relieving officer inquired what he was to do in these cases. The Guardians gave instructions that fuel is to be supplied when necessity arises, and this is perfectly reasonable. Of course, it is obvious that charitably-inclined people who have bestowed gifts of coal on the poor will now be something in pocket, but the Guardians, seeing they are giving coal, have adopted a just plan by making the poor all alike.

All Garforth and his wife were at the second Gilchrist lecture—the attendance was quite as large as it was at the first meeting—and the residents were told many things about themselves that they did not know. How many, for instance, were aware that hearing, smelling, and tasting depended upon the vibration of certain hairs? People generally believe that a cat can see in the dark, but the explanation of one half of pussy's eyes being different to the other half, and being particularly sensitive to movement of any kind explains much. The fact that only monkeys and men have the "yellow spot" in their eyes—the seat of direct vision—might have caused some uneasiness among the audience, because it is not pleasant to reflect that the mischievous-looking apes people see in menageries are distant relations of the human family. It tends to hurt the dignity of humans who have a high opinion of themselves. But, to go further back, as the lecturer said, it is rather galling to think that one has evolved from something like jelly fish. After all, what a wonderful creation man is, and, if scientists are to be believed, it has taken a jolly long time to make him.

The lecturer, who had a better delivery than that genial astronomer, Father Corti, was in excellent form, and if he had had another half-hour to spend with the Garforthians some interesting questions, elucidating his remarks, might have been asked. "Seeing is believing" is what one frequently hears, but Dr. Hill showed how mistaken people are about the accuracy of eyesight. I notice that certain experiments in this connection have been carried out at Harvard University among trained observers, and they have yielded surprising results. The tests have shown that even in describing the most vivid scene, human beings are endowed with a real genius both for seeing what is not there and for not seeing what is there. Dr. Hill, at Garforth, made some drawings on a blackboard to prove that "seeing is not always believing," and I notice that a University professor made some experiments of the same kind in his class. He held up a large sheet of white cardboard on which fifty little black squares were pasted in irregular order. Having shown it for five seconds, he asked his students to say how many black spots were on the sheet. The answers ranged from twenty-five to two hundred. This, however, was one of many experiments, and one wonders whether or not half the evidence given in police courts is reliable. It would be interesting for someone to submit to certain observation experiments, in order that he may fully appreciate the inaccuracy of the saying that "seeing is believing."

Mr Brotherton, of Roundhay, the Lord Mayor of Leeds, who has hunted for some 30 years with the various hunts in the district, found himself at Gateforth, on Saturday, in the unique position of being the only horseman present at the time the meeting was advertised to take place of the Bramham Moor Hunt. There had been a heavy frost during the previous night, and about 11.15 a wire was received from Mr G. R. Lane Fox, M.P., the Master, to the effect that hunting was impossible owing to the keen frost. A large number of spectators were very much disappointed at the hounds being unable to come. Mr Brotherton waited some time on the village green and informed several others who eventually arrived that the meet was postponed, and left in his motor for home shortly before 12 noon.

Boston Spa—one of the prettiest places in the district—is up against the lighting problem. At Rothwell and Wetherby, the good folks have the Man in the Moon to contend with. The arrangement as to the illumination of the village appears to be that on certain nights before full moon and certain nights after, the lamps are not lighted, but when the Man in the Moon forgets or neglects to switch on his lamp the place is in darkness on these nights, and, of course, his behaviour has compelled the "fathers" to reconsider the arrangements. In order to outwit the presiding genius of the luminary it has been decided to ask for the lamps to be lighted when the moon does not appear, and to leave them unlighted on bright nights, so that there would be no encroaching on the present arrangement as to the number of nights when lighting should be given. However, the only way to get satisfaction is to have the lamps lighted every night during the season.

Apparently a new Electric Light Co. is at work, endeavouring to get the formation of companies for the lighting of small villages, and Boston Spa is one of the places the promoters have fixed upon. No details as to the capital needed, methods of procedure, or anything else are forthcoming, so it is a case of "wait and see." In Boston Spa, however, it would be possible to utilize the waters of the Wharfe in connection with an electric lighting scheme, and considerable cost would be thus saved.

Hunslet Rural District Council will probably be asked to find a solution for the housing problem at Woodlesford, because the Parish Council have decided to discuss it at their next meeting. At one time it was stated that the Colliery Co. intended to erect a large number of cottages for their workmen, but they have apparently reconsidered the question, and only a limited number is to be built. They probably think they can put their capital to better purpose. Where private enterprise will provide for the needs of the community it is a mistake, I believe, for a public body to start building houses, but, on the other hand, where there is a demand for houses which is not met by private enterprise a certain responsibility devolves on the authority.

A demand for houses, no doubt, exists at Woodlesford. The colliery now employs about a thousand men, and the majority of them, I believe, have their homes in Leeds. Were there a sufficiency of good houses in the district many of these men would reside near their work, and the district would benefit by the development of its industry, and local traders would receive increased returns. At the present time Oulton-with-Woodlesford is not receiving the full advantage of its industry, because the bulk of the money earned in the district is going out of it. Selby Urban Council have carried through a successful building scheme, and the town has received the benefit of it, but the conditions are not precisely the same as at Woodlesford.

The "Courier" has readers in all parts of the world, and to Barkston Ash—men abroad nothing is so welcome as the local paper. People living in the villages know what is going on around them and they think nothing about it, but to the sojourner in a distant land every scrap of news connected with his native district has a wonderful interest. We are always pleased to receive communications from readers abroad, and in another column we publish a letter from Mr Hardwick, a Newthorpe man, who now resides in Australia.

He writes concerning the disposition of the money raised for the relief of the sufferers by the colliery disaster at Micklefield, and his suggestion anent pensions for miners is one that might conceivably receive the consideration of the trustees. Recently a meeting of persons connected with the administration of such funds in all parts of the country was held in London with a view to the formation of a national fund, but I believe the trustees of the Micklefield Fund prefer to retain the money they have, and probably they will bring forward a scheme or schemes for the benefit of the mining population, for whom the money was really obtained. It is, therefore, possible that our correspondent's suggestion may receive consideration.

When is the railway footpath and bridge at Crossgates to be lighted? The Corporation have, I believe, decided to undertake the work, which was delayed owing to the "strike," but surely something can be done now. The footpath was set apart for the use of the public by the N.E.R. Co. on condition that it was maintained and lighted by the local authority, and, no matter what one may think of the bargain, the Corporation are bound by the agreement. The bridge is dangerous at night, and it is surprising that no serious accident has occurred this winter. Will the Lighting Committee, please, hurry up?

A Sherburn man has raised the open window question again, but it seems to be as far off settlement as ever. It is frequently claimed that the person sitting facing the engine and nearest the window of a railway carriage should have the option of saying whether the window should be open or not, but what of the man sitting next to the person nearest the window? He is in the draught quite as much as the other man, and surely he should have some say in the matter. Again, if a majority of persons in a compartment are against a window being open should not this view receive due consideration? This is a vexed question, and a year or two ago men came to blows following a dispute about the open window, causing quite a commotion outside Crossgates. The only safe plan to work upon, apparently, is to ascertain the opinion of the people in the compartment and act upon it.

Crossgates people no doubt have a good opinion of themselves—have they not been styled "tin dukes" by Barwick neighbours—but the man who is alleged to have said—"I'd set fire to them" seemed very anxious to mete out punishment before the judgment. If it were known that the residents were to be consumed "before their time" Crossgates, despite its preferential rating would soon be to let, and it would be difficult to gather them together again for a grand conflagration. The best plan is to leave them alone; there is no saying what they may come to.

Prejudice accounts for many decisions in public work. Monk Fryston, Hillam, and Burton Salmon are in Pontefract Union, and the Guardians had under consideration the other day the question of saving money by providing the workhouse inmates with margarine instead of butter, but despite the information by a parson that he and his family use the humble "spread" the public administrators decided that they would not defile the aristocratic stomachs of the inmates by making them eat butter substitute. Hunslet Guardians, as I have before stated, were neatly "done" once in regard to margarine. They would not hear of its introduction into the institutions, and one of their number substituted it for butter at the Guardians' tea table. Not a word was said until the end of the meal, and then they were surprised to know that they had eaten margarine and enjoyed it.

Admission to school of children under five years of age has frequently been discussed by the Garforth District Education Committee, who were by no means in agreement with the Authority on the question, and the same subject has cropped up now at Stourton and Oulton. It is argued by opponents that the expenditure on school space to provide for toddlers of from three to five is an unnecessary burden on the ratepayers, that children of tender years are more susceptible to disease than the older scholars, and that an increased staff of teachers, involving considerable cost, is required in consequence of their admission.

One gentleman stated that it was "simply making a nursery of the school, and parents were getting children off their hands at the expense of the ratepayers." That is perfectly true. The only good thing that one can say about it is that some children are better at school than at home, and the benefit derived by the little ones is an argument used by advocates of the system. But it is not education, and it was never intended that public elementary schools should be turned into nurseries.

CONSERVATISM AT CROSSGATES.

THE ULSTER QUESTION.

On Wednesday evening a very successful "social," promoted by the Conservative Association and the local Habitation of the Primrose League was held in the Manston Schools, Crossgates, and there was a very large attendance. The early part of the evening was devoted to music, and songs were rendered by Messrs Sugden, Harper, Mann, and Slater, and Miss Simpson. Thereafter tea and coffee were served to the company.

About ten o'clock Mr G. R. Lane Fox, M.P., who had just come back from London, arrived, and he was given a capital reception. He was accompanied by the Hon. Mrs Lane Fox and Mr D. B. Wilson, J.P.

Mr Wilson, who presided, said that Mr Lane Fox had been to London and back that day—this time to rout out Mr John Burns. Mr Burns had his good points, but he was, nevertheless, one of the most dangerous and autocratic of our democratic Ministers. Parliament allowed him to make his own laws, and he quietly slipped in clauses to suit himself, and the Court of Appeal was Mr Burns himself. He need not say very much about Mr Lloyd George. Everybody, he thought, had begun to find him out, and some of them had felt the pinch for a long time. It was now certain that Mr Lloyd George would have to face a huge deficit. That was partly due to the unconsidered measures for which he was responsible, partly to his reckless finance, and partly to the naval holiday which was perhaps amongst the earliest of the youthful indiscretions in which Ministry indulged. They practically ceased building ships, and this resulted in the wild race of ship-building which had prevailed throughout Europe, Asia, and America. In particular it resulted in the famous German Naval Act of 1909, which announced in the plainest terms the methods that were to be adopted by Germany in order to overthrow the naval supremacy of our Fleet, and they at once proceeded to carry those methods into practice. The Prime Minister, however, had preserved a resolute demeanour, and as Mr Winston Churchill had no love for being under-dog, he had no doubt he would strive to see that this country kept her position as mistress of the seas. If he did not he would have the support of all present. (Applause). As to how Mr Lloyd George would meet the deficit they must "wait and see." It had been suggested that the Members of Parliament would be in a hurry to divest themselves of the £400 a year to which they were lately treated—(laughter)—and he was also told that a tax on bachelors was being considered. (Laughter and applause). What about Ireland? There they found civil war in front of them, and it was due to the Home Rule Bill. The Parliament Act prevented any possibility of amending it, and if it was forced through there must be civil war. The Government must choose between that and a General Election. Their course in the Barkston Ash Division was clear, and when the day of battle came they must work their hardest to return once more as their champion a man who had served them so long and ably in the past, and who had spared no effort to promote the true interests of all his constituents. (Applause).

Mr Lane Fox, who was loudly applauded, explained that he had been to London on the County Council deputation to Mr John Burns in regard to the formation and the extension of London boroughs. He said that one heard that the Cabinet were all at sixes and sevens on the Navy question, and that at any moment they might expect a split, but he advised them not to take it seriously. A good many of them had been amused during the last two or three days about what had been going on among their friends, the Labour Party. The word "independent" as applied to them was a farce and a sham, for there were no more faithful supporters of the Liberal Party. They had got a very strenuous session coming on—a session which would have great and serious results. In regard to the Home Rule Bill, he said they were face to face with a serious conflict in Ulster, and something must be done. The Government could either exclude Ulster and avoid a conflict, or they could appeal to the electors. If they appealed to the country and won it would be impossible for any constitutional party to go against Home Rule. When they had once the clearly expressed view of the country all parties must make the best of it. And the Unionist Party were convinced that the country had never been consulted on the question. They were driving into serious danger, and it was to use the Liberal Party trying to divert attention from it by talking about housing and land, which were fruitful subjects and would be quite enough when the time came for dealing with them. What they wanted them to discuss was what they were doing now, and why it was they were so anxious to turn attention to other matters. It was possible that to get out of the Irish difficulty the Government might appeal to the country, and he hoped they would. If that was so, he would have an opportunity of appealing to them for an emphatic vote against the Government, and more especially against a Bill that was likely to lead the country into disaster. (Applause).

Mr Chadwick, in proposing a vote of thanks to Mr and Mrs Lane Fox, said that when Crossgates was struggling against the Leeds annexation scheme they did no greet a great deal of help from the County Council, and they were told that Crossgates did not count—(laughter)—and that if it went to Leeds it would be a benefit to the district it was taken from. They were told that so many times that they came to believe it. (Laughter). Some of them now on public bodies in Leeds, when they got in a bill for compensation for the loss of Crossgates, and when they saw the pounds, shillings, and pence value set on them, got up and said they were really estimable people but they did not represent that value. (Laughter). Their object was to get that compensation reduced, and to get back to the position before the incorporation, when they were said to be of little value. (Laughter). They fought as best they could, and they had to give in. There was one consolation, however; they were pleased and proud to remain part of Barkston Ash Division. They were always delighted to meet Mr Lane Fox, and when on election came they would see that he was returned at the head of the poll. (Applause).

Mr P. S. Marsden (Whitkirk) seconded, and the resolution was cordially passed.

Mr Lane Fox, in reply, laughingly explained that the business on which he was engaged in London had nothing to do with the compensation Leeds would have to pay. He pleaded not guilty to taking money from Crossgates. (Laughter).

Subsequently the floors were cleared, and dancing was merrily engaged in by the company.

FARM HANDS AND WAGES AND HOUSES

Addressing a meeting at York Mr Seebohm Rowntree said that the policy of the Government was to give the agricultural worker a living wage. That was the first step, but there required to be other factors in his life. The Government was determined that these labourers should be satisfactorily housed, and that there should be an adequate supply of sanitary houses. The Government committee had made investigations in 2,000 villages, and in half of these there was a shortage of houses. This led to various consequences; it led in the first place to appalling overcrowding. He could give them instances where people were living under conditions which a farmer would not allow his cattle or horses to live under. The overcrowding led to immorality, to a low standard of life, to harm to the health of the country. It also led to the depopulation of the countryside, to the very serious loss of time through people being unable to get to and from their work and to the gross evils which frequently were got with the tied house system. They had come across most pathetic instances of real hardship, when a man was given a week's notice by a farmer and bundled out at the end of the week. There was other work for him in the village, but he could not take it because he could not get a house. They had to get rid of the appalling tyranny that was possible under a system of this kind. The labourer had practically to submit to the terms the farmer put upon him. One reason for the shortage of houses for the agricultural labourer was that the rent paid by the labourer did not give a commercial return upon the capital that had been invested, and the reason for that was that the wages were so low that the labourer could not pay more. That was all well enough, until the provision of houses by private means ran out, and there was a shortage. He did not think they would be far out if they put it that 120,000 new houses were required in order to meet the deficiency.

FOWL STEALING AT SHERBURN.—At a Special Court at Sherburn held on Saturday last—before Rev. B. Hemsworth and Mr Walter Cromland—Robert Lazenby, labourer, Sherburn, pleaded guilty to a charge of theft between 11 a.m. on 22nd January and 8 a.m. on the 23rd January, from a poultry run in Kirkgate, Sherburn, belonging to Arthur Hayes, greengrocer, Sherburn. Arthur Hayes said that he examined his poultry run about 11 a.m. on the 22nd inst., and on the 23rd inst. out of 14 birds one was missing, and he did not give the prisoner permission to take the hen away. He gave information to the police. P.C. Parkinson said that from something said to him on the 23rd January he examined the poultry run and traced feathers to the prisoner's house. He searched the house and found the fowl cooking in the oven, and he discovered feathers in a bag. The prisoner was present. He conveyed him to the Police Station and charged him with stealing a white hen belonging to Arthur Hayes. In reply the prisoner said "Yes, I did it, as I had nothing to eat." Prisoner was fined 2s. 6d. and £1 costs, or 14 days in default.

CHAPTER XXI.

When he left Eaton-square Sir John decided that it was high time to drive straight to the works—it was his usual practice to arrive there at ten o'clock, and he was already nearly an hour late. All the way there he was thinking of the interview which had just ended, and his active, scheming brain was canvassing various chances which seemed to arise out of it. Chief and foremost was the chance of Miss Delomosne telling Laurence Workman of the facts now in her possession.

"But in my impression she'll not," he decided. "For one thing this news about Penerose will keep her occupied for a while, and for another she'll hesitate before very quiet; for another she'll hesitate before doing anything that will bother Sir Herbert. If only Sabatier would hasten and get the thing across to Berlin we might be first. I'll wire him again this morning, and Bremond too. How's Workman making all speed and we're doing nothing."

However, when he reached the works he found that some progress had been made with at least one of his numerous plannings and contrivings. The porter at the gates handed him a small package, which appeared from the feel and shape of it to contain a cardboard box wrapped securely in stout cartridge paper and heavily sealed. This was addressed to Sir John Bedford and marked "Private," and the handwriting was unfamiliar to its recipient. But he saw at once that it had been written by a foreigner; presumably, from the shape of certain letters, by a German.

Sir John carried the package up to his own private room, and placed it in a drawer while he occupied himself with his secretary and his letters. When the secretary had gone away and left him alone he took out the package, said, breaking the seals, cut the envelopes string. Within the paper was an oblong cigarette-box, and in the cigarette-box, cardboard box wrapped securely in stout cartridge-

GILCHRIST LECTURES AT GARFORTH

DR. HILL ON "THE SENSES."

IS SEEING BELIEVING?—INTERESTING INFORMATION.

"The Senses: Newsagents of the Mind," the second of the series of Gilchrist lectures at Garforth, was delivered in the Central Hall of the Council School on Friday night by Mr Alex. Hill, M.A., M.D., F.R.C.S., who was at one time Master of Downing College, Cambridge. Mr H. Hudson, J.P., of Potterton Hall, presided, and there was again a capital attendance, the room being crowded.

The Chairman, in introducing the lecturer, stated that it gave him very great pleasure in presiding, and he was delighted to see such a large attendance, which showed that the guarantors were fully justified in arranging for the lectures. He was pleased to be present because he thought it was one's duty to do the best one could for those amongst whom one lived—(applause)—and he owed some debt of gratitude to this Gilchrist lecture, because he remembered on a bad he walked to Wakefield to hear lectures on fossils and geology, and they gave him an idea of research which had been useful to him in after life. (Applause).

Dr Hill, who has an excellent delivery, prefaced his lecture with the assertion of Leibnitz and Locke that "there can be nothing in the intellect which has not reached it through the senses." There would be no world for him if he could not hear, see, smell, and taste; he was the sum of his sensations. One of the most remarkable instances of sensory deprivation was of two American girls, named Laura Bridgeman and Helen Keller, who became both blind and deaf soon after birth. Could they imagine what it would be like if the world were absolutely dark and silent? The girls had, however, the sense of touch, and by this means they learnt to "speak" not only English, but French and German. Last winter he was staying at Menston Asylum—he got out all right—(laughter)—and there he met one of his fellow-patients—(laughter)—a man about 50 years old who was being treated as a gibbering idiot. A few simple tests proved that that man's brain was as good as his, but he had been born blind and deaf and had not been fortunate in having a teacher like the American girls. The wisdom of mankind was placed at the disposal of the human child, but the child must cultivate the organs of observation before he could take it in. Let them try and imagine baby's feelings. He saw and heard, and he looked so intelligent that he surely understood a great deal of what was said to him—if they said it in baby language, of course. (Laughter). Whenever he got the chance he touched things, and his eye explored his surroundings; yet he was a long time before he could trust his eye or hearing. In fact, it was not right to speak of baby smelling, seeing, or touching, because he did all these things at once. He had to learn to discriminate—to distinguish his sensations. If they took a Hottentot to a grand concert he would not recognise the different instruments. It took a trained musician many years of study before he could distinguish and appraise at their proper value all the sounds that issued from the band. So baby heard and saw all at once, and his education, his knowledge of himself and of the world, proceeded simultaneously.

How was it they had such a marvellously perfect eye? It was developed by a long process of evolution. Let them imagine a time when the earth became cool enough to allow organisms to make their appearance upon it; they had to struggle for food or escape from organisms which would have devoured them; and every little improvement in the structure of the organism helped it in the struggle, secured for it the dominance, and, therefore, its perpetuation. After stating the beginnings of animal life, he said that there came into existence differentsenses—organs which were especially sensitive to the kind of vibration which most frequently played upon them, and at last it came about that they had the eye. A view of the jelly fish, with its little eyes, was shown, and it was explained that it could not distinguish form, but could see the difference between light and shade. Subsequently he dealt with the vision of the dragon-fly, the bee, the wasp, and the moth, and then he explained the structure of the eye of the cat and horse, explaining how animals were more sensitive to movement than to objects.

Exhibiting a view of the human eye, he stated that only man and the monkey had a "yellow spot" on the retina—the region of direct vision, and this was the only kind of vision in which minute details of form were recognisable. The horse, he said, when a newspaper got about its legs, could not distinguish it; what it saw was a white patch, and he explained that one part of the retina of animals' eyes was backed by a shiny substance in order to make it extraordinarily sensitive to movement.

In an interesting way, he showed the structure of the ear, nose, and tongue, and stated that hearing, smelling, and tasting were caused by vibrating hairs in the various organs, views of which were thrown on the screen. Were they to believe the messages these organs telegraphed to the brain? Smell was the oldest and by far the most subtle of the senses, but so much was it neglected that in most men even fifty the sense of smell from disuse had almost left itself away. As to the saying that "seeing is believing," he gave several convincing blackboard illustrations of visual illusions to show that seeing is never believing in the absence of confirmation by the sense of touch.

At the close of the lecture, Mr H. J. Denby (Chairman of the Committee) expressed the indebtedness of the audience to Dr. Hill for his highly instructive lecture. They had all been most interested, and they would all go away with more knowledge of the organs they possessed and put them to better use. He proposed a vote if thanks to Dr. Hill, and it was very cordially passed.

Mr Herbert Gascoigne, in proposing a vote of thanks to Mr Childe, said that he had discharged his duties admirably. Mr Childe had stated the claim of the community upon the services of the individual, and in the district where he lived Mr Childe was always willing to help the people round about him. (Applause). The vote was passed.

The Chairman, in reply, urged the Committee to continue the lectures in future years, and if he could help them either by presiding or by becoming a guarantor he should be pleased to do so. It would be better, he thought, if they had more lectures and fewer picture houses. (Applause).

The first annual dinner of the Garforth Golf Club has been arranged for Friday, February 6th. The accounts for the year, it is said, show that the deficiency is only between £30 and £40. For a first season, with an unfinished course, the result must be regarded as satisfactory and encouraging.

A SWILLINGTON MAN IN TROUBLE

A SATURDAY NIGHT SCENE.

MINER WHO REFUSED TO PAY HIS FARE.

A scene on a crowded Leeds tramcar on a Saturday night was followed by the appearance of George Goodyear, miner, of Swillington, in the Leeds Police Court on Tuesday. There were three summonses against him. One was for using obscene language on a tramcar; the second for refusing to pay his fare; and the third for assaulting the conductor, Thomas Stevenson.

Mr G. Knowles, of the Town Clerk's Office, who prosecuted, said the affair took place about 10 p.m. on Saturday, the 10th inst., on a car going from Boar Lane to Chapeltown. From Lowell Street onwards for about three hundred yards, confusion reigned on the car.

Defendant apparently got on the car in Briggate whilst the conductor was upstairs collecting fares. The car was very crowded and eight or ten people were standing inside. Stevenson went up to a woman and she said, "Two, Winton Street"—two penny fares. He punched two tickets and the woman then said "He will pay," indicating the defendant.

Goodyear accepted the tickets from the conductor, and said "She'll pay." The conductor was interference in the awkward predicament of not knowing from whom to get the payment. After collecting some other fares he returned to the man and said "Who is going to pay, I want twopence?" The defendant's reply was Go to ——." At the same time he tore up one of the tickets, threw it in Stevenson's face, and struck him in the mouth. The man apparently had been drinking, but was not drunk.

The blow was the signal for general confusion. Everyone wanted to proffer advice and opinions and there was a perfect babel. The conductor heard very disgusting language from Goodyear, and when the latter got off the car he followed him to get his name and address.

The defendant took off his coat and struck Stevenson three blows. In consequence a large crowd gathered, and two police officers were summoned.

An independent witness said Goodyear threatened to kill the conductor, and a man, who was with Goodyear, tried to incite Stevenson "to put his duties up."

The defendant, who was represented by Mr B Bailey, denied the charges, and said the woman was not with him at all. He was never asked for his name and it was only when the conductor tried to stop him getting off the car and called him "a foul-looking pig" that he took off his coat.

The defendant was fined 40s. and costs for not paying his fare.

SUSPICIOUS BEHAVIOUR AT STOURTON

SMART CAPTURE BY SKYRACK POLICE.

At the Leeds West Riding Petty Sessions on Tuesday William Buckle, a labourer, of no fixed abode, was charged with being found on enclosed premises at Stourton.

P.C. Sowray stated that when, in the company of P.S. Matthews about 6.45 a.m. on Friday, January 23rd, at Stourton, he saw the prisoner go towards some coal sidings. They lost sight of him for a while, but a little later saw him against a lobby in which the workman kept their food.

Witness and his superior officer went up to him and found him trying to unfasten the lock. When asked what he was doing there, he said that he had gone for a warm and something to eat. He also said he had been there before.

P.S. Matheas said he had received several complaints from workmen at the sidings about food being stolen between 6 a.m. and 8 a.m. The prisoner had some little time ago worked at the sidings and knew the run of the place.

The Bench committed Buckle to prison for fourteen days.

RUNAWAY HORSES AT WOODLESFORD.

POLICE OFFICER COMMENDED FOR BRAVERY.

At the Leeds West Riding Petty Sessions on Tuesday Arthur Harrison, teamster, of Rothwell, was summoned for not having proper control of a two-horse dray on January 5th.

P.C. Bennett stated that about 6.5 p.m. on the day in question he was in Church Street, Woodlesford, when he saw two horses attached to a dray galloping towards him. There were several children playing in the road and these the officer quickly gathered to one side of the road. As the horses approached he found that there was no driver in charge, and he endeavoured to stop them, and succeeded in bringing them to a standstill in about fifty yards. After a short interval the defendant came up and took charge of the horses.

Defendant said he had stopped at the "John o' Gaunt's for a drink and he had hardly got inside the inn when the horses bolted. He gave chase, but could not get up to them.

He was fined 10s. and costs.

P.C. Bennett was called up by the Chairman, who complimented him upon his bravery, and he asked Supt. Symonds to bring the matter before the notice of the Chief Constable.

CRUELTY TO A HORSE AT OULTON

CHARGE AT THE SKYRACK COURT.

At the Leeds West Riding Petty Sessions on Tuesday Walter Binks, a hawker, of Hunslet, was summoned for cruelty to a mare.

P.C. Hutchinson stated that about 7.30 p.m. on January 13th, he was on the Leeds Road, Oulton, when he saw defendant in charge of a dark brown mare, which had fallen down. The animal was attached to a flat cart containing a ton of coal.

The mare was got up, but fell down again. The officer examined her, and found it to be sweating, while on the shoulders beneath the saddle there was a sore 3½ inches wide by 2½ inches long covered with dry matter. Witness drew the attention of Binks to the sore, and the defendant replied that he had groomed the animal for three months but had never seen it before.

The officer told him that he should not have tried to get the mare to pull the load up the John o' Gaunt's Hill, which is a mile long and very steep. Defendant said the previous day it had pulled 17 cwt. up the hill.

Inspector Scanbridge, R.S.P.C.A., corroborated the last officer's statement about the sore, and said he had kept the animal under observation ever since the case had been reported. He believed defendant had done all he could for it, as he had not worked it.

The Bench fined defendant 10s. and costs.

A BARKSTON CATTLE DEALER FATALLY INJURED

A CHURCH FENTON TRAGEDY.

THE LIGHTING OF A ROAD.

An inquest was held in the Leeds Town Hall by the City Coroner (Mr J. C. Malcolm) on Tuesday afternoon on the body of Mr George Bean, a well-known cattle dealer, of Barkston Ash, who died in the Leeds Infirmary on Sunday morning, as the result of injuries sustained at Church Fenton by being knocked down by a motor-car belonging to Dr. Pickersgill, Sherburn-in-Elmet, on Friday night.

Mr A. Masser appeared for the driver of the car.

Dr. Keswick, of the Leeds Infirmary, said the deceased was unconscious when admitted on Saturday and remained so until death. There was a large lacerated wound on the scalp and there was an extensive fracture right round the skull. Both bones of the left leg had been fractured, and the right elbow had been injured. Death occurred on Sunday, and was due to a laceration of the brain.

The widow, Hannah Bean, said her husband was 65 years of age and was a cattle dealer. About 8.30 a.m. on Friday he left home to make a round of the villages a few miles out. She did not know what time he was likely to return, but the next she heard of him was when she was called to Dr. Pickersgill's surgery. Her husband was in good health when he left home. She could not say how the accident happened.

By Mr Masser: She learned that deceased had left his sister's home as Church Fenton, about ten minutes' walk from the scene of the accident, about eight o'clock. She knew the spot very well; it was a very nasty part and was not lighted.

Mr Masser: You know the matter of lighting this part of the road has been before the Parish Council, District Council, and the Railway Co. for some time?

Witness: Yes.

Mr Masser: I believe resolutions have been passed calling upon the Railway Co. to light it.

Witness: Yes, I have heard that.

Mr Masser: The road rises, and then two paths drop. In fact, some people, thinking they are following the road, find themselves in the goods yard, and still the Railway Company for some reason, decline to put up a light?

Witness: Yes.

Inspector John Fleeman, stationed at Sherburn-in-Elmet, said he had made enquiries after death had taken place, but could not find anyone who actually saw the accident.

The Coroner: You have heard some description of the road given by Mr Masser and heard it described as a dangerous road, do you agree?

Witness: It is rather a dangerous road and quite as Mr Masser as put it to the last witness. There are no lights at all.

The Coroner: The Company could not be called upon to put up a light unless it was their private property?

Witness: No, sir.

He added, in answer to Mr J. C. Malcolm, that the driver of the car was very careful and a teetotaller.

Mr Masser (to the witness): Do you know, as a matter of fact, that the roadway at this point has been built and is maintained by the Railway Company, and that the Parish Council would be willing to put up a light if they had the power?

Witness: Yes, I have heard that.

Mr Masser: An oil lamp would be sufficient?

Witness: Yes.

Mr Masser: You say you know the driver of the car.

Witness: Yes, I have known him for about four months.

The Coroner, at this stage, intimated that it would be better to call the driver in order to get his evidence.

Henry Pargeter explained that he was the driver for Dr. Pickersgill, Sherburn-in-Elmet. On the night of the accident he was driving the car from his home to Church Fenton about Barkston. He regarded the place as very dangerous at night. The car was lighted up with four lamps in the front.

Mr Masser: As you approached the station did you give any warning?

Witness: It is my usual custom and I should say I did so, although I cannot remember.

Mr Masser: How far would the lights show?

Witness: About twenty yards.

Mr Masser: What kind of a night was it?

Witness: It was dark, frosty, and a trifle misty, but I could see about fifteen or sixteen yards ahead.

Answering other questions put by Mr Masser, witness said he saw nothing on the road to attract his attention. He was driving in the middle of the road and there was a bump. He was going about ten or twelve miles an hour, but pulled up in about forty or five yards. Taking a lamp from the front of the car, he went back along the road and found Bean lying face downwards in the middle of the road. He was unconscious.

Mr Masser: Do you believe you ran over him.

Witness: Yes, but I knocked him down first, the near side mudguard catching him.

Pargeter described how he obtained assistance and conveyed Bean to Dr. Pickersgill's surgery, and later to the Infirmary. Witness said he had never had any complaint made against him.

The Coroner: What length of experience have you had?

Witness: Two years.

The jury, in returning a verdict of accidental death, exonerated the driver from blame.

Mr Masser asked if the jury would add a rider in regard to the N.E.R. lighting this particular spot. The jury assented, and Mr Masser said he would, as hon. solicitor to the Yorkshire Automobile Club, take the matter up.

A DRINK AT COLTON—"AS A SPORTSMAN."

AMUSING MOTOR-CAR CASE.

Before Judge Longstaff at the Halifax County Court on Friday morning, a rather interesting motor-car case was argued, the point at issue being the sale of a car to a Brighouse picture show proprietor. Mr Richard Watson, instructed by Mr W. F. W. Rhodes, appeared for the plaintiff, S. J. Henry, cinematograph proprietor, Brighouse, and Mr Alf. Masser, Leeds, for the defendants, Messrs Clegg, motor-car engineers, Leeds.

Mr Watson said this was an action to recover a deposit of £50 and to obtain £15 damages in connection with the sale of a motor-car. Plaintiff was the proprietor of the cinema show at the Brighouse Town Hall, and having to relinquish the use of the hall on certain days in the year, when it was required for municipal purposes, he decided on two such days, November 27th and 28th, to visit relations at Ormskirk. For this purpose he decided to buy a motor-car, and Mr Waterfield, a Brighouse motor-car agent, was instructed to purchase a Hubmobile self-starting car from Messrs Clegg, of Leeds, the manager Mr Fitton (Colton), the representative of Messrs Clegg, came over in one of those cars on the 20th. The price was stated as £775. When defendant said he wanted a similar car by the 26th, Mr Fitton said "If it is the case of losing an order you can have one to-morrow." Mr Henry signed a contract purchase form, but put after the word "delivery" then used "immediate." A deposit of £50 was paid. The car was not delivered on the day after the interview with Mr Fitton, nor the day after that. Time went on, and the Hubmobile not being available, Mr Henry hired a Ford car, and used it on his holiday. On December 1st plaintiff's solicitors applied for the return of the deposit. In consequence Mr Fitton came over and tendered a car on December 3rd. Plaintiff said that was no use to him as he had already bought a second-hand car. There were further negotiations, but nothing came of them.

Simeon Joseph Henry, plaintiff, gave evidence, and in cross-examination by Mr Masser, said he saw Mr Fitton and got no satisfaction out of the interview.

Mr Masser: Then why did you go with him for a drink to the public-house at Colton?

Plaintiff: As a sportsman.

His Honour: Is that one of the characteristics of a sportsman? (Laughter).

Mr Masser: And then you had another drink at Leeds with him?—Yes. (Laughter).

The Judge: As a sportsman? (Laughter). Yes.

Mr Masser: Did not Mr Fitton say that the London agents had by telephone told him that they got shipments of these cars every Monday from America, that they could not guarantee executing the order until the second Monday's shipment arrived, and that would be on November 30th?

Plaintiff: If he had said that he would not have got the order.

About this second-hand car; it has been spoken of as purchased, hired, and agreed to purchase. Which is it?—Well, if Mr Waterfield holds me to my agreement I must purchase it.

And if you purchase it you will not pay anything for the use of the car to Ormskirk?—No.

Then why have you put down £10 as the hire of a car in the damages? I suggest that this money was to go to Mr Waterfield as commission on the transaction, and that he was to keep the car and sell it again?—Yes.

The Judge: Then why make this hypothetical claim?

Mr Watson: I have advised my client to withdraw his claim for damages, and our case is confined to the return of the deposit.

The Judge: Very well. But an item of that sort ought never to have been put in. And I suppose this second-hand car which you were to purchase for £95 would be resold for £100?

Plaintiff: I accept your version.

The Judge: And the biggest the fool the bigger the price which would be got from the purchaser. (Laughter). And you agreed to this in order to fulfil your obligations to Mr Waterfield—as a sportsman, I suppose. (Laughter).

After the luncheon interval, Mr Masser asked his Honour to allow the parties a little more time to discuss the matter in private. This his Honour granted.

Later, Mr Masser stated that the case had been withdrawn, an amicable settlement having been come to by the parties. The terms of settlement, he stated, included the plaintiff taking delivery of the car and getting credit for the £50 paid, each to pay own costs.

His Honour gave sanction for the withdrawal of the case.

SELBY FARMERS' UNION.

The annual general meeting of the Selby branch of the National Farmers' Union was held at the Londesborough Hotel, Selby, on Monday afternoon.

Mr R. L. Walker took the chair, and the attendance included Mr Wm. Armstrong, Mr J. Fenton, Mr A. Anson, Mr J. Armstrong, and Mr H. S. Dickson (hon. sec.).

The Hon. Secretary submitted a report, which showed a balance in hand of £15 2s. There were 72 members on the books. The position was similar to the same last year.

Upon the proposition of Mr Wm. Armstrong, the committee was re-appointed, with power to add to their number.

Mr G. T. Fenteman proposed that Mr Wm. Armstrong be re-elected chairman.

Mr J. Jinks seconded the resolution, which was passed unanimously.

Mr Armstrong, in again accepting the office, made an appeal for an increase in the number of members. If the organisation could be brought up to 200 members it would have more weight.

Other officers re-appointed were Mr Andrew Anson, vice-chairman; Mr H. S. Dickson, hon. secretary; and Mr R. L. Walker, delegate to the central meetings.

Mr R. L. Walker, in the course of a brief address, said he would go to the Doncaster meetings with more confidence if he had at his back a larger and more united branch. He should like to see every farmer in the district a member. It was in fact more necessary now than ever that the agricultural industry should be organised. Local taxation had to be dealt with first and foremost, and they looked to having a scheme propounded which would remove unfair treatment to agriculture. Agriculturists paid for things that they ought not to be charged with, at all events not to the same extent as at present.

Mr H. S. Dickson said he believed that now a better prospect was before the branch, and that a larger accession of strength would be secured in the ensuing year.

THE WEEK'S MARKETS.

CORN.

SELBY, Monday.—Better price for wheat, and inquiries were made for good spring corn for seed. Wheats 32s. to 33s., inferior samples 30s. to 31s., barley 29s. to 31s., commoner ditto 26s. to 28s., oats 19s. to 21s., rye 24s. to 25s. per qr.

PROVISIONS.

SELBY, Monday.—Eggs 7½ and 8 for 1s.; butter 1s. 2d. to 1s. 3d. per lb.; chickens 5s. to 6s., rabbits 2s. per couple.

POTATOES.

SELBY, Monday.—A fair trade for the supply on the market. Prices were practically unchanged. Sand Up-to-Dates 50s. to 55s., sand King Edwards 55s. to 62s. 6d., warp King Edwards 60s. to 65s. per ton; retail, 5d. per stone.

CATTLE.

SELBY, Monday.—Messrs Richardson and Son disposed of 137 beasts, 42 sheep, and 50 pigs. A better show of stock, with a good attendance of buyers. Best quality beef met with a fair trade at fully late rates, 8d. to 8s. 2d. per stone. In-calving cows were scarce and dear. No change to note in sheep or pigs, late prices being well maintained. Fat bullocks realised up to £24 12s. 6d., fat heifers to £21 15s., fat cows to £21 15s., fat bulls to £16 5s., store beasts to £11, cows in milk to £16, in-calving cows to £22 17s. 6d., fat hoggs to £2 16s., fat pigs to £8 15s., pork pigs to £6, and store pigs to £2 3s. 6d. each.

WHITKIRK AUCTION MART, Monday.—Messrs Bartle and Son had a large entry of cattle at their fortnightly sale, and buyers were well represented. Dairy cows were in fair demand, except for the roughest kinds, and these were not good to sell. Best newly-calven cows £21 to £27 2s. 6d., useful and medium sorts £18 12s. 6d. to £20 10s., present calvers £21 10s. to £23 12s. 6d. Some good fat cattle were on offer. The demand at the commencement ruled a shade slower, but improved later, the best heifers and bullocks making 7½d., secondary kinds 7d. to 7¾d., and cows 6¾ per lb. Bullocks to £23 7s. 6d., heifers to £22 5s., cows to £24. Fat sheep scarcely realised late quotations, choice shearlings and hoggs making from 10d. to 10½d., and ewes 8d. to 8½d. per lb. Pork pigs made from £3 4s. to £4 16s. each. No store pigs were shown owing to swine fever restrictions. Numbers—85 newly-calven and calving cows, 129 sheep, 87 fat beasts, 9 pigs, and 8 calves.

WETHERBY, Monday.—Messrs Thomlinson and Son had a grand show of both beef and mutton. Beef met a firm good demand, and realised a shade more money than last week. Mutton was a capital show, and sold at about late rates, although rather in favour of buyers. The attendance was in excess of the average, and competition was good, and satisfactory prices were realised. Best beef made from 8s. 6d. to 8s. 9d., medium quality 8s. to 8s. 3d., cows about 7s. 9d. per stone. Shearlings and good hoggs made from 9¾d. to 10¾ per lb. Mr J. Godfrey Long, Spofforth, sold four wealthy bullocks at £26 2s. 6d., £25, £24 12s. 6d., and £22; Mr T. L. Wickham-Boynton, Bocton Spa, sent a grand bullock, which sold for £21; Mr R. Dutton, Bilton Grange, sold two grand beasts at £22 10s. and £17 10s.; Mr R. Belby, Cattal, sent two choice heifers, making £21 7s. 6d. and £18 12s. 6d.; Mr Spencley, Thorparch, supplied two grand heifers, which made £17 5s. and £16 15s.; Mr Bellerby, Cowthorpe, sent two grand young cows, making £20 10s. and £17 15s.; Mr J. Bielby, Cattal, sent a choice heifer, which realised £19 12s. 6d.; Mr Geo. Douthwaite, Walshford, sold two grand heifers at £21 12s. 6d. and £21; Mr T. Allen, Cattal, sent a heifer, which made £18 7s. 6d.; Mr W. Walker, North Deighton, sold two grand bullocks at £21 7s. 6d. and £20 7s.; Mr Jos. Watson, Linton Springs, sold four nice quality heifers at £17 15s., £16 17s. 6d., £16 10s., and £15 12s. 6d.; Mr J. W. Watson, Manor Farm, Wighill, sent two good bullocks, which sold for £22 and £21 10s.; Mr L. R. B. Isaacs, of King Barrow, sold four choice heifers at £19 10s., £18 10s., £17 17s. 6d., and £17; Mr W. R. Sturdy, Bilton, sent five nice quality heifers, which sold at £19 2s. 6d. and £16; Mr F. SELBY BOARD OF GUARDIANS.

At the fortnightly meeting of the Selby Guardians, on Monday, Mr R. L. Walker presiding, payment was ordered to be made to the West Riding County Council of £2,843, the balance due on the precept of December last.

A return of pauperism received from the Local Government Board showed a decrease throughout the county of 39,146 during last year.

The Chairman remarked that the return which had been received from Mr Bagenal as to the local district also showed an exceptional reduction.

The Clerk (Mr J. Townend) said the particulars accompanying the general return attributed one-third of the difference to the fact that at the beginning of the year dealt with there was a high level of pauperism in certain London Unions, owing to the distress arising from the dispute which then existed in the transport trade.

SPEECHES BY MR LANE FOX, M.P., AND HON. E. L. WOOD, M.P.

POLITICS AND AGRICULTURE.

A FARMER AND "ABOMINABLE INSURANCE ACT."

The annual dinner of the Yorkshire Farmers' Union was held at Doncaster on Tuesday, and among those present were Mr G. R. Lane Fox, M.P., and the Hon. E. L. Wood, M.P. (Temple, newsam).

Mr Lane Fox, in proposing "The Farmers' Union," remarked that they had heard a good deal of criticism of farmers. But they in the dead of criticism of farmers. But they in the mangold wurzel could withstand the pheasants—(laughter)—where the tenant was a man of the words of the music-hall song "Everybody's doing it."—(laughter)—and they had to do it. It was abundantly necessary that the farming industry should combine to make a strong stand against the conflicting forces that they had to meet. There was a time when farmers had to combine against their landlords, but he was glad to say this was entirely obsolete now. (Hear, hear). They all realised that they were the same body who stood and fell together. The main object of their Union was to obtain fair play for agriculture, and that could not be resisted nor resented by anybody. Their Union stood for all that was best for agriculture.

The Chairman replied for the Union. He was pleased to think that the Union was an institution which had come to be regarded as not connected with party politics. All they asked was that agriculture should be dealt with fairly and squarely.

Mr David Dale proposed the toast of "The Houses of Parliament." The Houses of Parliament, he said, had done many things they ought not to have done, and had left undone things they ought to have done. One thing they ought not to have done was to impose that abominable Insurance Act of 1911. (Applause). He would like if Lord Lucas could say that there was some hope for amendment, and he should also like if Lord Lucas would say if in his opinion farmers were fairly treated under it? With regard to the minimum wage, he thought that it was an impracticable proposition altogether. (Hear, hear).

The Hon. Edward Wood, in responding, said he held no brief for party politicians. To tell the honest truth he did not love them, and he did not think that as such they did much good to agriculture. But they might have yielded to temptation in the past—and for aught he knew they might yield in the future—and what as agriculturists they were entitled to urge and insist upon was that if matters vitally affecting agriculture were to be taken in hand by the heard about rescuing work in the country and hope springing up in the countryside in consequence of measures that were going to be passed. Everybody would admit that these things were not said by gentlemen like Mr Runciman and Lord Lucas, and would recognise that in the words of the music-hall song "Everybody's doing it."—(laughter)—and they had to do it. It the things that were said about agriculture and agriculturists generally. (Applause). They labourer able to make terms with his employer —they were entitled rather to resent some of subject than that, and that the irresponsible utterances had not been taken seriously. He congratulated the Yorkshire Union on its continued prosperity. This was a time of combination and of federation in all industries and in all trades, whereas what they as agriculturists wanted, was a remedy for the suffocation of agriculture by the hands of the Agriculture and in the more responsible quarters that had to deal with agriculture more knowledge was shown on the subject than that, and that the irresponsible utterances had not been taken seriously. MR. THOS. ISON,

OCULIST and AURIST.

THIS INSTITUTION was ESTABLISHED in 1871. The system of working is the provident one, each patient paying a small periodical fee whilst under treatment, and they may, therefore, justly expect to receive the prompt care and attention which in many instances in other Institutions is too often omitted. The treatment is of a mild and safe character, without operation or the use of Ear Drums, for Corners or other mechanical or painful appliances. Another advantage appertaining to this dispensary is its system of treatment by correspondence, by which sufferers at long distances, and in isolated positions can have the advantage of Mr ISON'S advice and remedies forwarded to them post. No case is undertaken unless there be a reasonable hope of cure, or benefit to the patient.

Attendance at Leeds every Tuesday, from 10 to 7 on Alternate Saturdays, February 7th and 21st. Hours 10 to 7. Other days by appointment.

SATURDAY, JANUARY 31st, 1914.

In these days when there is so much controversy about the cost of living and the need for higher wages it is interesting to watch how the expenditure on lunatics is creeping up. A small army of these derelicts of humanity are housed in the asylums of the West Riding, and any Board of Guardians can furnish information as to the enormously increased cost the maintenance of these people are to the ratepayers. Newcastle Guardians have been paying 11s. 1d. per head for their lunatics, and they have received notice that the charges have gone up to 11s. 11½d., and the ratepayers will have to find an additional £2,000 per annum to meet the bill. This proves that the cost of living is going up. In many cases these unfortunate people, who are of absolutely no use to the community, are housed under conditions which the best-paid artisans cannot obtain, and as they are not in a position to appreciate the nation's generosity, it seems ridiculous that money should be wasted in this way. Buildings and living should surely be of the plainest character, because lunatics cannot appreciate architecture, and if they get good fare no more is required. Yet they cost the community 12s. each per week. The authorities no doubt do the best they can for all the people entrusted to their charge, but it seems unjust that poor workers, with small wages, should have to keep other people—paupers and lunatics—in a better position than themselves. In the country an agitation is going on for the fixing of a minimum wages of 24s a week for labourers —not an extravagant sum, but these men have to maintain families on a smaller amount. If the family consists of four and the minimum wage were given, it would mean 6s. per week per person, but the inmates of children's homes and workhouses cost more than this, while lunatics cost 12s. each. In towns unskilled labour is equally poorly paid, and there are men labouring in Leeds for less than some Barkston Ash farm hands are getting. Necessity is the point we desire to emphasize. Authorities spend no more on the maintenance of paupers and lunatics than is absolutely necessary to keep them in health and comfort—and, apart from other requirements, common humanity demands that—but no such claim is made by the nation for the underpaid worker? Should not necessity rule this case, too? If a certain sum is needed to keep the labourer and his family in decency should he not have it? It is a serious proposition, because the payment of low wages reacts on the community. Poorly-fed men and women become physical wrecks soon and unfit for employment, and they throw themselves on the rates, so the ratepayers have to pay dearly in the long run. Rural Councils, who are also Guardians, have employed old men on the roads in order to keep them off the rates, and it would just be as reasonable for people to see that labour is adequately and efficiently rewarded so that the burden on the community generally may be lessened. Lunatics cost 12s. a week, and in some counties in England farm hands, with families, receive very little more. In the large cities, too, thousands of women, with families dependent on them, are earning very much less in the sweated industries. No wonder there is misery and discontent.

Will the hospitals and infirmaries eventually be put on the rates? In an address the other day at Leeds Infirmary, the Archbishop of York stated that he "always looked upon the hospital as representing a great public duty. He hoped the day was far distant when their hospitals would have to be put upon the rates—even though they did represent a public duty—for he was certain it was a public duty which was rendered all the more nobly when it was rendered under a constraint of 'ought' rather than under the compulsion of 'must'." In some ways, it would be unfortunate were the hospitals to become a charge upon the rates and to come under the control of the local authorities, but if the maintenance of these institutions is accepted as a "public duty," binding on all classes alike, then something may be said for a change in the system of administration. In giving money to the hospital funds many people are inspired with the belief that they are rendering a real service and their generosity—helping them out of a love for common humanity—and this spirit has exercised such a potent influence upon the community generally that the leading institutions have been enabled to carry on their beneficent work without any appeal to those responsible for local administration. Of course, there is a very large section of people who do not realize that it is their duty to support the hospitals; they have the means, but they are lacking in the desire to assist those who are sick and suffering. And the working-classes—the people who receive the benefit of these institutions—are not over generous in their contributions towards their maintenance. For a number of years vast sums have been raised by the working-class population for the hospitals, but large numbers of the workers do not give a farthing, although they would be the people who would suffer were the doors of the hospitals closed. They say they cannot afford to do anything—and many of them no doubt have a hard struggle to make ends meet—but if every worker were to put aside a halfpenny per week for the Infirmary its financial difficulties would be swept away. Why these people do not make a little sacrifice for their own good is a mystery. Moreover, every penny raised in this way has to be collected by voluntary workers, who have to devise various ways of extracting money from a reluctant public. Every year thousands of pounds are spent in providing entertainments with a view to raising something for the medical charities, which get only a 4the of the money drawn. Carnivals, sports, etc., are held every year for this purpose, and the expenditure upon them is enormous. If people were practical they would give their money direct to the institutions, and thus save all this waste. But it has to be drawn out of them, and it is a great pity. They must have something for their money! Were the hospitals given rate-aid, it is probable that the institutions would not be so economically managed. Every person employed would demand payment for services rendered, and the expenditure would consequently increase. On the other hand, institutions would not be crippled for want of funds, and greater efficiency might be obtained. Every householder ther would have to contribute according to the assessment of his or her dwelling, etc., and, although this might prove a hardship in many cases, it would ensure that no one was escaping a "public duty." It is very unjust that while persons contribute liberally to the funds, their neighbours may not give anything, and the imposition of a rate would put an end to this unfair state of things. It would hit all classes alike, and rich and poor would have to pay according to their assessment. In various places this has been seriously discussed, and it will inevitably come if the community cannot voluntarily provide the funds for carrying on the work, which is as necessary as that of isolation hospitals, which are maintained by the rates. It is well-known that Leeds Infirmary, which is doing a magnificent work for the people of Yorkshire, cannot pay its way—that the income does not meet the expenditure, and it is a reflection upon the county. By means of a special fund, the institution is to be enlarged and the good work extended, but that will necessarily mean an increased expenditure. The men who manage the Infirmary evidently have faith that its needs will be provided for, and we hope that that faith will be abundantly justified.

ROTHWELL & DISTRICT NEWS.

ROTHWELL

LEEDS WEST RIDING PETTY SESSIONS.—At the Leeds West Riding Petty Sessions on Tuesday the magistrates on the Bench were Mr. W. Markill (in the Chair), Dr. R. D. Kitson, Mr. J. Sagar-Musgrave, Mr. R. D. Kitson, Mr J. Hirst, Mr E. H. Foster, Mr S. Holliday, Mr F. M. Lupton, and Mr S. Hudson.

PICKWICKIAN SOCIETY.—The weekly meeting of the Pickwickian Society on Thursday night Mr G. W. Nodding read from the 54th chapter of the "Pickwick Papers"—"Mr Winkle's mysterious behaviour." A reading by W. W. Lamb of Bill's paper-chase," contributed by Mr F. Kemshell, was greatly appreciated. Mr Rawling presided.

FOOTBALL.—Rothwell Wednesday played Leeds Kirkgate Tradesmen at Rothwell on Wednesday. The Leeds men had the better of matters in the first half, and Jubb (two) and Hughes netted. On resuming the home team had more of the play, and Hopton was only beaten once, by Rogers-Hobson was successful with a penalty shot for Rothwell. Result:—Leeds Kirkgate Tradesmen 4 goals, Rothwell Wednesday 1 goal.

WESLEYAN SUNDAY SCHOOL.—On Saturday evening the annual prize distribution to the scholars of the Sunday School took place in the schoolroom. Tea was served at five o'clock, there being a good company present. After the table had been cleared a concert took place, the items being provided by a group of talented artistes. Mr W. Varley presided, and the prizes were given out by Mr F. Young.

NORMANTON DIVISION.—At a meeting on Friday at Wakefield of the Executive of the Normanton Division Conservative Association, Mr T. P. Tew presiding, it was unanimously decided to invite Mr. Cecil Lister-Kaye, of Denby Grange, the President of the Association, and a well-known local colliery owner, to become the prospective Unionist candidate for the division. A general meeting of the Association is to be called at an early date to confirm the Executive's decision. Mr Lister-Kaye, it will be remembered, contested the seat in 1910 against the late Mr Ben Pickard, when he secured 3,605 votes to his opponent's 5,655.

WESLEYAN CHURCH.—With a view to stirring up the present members of the church, and to prevail on those not already attached to some place of worship to join the church, a series of services have been held in the Wesleyan Church during the week. The services have been conducted by Mr. Lister-Kaye, and commenced on Sunday, when the Rev. N. W. Thomlinson preached. At each of the week night services he has presided, while addresses have been given as follows:—Monday, the Rev. N. W. Thomlinson; Tuesday, Mr W. Stephenson; Wednesday, Mr J. W. Ridyard; and Thursday, Mr T. Gibson. On Wednesday afternoon there was a special service for women, and an address was given by Mrs Thomlinson. Mrs Stephenson gave a solo. At each service solos have been rendered by one of the following vocalists: Miss H. Marsden, Miss E. Hudson, Miss K. Varley, Miss B. Varley, and Mr R. Firth.

BURNING ACCIDENT.—A sad burning accident occurred at Rothwell on Friday, when a young woman named Eliza Tiffany, aged 21, daughter of a miner living at Carlton Street, Rothwell, received so severe injury that she had to be removed to the Leeds Infirmary. It appears that shortly after, midday, she was attending to the kitchen fire, and it is thought that her apron became alight. She was alone in the kitchen at the time, Mrs Tiffany being engaged in one of the bedrooms, and it was the girl's screams that brought the mother running down to find her daughter in flames. Mrs Tiffany seized a rug and wrapped it round the young woman, and some neighbours who had heard the screams entered the house and succeeded in extinguishing the fire. It was seen the young woman was badly burned about the upper part of the body, arms, and face, and oils were procured and quickly applied. Dr. Stevenson was sent for, and upon his arrival he found that everything that could be done for the young woman had been done, and he ordered her removal to the Leeds Infirmary, where she was detained.

PRESENTATION.—A pleasing ceremony took place at the Primitive Methodist Church on Sunday afternoon, when two of the teachers of the Sunday School, Mr J. Ward and Mr Eli Ward were presented with long service diplomas. The diplomas are to commemorate a twenty-five years' service, but both Mr J. Ward and Mr Eli Ward have twenty-nine years to their credit. Mr James Taylor presided, in the absence of Mr W. Jopling, and an address was given by the Rev. W. G. Softley. Certificates were also presented to successful scholars in the recent scripture examination.

ALLERTON BYWATER

Sir J. Compton-Rickett, M.P. for the Osgoldcross division, was the special preacher at the Hallgate Congregational Church, Doncaster, on Sunday.

MISER'S COSTLY MISTAKE.—On Wednesday at Wakefield Patrick Joseph Tiernan, miner, Allerton Bywater, was charged with travelling on the G.N.R. without paying his proper fare. Defendant travelled by train from Castleford to Westgate, and he got out of a first-class compartment but only produced a third-class ticket. When questioned he offered to pay the difference, but it was not accepted. Defendant said whilst at Castleford Station he was in a hurry and got into a first-class compartment in mistake. Defendant had £1 11s. 6d. to pay or one month's imprisonment.

BOWERS ALLERTON

TRACT SOCIETY.—The quarterly tea and meeting of the Tract Society were held in the Mission schoolroom on Thursday evening. Mr W. S. Blackburn, who presided at the meeting, spoke highly of tract distributing as a branch of church work. The distributors came in contact with people which the church could in no other way reach. Every house being visited, no one in the district could escape the influence of the church, which, if tactfully used, was bound to result in the spiritual and social betterment of the district. Solos were sung by Miss Child and Messrs G. Wrigglesworth and Simpson, while Miss Alice Parker gave a recitation. Each tract distributor gave a report on his or her district.

CAWOOD

NAVAL DESERTER.—At Selby on Tuesday John Dawson Crosby, of H.M.S. Ganges at Harwich, charged with being a deserter, was said to have been seen with another man, both in naval uniform, at Cawood. Police Constable French went after them on a bicycle and Crosby was caught. Prisoner said he was on a naval training ship at Shotley Barracks. He enlisted at Middlesbrough, and gave his home as Superintendent Stafford said it was not the first time prisoner had deserted his ship. The Bench ordered him to be handed over to his ship.

CROSSGATES

At the meeting of the Literary Society on Monday evening a lecture on "The romance of ancient glass making" will be given by Mr F. Swann. See advt.

B.W.T.A.—CROSSGATES AND DISTRICT BRANCH.—The first public meeting of this newly-arranged branch of the B.W.T.A. was held on Monday night in the Crossgates Wesleyan Schoolroom, and it took the form of a social evening. A nice company attended, and had a very enjoyable time. The programme included songs by Miss L. Holliday—"The Valley by the Sea" and "I was dreaming"; Mr Atkin, "The Mighty Deep" and "Deep in the Mine"; and Miss Brownhill "Still as the night" and "Beloved, it is morn"; while Mr. G. Hodgson (abstentionist) contributed "The Butterfly" and "The relief of Lucknow." Mr J. H. Walker, A.R.C.O., was the accompanist. Mrs R. H. Carr (President) gave an interesting address, telling first how the committee had for two years considered the desirability of dividing the old branch (Halton and Crossgates), and finally had decided that such a division would increase the efficiency of the work. She pleaded for greater interest, thought, and attention to the work, and emphasized the need for such by recent facts and figures from eminent medical and other authorities as to the ravages of alcoholic liquors. Dr. Kaye, medical officer of health for the West Riding, recently stated that 42 per cent. of the Juniles under the charge of the County Council owed their position either to their own or their parents' use of alcoholic liquors. Opinions by Dr. Saleeby and Professor J. Sims Woodhead were also quoted, whilst the close connection between the drink traffic and the White Slave traffic, with its 300,000 victims in Great Britain annually, recruited by 60,000 new victims, was instanced as a reason for Temperance legislation to increase the efficiency of recent repressive laws. Mrs T. Rippon, who has charge of the Tiny Tots section of the branch dealing with children up to 7 years of age, reported a gratifying increase of such members, and asked for help from all who loved children and their country to save the children from ever becoming degraded—a work, she thought, far better even than rescuing the fallen older people. Refreshments were served, and a hearty vote of thanks to all who had helped was combined with best wishes for the success of the new Society, on the motion of Mr T. Rippon, seconded by Mr J. E. Broadbent. Mrs W. W. Stott, Austhorpe Lane, Crossgates, is the hon. secretary.

FERRYBRIDGE

WEDDING.—A wedding was solemnised on Saturday, at the parish church of Ferrybridge, the contracting parties being Mr Frank Nicholls, of York, and Miss Edith A. Hunter, of Ferrybridge. The Rev. E. S. Hore, of York, officiated. The bride, who was given away by her uncle, Mr C. Hall, was attired in cream taffeta with lace overskirt, and cream velvet hat with plume to match, and carried a bouquet of white chrysanthemums. Mr W. Hodman, of Knottingley, carried out the duties of best man. The bride was attended by four bridesmaids, the elder ones, Miss A. Hunter (sister) and Miss Hall (cousin), being dressed in grey poplin with hats to match, whilst the two younger ones, Miss Margaret Hobman and Miss Winnie Law (nieces), were attired in pale blue satin coats and linenets, trimmed sweeps, and carried baskets of flowers. They were gold lockets, the gifts of the bridegroom. After the ceremony a reception was held in St. Andrew's Mission Room. The happy couple were the recipients of many useful and handsome presents.

GARFORTH

Miss Couper, L.L.C.M. (Bronze Medallist, and late pupil of the Leeds College of Music), gives lessons in pianoforte, theory and harmony etc. Terms upon application. Address:—Station House, Garforth.—Advt.

BAZAAR.—In connection with the Primitive Methodist Church a bazaar will be held on Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday, when Mr Herbert Smith, of Garforth, will perform the opening ceremony on the first day, and Mr George Wilkinson, of Kippax, on the second day, while on Saturday the children will give the operetta "The Fairy Ring." See advt.

ARRESTED AT GARFORTH.—Anthony Dempsey, a miner, of Leeds, was sentenced to a month's imprisonment at Wakefield on Saturday by stealing a silver watch and chain (value £3 5s.) the property of Tom Dunleavy, of Horbury Junction. On September 10th, 1910, Dunleavy was attending the Holbeck Feast when prisoner claimed acquaintance with him, saying he came from the same place in Ireland. Dunleavy said he didn't know him, but suggested they should have a drink. Next day prisoner turned up at Dunleavy's lodgings at Horbury Junction and started work with a local firm. On the 13th he absconded with the watch and chain, which he pawned at Portsfeast. Prisoner was arrested at Garforth on Friday.

PICTURE HOUSE.—At the popular picture house this week large audiences have again been the rule, and excellent programmes have been submitted for the entertainment of patrons. The attractions for Friday and Saturday include "The mystery of the great diamond," a clever exploit of Nat Pinkerton, the great detective, and "A noise from the deep," a clever comedy. For next week the management have secured some capital pictures, and on Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday "The Banshee," a thrilling Irish story, will have pride of place. Other films promised are "A visit to Scarborough," "His crooked career" (a criminal farce), "One can't always tell" (the dog's punishment), "Vengeance of the Mafia" (powerful coloured drama), and "Max and the portmanteau" (comedy). For the second half of the week the outstanding film will be "Life of a mother," describing a parent's love and sacrifices for her son. Other pictures announced are "Love and potatoes," "Suspense" (drama), "Titans of the air" (flying machines), "The mistaken masher," and "Ups and downs." For times and prices see advt.

GREAT PRESTON

SOCIAL.—A good number attended the dance held in the Infant Schoolroom on Saturday evening. The proceeds were for paying for the heating apparatus recently installed in the church.

WITHDRAWN.—At the Leeds West Riding Petty Sessions on Tuesday James Scott, a miner, of Great Preston, was summoned by his wife, Leah Scott, for persistent cruelty. The husband appeared when the case was called, but the complainant was missing. Asked if he could account for her absence, the husband said he had come to terms with his wife, and they were living together again. He had, he said, been sent to ask for the summons to be withdrawn. This the Bench allowed us to be done.

HALTON

On Saturday afternoon in the Church Football League Whitkirk C.M. were defeated by Leeds Parish Church by three goals to nil.

On Saturday afternoon Leeds St. Peter's Harriers Club decided a three miles' handicap, and the race was run from Halton, there being a dozen entries.

RATEPAYERS' ASSOCIATION.—At the next meeting of the Ratepayers' Association at Whitkirk on February 6th a paper on "The Infirm of the Poor Law" will be read by Mr Arthur Lee, one of the Crossgates Guardians. All householders are invited to attend. See advt.

KIPPAX

PARISH CHURCH.—A service for women was held in the church on Sunday afternoon, when an address was given by the Vicar (Rev. E. B. Smith) on "Winning Souls." There was a good attendance.

ENTERTAINMENT.—A pierrot entertainment was given on Tuesday and Wednesday evening in the Church Schoolroom by the following artistes:—Mr H. Wright, Mr F. Bickerdike, Mr T. Simpson, Mr W. Wilson, Mr P. Gummerson, Mr E. Legg, Mr A. Gripwell, Mr E. Bickerdike, Mr H. Terry, and Mr H. Varley. Mr H. Keeble, the organist of the Parish Church, had the training of the artistes, and he had also the direction of the entertainment. Mrs Thomas Simpson was the pianist. The stage was tastefully decorated for the occasion by Mrs and Miss Smith. Appreciative audiences assembled in the schoolroom each night, and great credit is due to the artistes and Mr Keeble for providing such an excellent entertainment.

UNITED METHODIST CHURCH.—Special services were held in this church on Sunday, the preacher for the day being Mr M. Bairstow, of Whitwood More. The sacred cantata "The Rock of Ages" was given (by request), and was capably rendered by the choir. The solos were allotted to the following:—Miss Halliday, Miss E. Smith, Mrs Irving Goodall, Miss Janet Snowden (sopranos), Miss Alice Goodall and Miss Doris Radcliffe (contraltos), Mr D. Smith, Mr T. Roberts, and Mr E. Smith (tenors), Mr J. Radcliffe, Mr H. Hollyhead, and Mr Jas. Farrant (bass). The organ accompaniments were a pleasing feature in the work, and were finely rendered by Mr W. Halliday. The cantata was well received by a fairly large congregation. Mr M. Bairstow presided. The collection realized £1. The Rev. H. W. B. Chapman (superintendent Methodist minister, Castleford), was the preacher on Thursday evening.

LEDSHAM

A sum of £3 15s., collected at Ledsham Church, has been sent by the Rev. G. E. Warlow to the Royal Agricultural Benevolent Institution.

LOFTHOUSE

LOFTHOUSE COLLIERY.—The accounts show a profit of £10,162, which, added to the balance brought forward of £10,075, makes a total of £20,238. Out of this sum £3,731 was paid on August 1st as interim dividend, leaving a balance of £16,506 at the disposal of the shareholders. A similar dividend was recommended by the directors, making a total distribution of 6s. per share, free of income tax, which will absorb £5,597, leaving a balance to be carried forward of £10,909.

MICKLEFIELD

BILLIARDS.—Micklefield Workman's Institute and North Ward Liberal Club met in the first round of the charity competition on Wednesday night at Hixon and Sons' Showrooms, Park Street, Leeds. North Ward won all five games, and on the aggregate totals proved successful by 184, the scores being 500 and 316. Details (Micklefield names first).—F. Tomkinson 80 v. F. E. Holsall 100; J. T. Limbert 74 v. W. Mitchell 100, J. Limbert 30 v. S. Allen 100, E. Limbert 60 v. S. Nathan 100, and W. Cooper 63 v. S. Ajha 100.

MOOR ALLERTON

A sum of £8 13s. 10d., collected at Moor Allerton Church, has been sent by Mr J. E. Maude to the Royal Agricultural Benevolent Institution.

MOORTOWN GOLF CLUB.—In the first annual report of the Moortown Golf Club it is stated that the club have adopted a scheme by which they acquire a freehold site upon which to build a new club house, within a convenient distance of the Harrogate Road, and additional land has been leased for the consequent slight extension of the course. The scheme provides for the construction of a road suitable for motor and other traffic to the new club house. At the end of last year the club had a total membership of 374, and after making liberal allowances for depreciation, the year closed with a balance of profit over expenses of 100 guineas.

OULTON

DANCE.—On Wednesday night the Girls' Friendly Society dance was held in the Harold Hall. There were about one hundred present, and a delightful evening was spent. Mr C. J. Higgins was an admirable M.C., and dancing was merrily engaged in to music supplied by Mr Walter Poole (pianist) and a violinist.

The workpeople of D. Hall and Sons, Midland Quarries, Oulton, have sent £6 2s. 7d. to Leeds Infirmary.

LECTURE.—Mr Walter Poole, on Thursday night, lectured to the members of the Oulton Literary and Debating Society upon "The Folk Songs of England," and he explored the lack of appreciation in these days of folk songs. To add to the interest of the subject Mr Poole was assisted by some half-a-dozen young people, who gave several examples of folk songs. Mr Edgar Hullah and Mr J. Jackson contributed illustrations on the piano. Mr B. Wood Higgins, who is a well-known musician, presided. At the close a discussion followed, and Mr Poole was subjected to much criticism, but he stood up well to his arguments.

ROBIN HOOD

P.S.A.—There was a good attendance at the P.S.A. meeting held in the United Methodist Church last Sunday, when an address was given by the Rev. J. E. Langley (Wakefield), late missionary minister at Robin Hood. Mr J. Naylor presided, and the solos "Lead Kindly Light" and "The Promise of Life" were sung by Miss E. Marshall (Ardsley). Mr B. Keighley was the accompanist.

ROUNDHAY

On Saturday afternoon Roundhay had a hockey match with Hull, and the former won by five goals to nil.

Mr Harry Pickard has recently resigned the post of organist and choirmaster of Carr Church, Beildington, to take up a similar appointment at St. John's Church, Roundhay.

DEDICATION.—At morning service on Sunday the Bishop of Knaresborough dedicated a font cover at St. Edmund's Church, Roundhay, in the presence of a large congregation. The design of the cover is based on some examples of font covers found in East Anglia, and is Perpendicular in its character. Octogonal in shape, and standing ten feet high, it comprises four stages receding upwards, surmounted by a spire and massive finial. The design is by Messrs Carby Hall and Dawson, the architects of the church, the work having been executed by Messrs Marsh, Jones, & Cribb. The materials used are fine Austrian oak, fumed to a dark colour and ebony inlay. The cost is £83 10s., and the money has been chiefly raised from baptismal offerings.

OPEN AIR SCHOOL AT THE PARK.—The Leeds Education Committee have adopted a resolution, passed by the Staffing and General Purposes Sub-Committee that there be prepared for an open-air school to accommodate 100 children in a temporary building. The Committee also ask the Corporation to grant the use of a suitable site for the purpose. The scheme is of an experimental nature, says Alderman W. H. Clarke, the Chairman of the Education Committee, but we shall probably ask the Corporation in due course to let us have a site near Roundhay Park. We shall pick those children who are not actually consumptive, but are unhealthy and show first signs of phthisis. The Roundhay Park the children would get all the sun and fresh air they possibly could, and be within a short distance of an excellent tram service.

AEROPLANES AT ROUNDHAY.—Those juveniles who have been engaged during the last few months in the building of aeroplanes had the opportunity on Saturday of receiving a few hints into the intricacies of the art control. Several hundred boys assembled in the military field at Roundhay to hear a lecture by the well-known aviator, Mr Harold Blackburn. The boys were intensely interested in the 80 h.p. Blackburn monoplane, and they gathered round the machine open-eyed, not seeming to lose a single word which fell from Mr Blackburn's lips as he sat working the elevator and wings in his pilot's seat. The boys were so interested, in fact, that Mr Harry E. Tudor, the aviator's manager, and the mechanics had all their work cut out to keep them clear of the machine. Many of them displayed their model aeroplanes, and in some cases they closely compared the result of their modest efforts with Mr Blackburn's monoplane.

THE SETTLEMENT.—In the King's Bench Division on Wednesday, before Justice Rowlatt, the action of Holmes and others v. Lister was heard. The plaintiff, Mr H. Holmes, was one of a group of Lloyd's Insurers, and the defendant was Mr Frederick Ernest Lister, a yarn spinner, residing at Roundhay. Plaintiffs claimed for the return of money paid on behalf of defendant under certain policies of insurance, which plaintiffs said they were induced to issue by the concealment of a material fact. The defendant denied any concealment of facts. Mr Tindal Atkinson, K.C., for the plaintiffs, said this was an action to recover over £1,100 money, which plaintiffs had been compelled to pay under policies defendant took out in respect of damages to defendant's motor-cars or to third parties. There was a consultation between the parties, and eventually Mr Shearman, K.C., for the defendant, said the parties had agreed to a settlement. Counsel added that defendant had agreed to pay plaintiffs £500 and the costs of the action on the understanding that all charges of fraud were withdrawn. His Lordship assented to the settlement, and judgment was given for the plaintiffs for £500 with costs of the action. A counter-claim by defendant was dismissed with costs.

MOTOR FATALITY.—The Leeds City Coroner (Mr J. C. Malcolm) held an inquest on Friday upon Mary Louisa Gill, aged 47, a widow, of 39, Dorset Road, Harehills Lane, who died from injuries ran on Thursday through being knocked down by a taxi-cab in Roundhay Road, near the junction of Harehills Lane. Mr Clifford Bowling appeared for the driver, Walter Alexander Ogle, of 23, Markham Avenue, who was employed by the Roundhay Motor Company. Jackson said that on approaching the end of Harehills Lane he "slowed up." Suddenly a woman ran out from the causeway, and struck the driver of a passing tram. The witness gave warning, and applied the brakes, but he was too near to stop, and endeavoured to avoid the woman by swerving to the side of the road. The rear-side mudguard struck her, and the wheel passed over her. Mr W. Edwin Harding, chartered accountant, of 20, Bank Street, Shutterbury Avenue, Roundhay, said that he was riding in the motor-car. When going over the Harehills Lane crossing they were travelling at about 10 miles an hour, and were on the proper side of the road. The horn was sounded several times. When the woman ran across the road, the effect that the motor driver pulled the brakes and swerved to the right. She hesitated, and then ran right in front of the vehicle. The car pulled up in a distance of from five to seven yards. Miss Mabel Caroline Jacobs, of 16, Oakwood Drive, told the Coroner that the motor-car was not going very fast, but she did not hear the horn. A cab driver also gave evidence to the effect that the motor driver passed him some distance away, and could not have been travelling too fast, as he (the cab driver) arrived on the scene of the accident almost as soon as it happened. The jury returned a verdict of "Accidental death," and exonerated the taxi-driver from blame.

STOURTON

In the Non-Political League Stourton St. Andrew's, who are going strong for League honours, had no difficulty in beating Park Street, the result being 1,120—671.

A MENDICANT'S POSSESSIONS.—At the Leeds West Riding Petty Sessions on Tuesday James Plunkett, a labourer, of no fixed abode, was charged with begging at Stourton on Wednesday, January 21st. P.C. Boyes gave evidence, and said that when arrested prisoner had a quantity of bread and butter in his possession and 2s. 1½d. Plunkett, who had a very bad record, having no less than twenty-eight convictions against him, was sent to prison for three months with hard labour.

WHITKIRK

DRINK.—At the Leeds West Riding Petty Sessions on Tuesday Harry Tinker, carter, of New Row, Colton, was summoned for having been drunk and disorderly on the Selby Road, Swillington. The defendant's mother appeared to answer the summons, and on the evidence of P.C. Eadon a fine of 5s. and costs was imposed.

A ROBIN HOOD MINER'S END.

KILLED BY A FALL OF ROOF.

An inquest was held at Wakefield on Wednesday on John Clarson (27), bye-worker, of Robin Hood, who was killed by a fall of roof after removing a prop while storing muck in the Wrenthorpe Colliery.

John Edward Barkill said he heard Clement strike the prop on two occasions, after which he heard a fall of roof. Clement was found lying on his right side with the stone on his foot, and he was apparently dead.

James Henry Davis, a chargeman, said there were a number of slips in the pit, and Clement ought to have come and told him that he was going to knock another prop out. Clement was a good workman.

John Lunn, a deputy, said that the stone which fell would weigh more than three tons. The cause of the fall was "slipes," and witness considered he could have seen the back "slipe." Deceased ought to have set more timber before he knocked the prop out.

The Coroner: Did you know the deceased had only been working in a pit for nine months?

Witness: No; I thought he was an experienced workman.

Mr West (manager of the colliery): I have it that he signed on as an able workman.

"Accidental Death" was the verdict.

The Coroner remarked that he thought deceased, although a very capable workman, had not had sufficient experience in the mine.

CORRESPONDENCE

KIPPAX AND OSGOLDCROSS DIVISION.

(To the Editor).

Sir,—Rumours are current in Kippax that a Labour candidate is to contest the division of Osgoldcross at the next general election. The electors seemingly know nothing as to this Labour candidate, and we don't know who or what to expect. But I would ask if this uncertainty is to continue until we come to within a few weeks of the poll? Then are we not to be asked to vote for a man who has not had time to make known his intentions, state his convictions, or declare his policy? This is surely not fair play. The Liberal Party have decided to put into the field. We are a number of electors who are in possession of votes that count for a great deal in the way of progress. If used to further the cause of social reforms which we anticipate our children will enjoy, provided we send the right men to Westminster to look after these things. Now, without preliminary organisation, reasonable preparation, and attention the electors in Kippax are not likely to cast their votes in favour of a Labour candidate, whoever he may be. Three-cornered contests, in the absence of a second ballot, are hazardous in the extreme. As regards Osgoldcross, and as things are, I feel sure that Labour cannot hope to win the seat at the next election, when the electors know nothing but confusion, for a confused electorate cannot vote straight on any issue. If we are to have a three-cornered fight in Osgoldcross we ought to know who this third man is to be.—Yours, etc.,

AN ELECTOR.

Prince and Princess Arthur of Connaught are to pay a visit shortly to Lord and Lady Harewood at Harewood House.

Thomas Lister, labourer, Clifford, was at Wetherby on Thursday fined 2s. 6d. and costs for a game trespass. He had secured a couple of rabbits.

Two guineas, collected in Aberford Church and sent by the Rev. B. W. Shepheard Walwyn, are acknowledged by the Royal Agricultural Benevolent Institution.

"TAUGHT BY KINDNESS."—Miss I. O. Ford, of Adel, speaking at the annual prize distribution in connection with the Leeds branch of the Royal Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, said that people who went round with troupes of performing animals contended that the animals were taught by kindness. They could not teach lions and tigers to go through tricks by kindness, and the members of that society knew very well that much cruelty was inflicted on these animals to make them perform their tricks.

PRIMROSE LEAGUE.—The Bramham Moor Habitation of the Primrose League held a meeting at Boston Spa on Friday night, Mr Markingdale, of Bramham, presiding. Lieutenant Boughey, R.N., addressed the gathering, and made an appeal for assistance in the matter of forming a volunteer force, and pointed out from Ulster in the event of civil war, or in the way of funds if supporters were unable to house such refugees. The Lieutenant said he had volunteered to go over to Ulster in the spirit of trouble. Colonel Nickals proposed a vote of thanks to the Lieutenant, and said that in the event of peace he, too, should go over to Ulster. On the suggestion of Mr Tom Latham, a committee was formed to arrange for housing accommodation for refugees and for collecting funds.

THE LATE MISS HOYLE.—The death took place late on Tuesday night at Hall Ings, Bradford, of Miss Isabella Lane, widow of Mr Joseph Hoyle, thrashing machine proprietor. Deceased was in her 66th year, and was a native of Monk Fryston. She was a daughter of the late Mr Thomas Lane, grocer and provision dealer, and she had been in failing health for some time. A few years ago whilst out cycling she was thrown from her bicycle, and subsequently she had an attack of rheumatic fever, which left her very weak. She continued to go about, and was out on Tuesday afternoon. It is believed she caught a chill, which, acting on a bronchial complaint, affected the heart. Deceased had a violent attack of coughing, and death occurred very suddenly. Dr. Pickersgill had been summoned, but on his arrival death had taken place.

AMUSEMENTS.

LEEDS EMPIRE PALACE.

At the Empire Palace this week the vivacious and sparkling revue "What-a-Game" ranks with the best of those seen at the theatre, and the Escalade scene is a triumph in stage-craft. Of course, there is the inevitable platform extending into the auditorium, without which no revue can possibly be complete, and the extremely well-dressed and pretty ladies of the chorus certainly lose nothing by the more intimate acquaintance with the audience which the "board" affords them. Catchy numbers abound, and there is a well-contrasted cast, including Mr Vic Newman, who showed his versatility on Monday night during a slight hitch in the staging by contributing a stream of really witty "gags." For the rest of the bill, Alf. Tuck, obeying the ruling position, gives a wonderful exhibition of upside-down acrobatics, and Florence and Lillian render pleasing harmony. Velanche's Football Dogs play an exciting match.

Mr Frank Allen has engaged "Red Heads," the greatest coloured production America yet produced, as the chief feature at the Leeds Empire next week. "Red Heads" is a vividly-coloured musical revue; the book is by Wm. Le Baron, and the music by Raymond Hubbell and Bowers. The music is "catchy," and the tango is to have a prominent place, while there will be a dress parade of all the latest fashions. The cast is as follows:—Lucille Frances (Jacob's head designer and creator of gowns), Kitty Barlow; Jacob Kaufman (proprietor of the Kaufman Coat and Suit Co., New York), Sam Liebert; Repman, Arthur Campbell; chorus girl, Madge Saunders; lisping girl, Molly O'Doyne; dancing girl, Margot Kelly; suffragette, Jane Barrie; bashful girl, Mollie Coverdale; sad girl, Queenie Thomas; giggling girl, Kitty Strong; show girl, Ellaine Cecil; flirt, Vivian Rogers; the twins, Lillian and Norah Caldicott; the rich widow Meynell, Isla Raine, and Sybil Ivor; Ted Morgan (buyer for the San Francisco firm of Marshall, Taylor, and Co.), George Austen Moore; Ruth Crane (a runaway heiress from San Francisco), Cordelia Haager; Shirley Burns, a lady sleuth from 'Frisco, Ivy Sheppard. Scene—The Showroom of the Kaufman Coat and Suit Co., New York Time—Present. The whole arrangements and production are under the auspices of Sydney Blow and Will Collins. Other excellent attractions will be found in the programme.

LEEDS HIPPODROME.

At the Hippodrome the attraction this week is popular Miss Florrie Forde and her company in the pantomime "Red Riding Hood," which is full of tuneful ditties. The dresses are the last word, the scenery would do credit to any production, and the principals have been well chosen. Miss Forde lets herself go with lively abandon in a couple of popular numbers, which the audience require no persuasion to "take up." Mr Gilbert Payne has local associations, proves the main laughter-merchant, and takes full liberties with the "book," written, incidentally, by himself. No more delightful Red Riding Hood than Miss Stella Esdaile could be wished for, and other singers of marked ability are Miss Maude de Velin, Mr George Bishop, and Miss Marion Jackson. Next week at the Hippodrome the principal feature will be Huntley Wright and Co., including Miss Florence Wray, in the miniature musical play "Temple Bells." There will also be a grand variety company.

LEEDS QUEEN'S THEATRE

At the Queen's Theatre this week the Edward Lloyd and Clifford Boon Company presented a favourite play called "The Old Folks at Home," by J. A. Campbell. The pivot of the plot is the career of a farmer's daughter, whose marriage exalts her in social position, but lays up a store of unhappy experiences, so that she is eventually glad to return to her parents' humble domicile. The scenes are laid chiefly in "The Old Homestead" and "Kenilworth House," and another delightful play on a Virginian cotton plantation. Miss Clarie O'Sullivan gives a good study of the part of Sarah Wetherby Robin (afterwards Lady Howard Kenilworth), while her father is represented with natural aptitude by Mr Fred Lilywhite. Mr Wallace Court gives a clever impersonation of Lord Howard Kenilworth, Mr Edward Lloyd has a suitable part in Andrew Rossa, a yeoman farmer, and Miss Maudie Elliot is quite natural as the role of Martha Robin, Dorothy's mother. There is plenty of humour in the production, and it is well staged.

Next week at the Queen's Theatre the attraction will be Messrs Dottridge and Longden's pantomime "Robinson Crusoe." There will be matinees on Monday and Saturday.

THEATRE DE LUXE.

At the Theatre de Luxe large audiences have been the rule this week to see the picture "When the earth trembled," in which there were some remarkable results. The film, which dealt with the terrible earthquake in San Francisco some years ago, admirably depicted the horrors of such a disaster and is further enhanced by the addition of a capital plot. Although bearing a somewhat dramatic title, "The Fatal Taxi-cab" was far from being a "weeping" production. It was, in fact, a splendid comic. "Jim, the Handyman," was another amusing picture, whilst the "Topical Events" are up to the usual standard of excellence. On Friday and Saturday, "The Fatal Invention" will head the bill.

ROTHWELL EMPIRE.

Good "business" has been treated to capital fare at the Rothwell Empire during the first half of this week. More is promised for to-night and Saturday. A good detective story, in which Nick Winter plays the leading role is given the premier position. Nick is seen tracking down a gang of kidnappers, and the various situations form first-rate entertainment. "Pimple's Revolver" is the title of another film the usual interest. The Russian Dwarfs (father and son), who are appearing at every performance, are especially good and worth seeing. The Lister Sisters also present an air of mystery, and show that one need not be big to be smart.

Next week a host of good things are in store. On Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday the features will be "The great bullion robbery," an all British production full of thrills; "The burning river," a two-part drama; and "Pimple's hospitality." Other films of interest will be "A day in a Paris Zoo," a Pathe coloured travel picture; "Winged Gold," "The lost combination," and "One good joke deserves another." On the three last nights the pictures are "The globe of death," a picture with many phases of interest," "Cohen's outing," a "Keystone" comic; "Indian Pride," "A gay dog" (coloured comic), "Hearts that see" (drama), and "Chrysanthemums," a Pathe coloured educational subject. All the week John Wood, a Scottish concertina soloist, will make his appearance.

The Rev. W. H. Finney has sent a guinea, collected at Birkin Church, to the Royal Agricultural Benevolent Institution.

FOOTBALL.—On Saturday afternoon Monk Fryston footballers replayed their York Junior Cup match with Cherry Mission (York). The villagers were too good for their opponents, and won by no fewer than eight goals to one.

Major the Hon. Hugh Dawnay, of the 2nd Life Guards, residing at Bramham Hall, and who met with a serious accident while hunting with the Bramham Moor hounds on Saturday, through his horse putting its foot into a rabbit hole and falling, is progressing favourably.

HOCKEY.—Leeds Salem Ladies visited South Milford on Saturday afternoon, and suffered defeat, the homesters winning by a goal to nil. Both teams were weak, and Milford's centre-forward shot several goals, but was pulled up for offside play.

MOTHERS' MEETING.—Through the kindness of the Rev. B. and Mrs Hemsworth, the members of the Monk Fryston branch of the Mothers' Meeting were entertained to tea in the Concert Hall on Thursday evening, and about 50 were present. Subsequently the time was spent in an enjoyable manner, and games and dancing contributed to a delightful evening.

SAXTON CRICKET CLUB.—The annual whist drive and dance in connection with the Saxton Cricket Club were attended by upwards of 100 guests. After whist was over dancing was merrily kept up until the early hours next morning. Songs were rendered by Mr and Mrs Holgate (Sherburn), Mr Hargraves (Saxton), Miss Green (Barkston), and Mr Whiteman (humorist), Leeds. The pretty dresses of the ladies, together with the decorated room, made a very attractive scene. The arrangements were carried out by Messrs T. Richardson, E. Stoker, C. Fen (hon. secretary), and members of the club, and the duties of M.C.'s were discharged by Mr Whiteman and Mr Holgate. Excellent music was supplied by Mr T. W. Hague, of Ulleskelf. Refreshments were provided by Mr and Mrs Hey, Barkston Ash.

On Saturday afternoon Wetherby Ladies had a match at Harrogate with the Secondary School team, and Wetherby won by two goals to nil, Miss Ellis scoring both goals.

Frank Westalawski (17), grocer's assistant, of Glasgow, was at Wetherby on Thursday bound over in the sum of £10 on a charge of stealing a bicycle, and with obtaining food and lodgings by false pretences.

PRESENTATION.—At the annual meeting of the Wetherby Conservative Association on Saturday, Alderman J. Houfe, the retiring president, who is a Wetherby man, was presented by the members with a handsome silver cigarette case in recognition of his services to the club during the past two years.

The following sums have been sent to the Agricultural Benevolent Institution:—Rev. G. C. Cowburn, Stockeld Park Chapel, £4 7s. 10d.; Rev. G. S. Charlewood, Hunsingore, £4 10s.; Rev. E. P. Doudney, Bilton and Bickerton, £3 3s.; Rev. A. O'B. Newnham, Cowthorpe, £2 5s.

WETHERBY CONSERVATIVE CLUB.—The annual general meeting of the members of the Conservative Club was held on Friday evening, and the Rev. Canon Geldart presided. The balance sheet, which showed a balance in hand of £3 6s. 2d., was read and adopted. Sir Nevill Gunter was unanimously re-elected president; and the vice-presidents were re-appointed en bloc, with the addition of Mr E. Davies (North Grove), Col. Wallerstein (Thorparch Hall), Mr Birkmire (Ingmanthorpe Hall), Mr H. Nickals (Stone Dene), and Messrs G. and C. Foster (Stockeld Hall). Mr J. L. Anderson was re-elected hon. treasurer, Mr A. Lucas hon. auditor, and Mr J. D. Tiplady secretary. A committee was appointed as follows:—Upstairs—Messrs C. E. Crow, H. W. Woodward, S. C. Mellor, W. G. Miles, J. Armitage, J. Fox, A. Coop, T. H. Raine, A. Ward, and F. Snape; downstairs—Messrs J. Irvine, W. Tempest, H. Wiseman, A. Garforth, W. Mellor, sen., T. Waterhouse, and H. Lavender.

OUR GARDENS.

A Weekly Article specially Written for

Amateur Gardeners, Allotment Holders, &c.

By ALBERT CLARKE, Birkenshaw.

THE FLOWER GARDEN.

Spring flowering plants such as wallflowers, forget-me-nots, etc., may require a little attention now. After a sharp spell of frost they are often left partly lifted out of position. This generally happens when frost follows immediately after rain. The soil is then heavily charged with water, and the expansion which takes place as the water is turned into ice lifts the soil out of position. When the ice thaws the soil is left loose and light, and the plants suffer in consequence. The trouble is considerably aggravated if strong winds follow the thaw, as the wallflowers get blown about until a hole is the wallflowers get blown about until a hole is formed about the stem, thus leaving the roots exposed to the weather. Press the soil firmly around each plant and keep the surface loose and open by frequently stirring with a small rake.

ROSES.

In many gardens it is not thought advisable to mulch rose beds in the autumn. Personally we prefer that season, as by performing the work then there are ample opportunities for the rain and snow to wash the food down to the roots. There is no question about mulching being beneficial to rose trees, and those who may not feel disposed to mulch in autumn should certainly make a point of getting it done during the next few weeks. It keeps the roots at an even temperature, feeds them, and prevents rapid evaporation of moisture in the summer time. The conserving of moisture of course means less work in the shape of applying water. In some gardens a mulch is not applied because of its unsightly appearance. This may be overcome by breaking the manure up small and mixing it flat and even. It can then be covered with a thin layer of soil, and the unsightliness disappears. Intending planters of roses should lose no time in getting the trees in. It is quite true that trees planted in March, or even April will live, but the first year's returns in the shape of bloom will be very small. A variety named Ecarlate is highly spoken of as being good in every way. It is rich red, free flowering, and continues in bloom later than almost any other variety. Red roses are very popular and for the time being have ousted the pinks and whites from premier position. The following are all good red varieties:—General McArthur, Liberty, Richmond, C. J. Grahame, Caroline, Mrs. H. Turner, Etoile de France, Warrior, and Reynolds Hole.

LAWNS.

Recent heavy rains have put a stop to the use of the roller for the time being. The lawns should be kept under observation, however, and as soon as they are dry enough to allow the work to be resumed it should be done. There is no more valuable adjunct to the flower garden than a well-kept lawn, but it is almost safe to say that in the majority of gardens there is no part of the garden which is neglected as much as the lawn. In large establishments, where the general tendency is to reduce the staff of workers it is easy to understand that the lawns will be amongst the first things to be left to take care of themselves as much as possible. When time will allow, however, no pains should be spared to keep the turf in good condition. The present is a good time to apply a top-dressing. Old potting soil, riddled fine, and mixed up with half rotten horse droppings is an excellent dressing. If available, leaf mould will be found to give excellent results. Sea sand is good, so also is fine wood ashes, bone meal, soot, or any of the advertised specialities. It is ridiculous to expect a lawn to remain in good condition without giving it an occasional top-dressing of some kind. Although the summer months the ground is being cropped week by week. This must have a detrimental effect upon the vitality of the plants, and it is obvious that without the help of some suitable fertilising agency the beauty of the lawn must sooner or later be marred. If animal manures, soil, or leaf mould be used, this should be stirred occasionally with a wooden rake, or light brush. This will cause the dressing to settle down into position quickly, and prevent the grass turning yellow.

There is no duller time of the year than the present in the flower garden. This is no excuse for untidiness, however, and no effort should be spared in the attempt to keep all as trim and neat as possible. Sticks, straws, etc., are apt to accumulate during windy weather, and if not removed they create a very untidy appearance.

Crocuses should now be making their appearance, and a sharp lookout must be kept to prevent them being uprooted by field mice. These little vermin are very destructive, and as soon as evidence of their appearance is noticed traps should be regularly set for them. If allowed to remain they will prove an endless source of worry later on when seed pods commences.

BORDER CARNATIONS.

Amongst the few plants already making new growth are the border carnations. Sparrows have a liking for the tender young leaves and will devour them unless some protection is provided. Wire netting of small mesh may be used if available, failing which black linen thread may be stretched over and alongside the plants. The thread can be secured to small sticks fixed in the ground about two feet apart. Young plants in pots occupying cold frames should be freely ventilated on all favourable occasions. Keep a look out for greenfly and fumigate immediately it makes its appearance. Old plants that are assuming a somewhat straggling appearance may be lifted and replanted. If this is done newly made shoots should be cut away and the strong ones gathered together to form a shapely plant.

VEGETABLE GARDEN.

EARLY CROPS OF POTATOES.

Towards the end of January pick a number of sets on end closely, one layer deep, in shallow boxes, which must be placed near the glass in a cool, light position where they will be free from frost. The sprouts will thus become from four to six inches long. Select a dry, warm, and good border, and if it be not sheltered by a wall, fire it out into ridges, 6 inches high and about two feet apart. The additions of mellow, thoroughly decayed manure and sand will be beneficial. During early March sow every third or fourth row with a dwarf, hardy pea which will serve to protect the young shaws, which must be guarded by being earthed up directly they appear. This process should be continued, leaving only the extreme tops visible until the ridges are ten or twelve inches high. During severe weather cover with several inches of clean litter. About mid-March will be found the best time to plant the early crop, allowing the same distance between the ridges. If frames can be spared to place over the young plants they will be much less risk of injury from frost.

If the land intended for potatoes is not of a good heart, dress it moderately with half decayed, strawy manure, in autumn, except in the case of light ground, which must be dressed only in spring, the manure being laid in the trenches before placing the sets in them. All kinds of burnt vegetable refuse, peat and other scrapings, soot, decayed leaves, &c., should be collected for the purpose, placed in trenches or lightly forked into the surface where dibbling is practised.

MANURE.

I do not purpose making much reference under this heading, as I understand there is a paper that cannot be ignored. Many are the bad results I have traced to improper, badly kept, badly applied manures. Insect pests, such as wireworm, thrive especially applicable to the feathered world as to humans, and remember this applies not only to houses and scratching sheds, but also to the dog-kennel. Lime, salt, ashes, soot, and other disinfectants should form part of the compound. Stable manures in their various conditions in the houses or cribs must receive attention. Abolish draught. Can you sleep in it and remain healthy? Then you are a wonder indeed. Paper up old newspapers, if economy is the serious item, pasted on the inside of walls and roofs, or better still, a good soft lining to the house. Dry ventilation or draught I do not include under ventilation, in fact I am a veritable freshair fiend, and on ardent supporter of the open or windows' policy. Fresh air is essential, draught is fatal. Make it your duty to examine daily to satisfy your own conscience before placing the perfect stock birds you have just purchased into the houses.

I have found a dropping-board virtually a necessity for every house on a well-arranged poultry farm. You thereby secure absolute cleanliness with a minimum of labour, and also and keep them free of vermin. Dry, soft refuse from stables, sawdust, or, in fact, almost any moisture absorbing commodity, thus increasing your assets.

A timid word—liquid insecticide sprayed occasionally on the interior, and applied to the perches, is not a bubble, but to my mind an essential. Where vermin thrive, poultry cannot; and your aim is at present to keep your birds in the best health in order to secure the maximum of results.

SIZE OF RUNS.

These can hardly be made too large, as according to their size so long does the ground remain sweet and untainted; consequently I think it is better to state a minimum space rather than a maximum. Ten square yards of grass-land should certainly be allowed each bird if it is to be occupied permanently. Of course, they can be accommodated on less, but the run must be moved frequently and cleansed.

I greatly favour the idea of all pens being laundred up for 2 ft. from the ground, at all events where pens adjoin. This prevents the mice birds fighting, gives the occupants a more secure and contented, and also forms an excellent shelter in severe and windy weather.

(Any enquiries concerning poultry-keeping answered by our expert—Ralph R. Allen, Bayfordbury, Herts, will be answered through these columns free, but those requiring a postal answer direct, or sending birds for post-mortem examination, must remit half-crown postal order).

ACUTE ECZEMA CURED.

7, Hollis Street,
Kirkstall Road,
Leeds.

Dear Mr. Crosswaite,—

My sensations in sending you this UNSOLICITED TESTIMONIAL are to express my gratitude to you, and to testify to your marked ability to cure. Before I placed myself under your WONDERFUL HERBAL TREATMENT my skin used to itch and burn so severely that it was impossible to obtain any rest whatever. After being under your treatment for four weeks, I AM COMPLETELY CURED, and my skin is as clear and as good as ever. The cheapness of your treatment is very commendable, being well within the reach of all. Hoping you will continue to meet with the success you so highly deserve.—I remain, yours faithfully,

WHAT ARE YOUR CAPABILITIES?

A final word is necessary before closing this chapter. It is a careful and definite answer to the above question. It is useless for you to keep many birds if your land is limited, it may succeed for a season, perhaps two, but the end is assured for a season, perhaps two, but the end is assured for a season, perhaps two, but the end is assured

BARKSTON ASH LIBERALISM.

DIVISIONAL GATHERING IN LEEDS.

MR E. H. FOSTER'S BIRTHDAY PARTY.

MR STOREY AND REASONS FOR LIBERALS WINNING BARKSTON ASH.

On Saturday evening the members of the Executive of Barkston Ash Division Liberal Association were the guests of Mr E. H. Foster, J.P., C.C. (prospective Liberal candidate for the Division) and Mrs Foster, at the Leeds and County Liberal Club, and the function, which was in the nature of a birthday party—Mr Foster's birthday was on the 25th—was attended by about 120 ladies and gentlemen. What was described as "high tea," an excellent repast, was served to the company, and subsequently there was music and speech-making. Mr Martin Harvey, of Peckfield Lodge (President of the Association) presided, and he was supported by Mr and Mrs Foster, Mrs Harvey, Mr F. W. Sutcliffe (Chairman of the Association), and Mrs Sutcliffe, Mr Harold Storey, Mr R. G. Macpherson (hon. sec. of the Association), etc.

The President said that was a rather unique gathering. It was the first time they had had such a large number at an Executive meeting, and they had a very good idea as to why they had turned up in such large numbers. It happened to be pretty near the birthday of their esteemed candidate, Mr Foster—(applause)—the exact date was the 25th, and another great man—Bobbie Burns—was born on the same day. (Laughter). His first duty was to tender to Mr Foster the very best of wishes on that occasion. (Applause). Mr Foster, they knew, was the very best of Parliamentary candidates, but he was merely an ordinary individual in regard to birthdays. (Laughter). He could have no more than one a year like the rest of them. (Laughter). Only the other day he was in Lancashire, and he picked up a Tory paper, and in reading it he really felt he had been lacking in his duty to Mr Foster and the Barkston Ash Division, because he found that by reading the Tory papers he could learn so much. (Laughter). He knew what had happened in the Cabinet, because that Tory paper quoted from other two Tory papers, and they even told him all about as to who was on one side and who was on the other on the Navy question. But it so happened that the men who were on one side in one paper were on the other side in the other paper. (Laughter). So there was no doubt about the truth of it. He congratulated the meeting on the attendance, and he congratulated them on the splendid position they held as a party. There was no mistake about it—the Liberals were on the winning side. They might have set-backs, but sooner or later their principles were bound to come out on top because they were founded on justice. (Applause).

Mr E. H. Foster, who had a rousing reception, said it was very gratifying to have such a large attendance at that Executive meeting at the beginning of the New Year, and at a period when they all felt the time was not far distant when they must be preparing for the fray. Whilst he saw so many present he could not help reflecting on the absence of four people—Mr and Mrs Dewhirst and Captain and Mrs Glover, but both families were represented. It was the feeling of everyone present that they owed a great deal to Mr and Mrs Dewhirst and Captain and Mrs Glover, and he recalled that one of the first things that happened when he began to tour the constituency was a bazaar at Whinmoor Lodge to help pay off an old debt, and on that it was largely due to the efforts of those he had named that the result was so satisfactory. He had been to see both invalids—Mr Dewhirst and Captain Glover, and he hoped that before long they would have them as active as ever. Mr Dewhirst had been laid up some little time, but when he saw him he was full of talk about Barkston Ash, and if he was not there in body he was with them in spirit. With regard to Captain Glover they all knew what a good sportsman he was, and he was glad to say that he would soon be amongst them again. (Applause). With regard to the fact that the next day was an interesting event in his life, he could only say that the past year had been the happiest year in what he was bound to confess had been a happy life. (Applause). He had perhaps had more of the good things of life than he deserved. ("No, no.") He had a happy family life, he was happy in his professional work, happy in his public work, and very happy in his relations with the constituency he hoped to represent in Parliament. (Applause). If they added to that a good digestion and an easy conscience they would see that he had not much to complain about. (Laughter).

Dealing with politics, he said he desired to say a word about Ulster—not Home Rule so far as land, because that was gone. A short time ago in discussing the position in Ireland one would have had to deal with the question as to whether Home Rule was applicable to the rest of Ireland, but that was gone, and the only question remaining was that of Ulster. At a meeting at Tadcaster he said the word "bogey" in regard to the Ulster question, and they would have noticed by the "Skyrack Courier" that Lieut. Boughey had rushed into the field. Unfortunately, he ran up against Mr Martin Harvey, and he did not think he expected that. (Laughter). If they had read the letter in the current issue of the "Courier" and the previous letters, they would agree that the gallant officer had been completely routed, and he thought, by them, he had retired to his tent, wherever he might happen to live. (Applause). He seemed to be annoyed because he (Mr Foster) had not replied to his letter, but he replied to anything he had to reply to in his speeches. Mr Harvey had proved conclusively that it was an absolute bogey to say there was the slightest fear of religious persecution following the granting of Home Rule. He had challenged Lieut. Boughey to quote one instance of religious persecution of Protestants by Catholics. There had been religious persecution in Ireland, and he was sorry to have to confess that it had been persecution of the Catholics by Protestants of the Ulster people, and it was indeed a black record. (Hear, hear). He personally admired the tenacious way the Nationalists had stuck to their religion in spite of persecution and in spite of the disabilities imposed upon them. He admitted that there might be trouble in Ulster on account of Home Rule, but it would be because the Liberal leaders had been misled by certain men by their wild speeches. He noticed that Mr Walter Long, whom they had been accustomed to regard as one of the most sober of the Unionist leaders, had been saying that the volunteers in Ulster were in no way inferior to the best army we could put in the field. Had they ever read more seditious talk than that? The granting of Home Rule was simply the restoring to Ireland of a Parliament that was taken from it by fraud and unblushing bribery. (Applause). In regard to the Navy question, he said he could well understand the Cabinet being divided upon the particular concrete proposal for the Estimates, but they were united on the underlying principle. Their view was that they must have a Navy strong enough for our needs to maintain our supremacy on the sea and to protect our trade routes. He had never heard any Liberal argue to the contrary. But the dominant idea in the mind of every progressive Liberal was that, subject to that, they did not want to spend a penny more, that they intended to devote as much money as they could to social reform, which was long past due. (Applause). The Tory policy was to spend as much on the Army and Navy as possible, and as little as possible on social reform. (Hear, hear). In regard to the land question, he said it was rather interesting to watch the movements of the Tory Party with respect to the proposals put forward by the Liberals. After attacking the urban part of the programme they were coming to assimilate it—probably because it was within the bounds of possibility that some of the urban landowners might be Liberals. (Laughter). It was shop-window dressing, however—(hear, hear)—and was not too seriously meant. In Barkston Ash the part of the land scheme that was most interesting was that which dealt with housing and wages. The poverty of the agricultural workers was not a question of to-day; it had been going on for decade after decade. That class of people was absolutely downtrodden and oppressed, and he said, as Liberal candidate for the Division, that he was out to raise these men. (Applause). It was admitted on all hands that their wages in some parts of England were at a level at which it was impossible to bring up families decently and provide them with reasonable food and clothing. He did not know what Liberalism meant if one of its first duties was not to do what it could to have a living wage provided for these men and decent houses for them to live in. (Loud applause).

An excellent musical programme was gone through. Miss Glover (Coblingham), who has a fine voice, sang three songs with good taste, and Miss Robson (Leeds), elocutionist and entertainer at the piano, and Mr Jefferson (Leeds) entertainer at the piano and accompanist, made very acceptable contributions. Mr Mitchell (Crossgates), violinist, played two solos which were greatly appreciated, and Mr Thornton (Bradford), humorist, caused roars of laughter with his funny stories.

Mr Wallbank (Halifax) proposed a vote of thanks to the artistes. He said that he was afraid they were sometimes looked upon as a party of discord—one man wanting this and another wanting that, but he did not think they could have a more harmonious party than they had there. (Applause).

Mr Westwood (Clifford), who seconded, said he believed their opponents would be surprised to find such a force in Liberalism in Barkston Ash. It behoved everyone of them to work hard to ensure the return of Mr Foster as member for the Division. (Applause).

The resolution was passed and Mr Jefferson responded.

Mr F. W. Sutcliffe (Chairman of the Association) proposed a vote of thanks to the host and hostess, and wished Mr Foster many happy returns of his birthday. When he looked at Mr and Mrs Foster he came to the conclusion that there was perfect union and complete happiness, and that, he said, was emblematic of the union between Mr Foster and Barkston Ash. (Applause). The people of the Division were beginning to like Mr Foster very well, indeed. He met a man the other day, and he said to him the people were beginning to see Mr Foster was a man of energy, and their opponents were beginning to find out that he was a dangerous man and that they would have to fight very hard if they were to keep the seat at next election. It was about sixteen years since he first met Mr Foster, and he then looked merely a boy—(laughter)—but he then stated his opinion that Mr Foster was a man of character and ability and a man with a purpose. That was equally true to-day, and if they returned him he would be one of the best Members that would go from Yorkshire. (Applause). They wished him many happy returns of the day; they hoped that he would do his best for his town and the small country place in which he lived, but that he would do exceedingly well for Barkston Ash. (Applause).

Mr Harold Story, in seconding, said there were three reasons why they might hope to win Barkston Ash. One reason was that the conditions were changing in their favour and they would not fight again with the plural voter. That would take off perhaps about 350 of the Tory majority, and conditions would probably be in their favour. There seemed no signs that the Tory Party would have a programme to go to the country upon, and their weakness was a strength to the Liberals. On the other hand, the Liberal Party would have one of the best political programmes to lay before the country that they had ever had. A second reason was that they had Mr Foster as their candidate. He was not only a good politician and a good, forcible speaker, but he was a worker. (Applause). All his own party were learning to have confidence in him, and to support him, and that, after all, was the work that won elections. A third reason was that there had never been a time in the history of the Association when there was so much unity, enthusiasm, and friendliness among the members. They wished Mr Foster many happy returns of his birthday and also many decisive and happy returns to Westminster as Member for Barkston Ash. (Applause).

Mr R. Bowmidge (Garforth), who supported, said that in Barkston Ash they had a good cause and an excellent candidate—a man of character and strength.

The resolution was very cordially passed, and Mr Foster replied on behalf of Mrs Foster and himself. He said that although he wished the Government to complete their work and did not desire an election until June, 1915, he was not in the least bit afraid of a contest in Barkston Ash whenever it might come. He thought that had been an election twelve months ago they would have been beaten, but he did not think so now. He agreed with Mr Storey that they were now a happy and harmonious party. He was glad that they had associated his wife's name with the resolution, because she had done a great deal in connection with his campaign. He was in favour of women's suffrage, and it was because he found his wife had a great deal more sense than he had. (Laughter). During the considerable number of years they had been married—he did not say how many—(laughter)—he had always found her advice, and still had often kept him back from doing foolish things and encouraged him to do wise things.

In proposing a vote of thanks to Mr Harvey, Mr Foster said they could not have a better President, and they were exceedingly fortunate in getting him to accept the position. (Applause).

The President replied, and proposed a vote of thanks to the Press. He said that in the North they were well served by the party Press, but in Barkston Ash they had a neutral Press, and he referred particularly to the "Skyrack Courier." It was a most excellent paper, giving both sides of the case absolutely fairly, and as a man who believed in fair play he could admire that attitude. (Applause).

The proceedings terminated with the singing of the National Anthem and cheers for Mr and Mrs Foster.

MICKLEFIELD EXPLOSION FUND—A SUGGESTION.

(To the Editor).

Sir,—A copy of your excellent journal reached me by this morning's mail, dated November 7th, and I notice that some correspondence has been circulated concerning the Micklefield Colliery Disaster Relief Fund. For many years I have watched for news of this kind, and have wondered how it would be spent, but being so far away now I was amazed at its abnormal growth. I should think there are not many widows left still unmarried alive, but I am also in entire support with the suggestion of "Sympathy" that they should receive £1 per week instead of 10s. It would take a long time to exhaust the fund at that rate.

But I would suggest to the Committee that some of the money might be given as a pension to those miners who were in the explosion and survived. Many of them, to my knowledge, suffered so severely from "afterdamp" that their health was permanently undermined. They were sufferers in a very real sense, for they were thrown out of employment for two or three months. Some of them were noble in their heroism. They not only assisted one another in their struggles to escape from the pit, but after getting out were the first to volunteer and to go down again into that hell from which they had had a providential and miraculous escape, and join the first rescue party.

If my memory is correct, there were sixty-six survivors. I don't know how many of them are still living, but I know some to whom a pension of 5s. or 10s. a week would be a God-send. Those of us who lost loved ones and friends will greatly cherish the memory of that bitter time to our grave, but we should be glad to learn that some provision had been made, and I feel sure it would be a joy shared by the generous subscribers of their fund, for the survivors.

When the explosion occurred on April 30th, 1896, I was a boy living at Newthorpe. There were six men went from our village that morning, and only one came back alive.—Yours, etc.,

W. H. HARDWICK.

THE GREATEST BAR TO HUMAN PROGRESS.

(To the Editor).

Sir,—The terrible expenditure of Europe amounts to £2,000,000,000 per year and it is rapidly increasing. About 5,000,000 people were permanently in the European armies and navies, and as these might earn £7,000,000,000 in civil life, armaments practically cost Europe £14,000,000,000 per year in time of peace. The British Empire contributes £200,000,000 annually on army and navy. About 500,000 white British men are kept permanently under arms, and as these might earn £50,000,000, in civil life, preparations for war cost us £50,000,000 per year. The nations of Europe and civilisation itself threaten to break down under the intolerable military burden.

What is the cause of the mad armament race? The real cause, in my opinion, lies in the unfortunate political organisation of Europe. The European great powers are divided into two groups, the Triple Alliance and the Triple Entente. They distrust one another. As both groups are approximately equally strong, each group tries to get the advantage over the other by increasing it's armaments.

What is the remedy for this state of affairs? As the reduction of armaments by mutual agreement has proved hitherto impracticable and would in any case only be a temporary remedy, the ruinous armament race can be stopped only if we abolish the divisions amongst the Powers, if we unite the Triple Alliance and the Triple Entente into a Sextuple Alliance. The sense has slowly studied the political problems which at present divide the nations. He has discussed the matter with the leading European rulers, statesmen, and politicians, and has come to the conclusion that it is possible to unite the European Powers in an Alliance or Federation. France and Russia were once our enemies, and we have been at war with both. Our present agreement and friendship with them show that apparently irreconcilable differences may be overcome by friendly discussion and adjustment, provided there be goodwill on both sides. Therefore, the greatest need is the enlightenment of the people. Only popular pressure can bring about the unification of Europe. This will lead to a gradual reduction of armaments and a great increase of prosperity, for the economic waste of £1,000,000,000 per year will then enormously decrease.

In the hope of promoting the unity of Europe I have founded the European Unity League. Its name explains its object. I call for the sympathy and support of your readers and will gladly explain to all who write to me to the temporary Offices, 39a, St. James' Street, Piccadilly, London, my aims and proposals at greater length than I can in this letter. I invite your readers to become members of the European Unity League and to send me in my propaganda. Let me add that the membership of the League involves no financial or other liability whatever.—Yours, etc.,

MAX WAECHTER.

INTERMENT ALIVE.

(To the Editor).

Sir,—The sudden death of a miner reported in your valuable journal last week prompts me to ask permission to point out that a well-known London daily of the 9th inst reports the narrow escape of a Cossack, named Chrustinko, from interment alive. It appears that the man's death was duly certified by the Russian authorities, and after the body had been in the morgue for two days it was buried. The coffin had been lowered to the grave, and the usual spadeful of earth cast on by the mourners, when repeated knocking and muffled cries were heard proceeding from the grave. The majority of those present fled in terror, but some of the nearest relatives mustered up courage to descend into the grave and bring the coffin to the surface, where it was opened. The re-incarcerated dead man then stated that for some days he had lost the power of speech, but was able to hear, and so was conscious the whole time of the preparations for his funeral and interment. Chrustinko was carried in triumph back to the village, where he had the extraordinary experience of partaking of his own funeral feast. The two doctors who attended the Cossack in his illness were also present at the feast.

In was a similar occurrence to the above, of which I was an eye-witness, where a young lady showed signs of life by screaming, and was rescued, when the first clods of earth were thrown on her coffin during burial, that led Count Karnice Karnicki, chamberlain to the Czar of Russia, to invent his mechanical contrivance for the rescue of people who have the misfortune to be buried alive. To those of your readers who desire further information on the subject, I shall be pleased to send it free on receiving envelope, stamped and addressed.—Your obedient servant,

JAS. R. WILLIAMSON.

HINTS FOR THE HOME.

When washing worn oilcloth, add a tablespoonful of painter's size to a pailful of water. This will give the worn surface a fine gloss.

Bones which are not required for the stock-pot immediately should be dried in a slow oven. They can then be kept for several weeks before being used.

To clean brass fire-irons which have become blackened, rub with a little spirits of salts, wash with warm water, and polish in the usual way. This treatment must not be given to lacquered articles.

When slicing bacon place it with the rind side down, and do not cut through the rind. When the slices are cut, slip the knife round them as near the rind as possible.

A teaspoonful of eau-de-cologne in a warm bath is most refreshing, while scent placed on the forehead of anyone who suffers from headache generally gives relief.

The keys of a piano should never be washed with ordinary soap and water, as is often done. This discolours the ivory, and if the keys are stained it is better to rub them with a little lemon-juice and salt.

To test butter, take a clean piece of white paper, smear a little of the butter on it, roll up the paper, and set it on fire. If the butter is pure the smell will be rather pleasant, but the odour is distinctly tallowy if the butter is made up wholly or in part of animal fats.

TO MEND KID OR SUEDE GLOVES.

A simple and effective way of mending kid or suede gloves is to obtain buttonhole twist of the same colour as gloves, and neatly buttonhole-stitch round the tear. Then turn to the wrong side and draw the torn portions together by sewing through the knots of the buttonhole stitches. This avoids the tendency to further tearing round the stitches, and also is not a unsightly darn.

CHEAP CUSHIONS.

Mothers are often at a loss how to employ their little ones during the long winter evenings. The following is attractive to the children and profitable to the mother. Get all the waste wool ends, patterns, petticoats, stockings (either machine or hand knitted), cut them in pieces about three inches square, and give them to the children to unravel. The result will be a nice soft stuffing for a cushion, which will not get in lumps. Imitation elder-down quilts may be produced by the same means with a little thought, some thin calico, and bright cretonne.

GOOD ORGANIZATION.

Making ready is especially necessary when you are planning to have someone to come to the house to help with the needlework. Be sure in such a case that all you will need in the way of linings and sewing materials has been brought and laid aside, that patterns and pieces are in order, so that the dressmaker will not waste her time while you rush wildly forth to buy necessaries. When anyone is coming into the house to do work, whether it be a dressmaker or a charwoman, you are much more sure of good results if you have planned the work in advance and have everything ready to begin. Know just what you wish to have done first, and so all get to work without loss of time. The difference between the woman who does this and the woman who neglects it is just the difference between a good plumber who gets the best out of himself and others, and the careless woman who takes what she can get, whether this be good or bad.

THE ATTRACTIVE WOMAN.

We English are great beauty-lovers. We lavish endless pains upon our gardens, we spend more thought and money over our houses than any other nation. Yet in no nation in the world are the women—who should be the voice-part, the climax of melody, in the harmony of their surroundings—so blind to the fact that to dress successfully requires earnest thought, merciless self-analysis, and above all an iron self-control. Given these, it is within the power of every girl to be "very attractive," which is nearly as good as being pretty, and sometimes even better; for while the pretty girl gets first chance to draw people to seek her out, it is the attractive girl who holds and keeps attention, whether it a the attention of men or of women, of the dance partner of an evening, or the crotchety elderly aunt, who has it in her power to make or mar one's whole future.

THE YOUNG MOTHER'S MISTAKE.

In the daily work of a mother it is more important to conserve energy than it is to spend it—vastly more necessary to control nerve force than it is to exhibit it... It is what the mother has within herself that determines her success, and therefore she must be provident of all her forces—conserving her output so that in quietness new powers may be generated by them. To give out energy, nerve force, physical strength, mental effort, in one great generous tumble until there is nothing left but exhaustion, is the too common mistake of young mothers.

TAKE TIME TO REST.

Very few women, I think (says a writer), really grasp the true meaning of rest. They feel the need of it, that is quite obvious; they even admit the importance of it, but they grudge the time given to it. There is so much to be done. The days, no matter how long, are never half long enough, and so that hour's rest, so much needed, is ignored, or at best compromised, and some domestic duty is done during the so-called hour of rest. This is pure farce. It is playing fast and loose with the matter, and the woman who only allows herself such scrappy apology for relaxation is only fooling herself, and she is fairly certain to grow old much earlier than if she had dealt more wisely with herself. The breakneck pace, the nonstop system is fatal, and thus when age with his stealing step hath clawed you in his clutches it will be rather late in the day to talk about trying to keep juvenile—won't it? You may try—perhaps—I don't say you will—but you may play pranks with yourself without suffering while young. However, when a woman gets to, say, forty, or thereabouts, she must turn over a new leaf, and take at least some little care of herself, unless she wants to feel as threadbare as a moth-eaten mat, and to look "as haggard as a murderer."

WOMEN WHO ARE FAILURES.

A schoolmistress was asked by a friend to go with her to a women's meeting at which several local women were to speak. "No, thank you, my dear," answered the teacher; "I know those women as you do not: I have had their children to teach; I have had the work of trying to undo the mess that they have made. The mistake you make is this: those women are not there because they are successful women, but because they are failures as mothers. Get all those to-day that you can find in the home too small; it was too big for them." No truer words were ever spoken, as is well-known to those who know the facts. There is many a woman (says a writer) before the public to-day who can talk with ease from the platform to a hallful of women, but who found herself absolutely incapable of effectively talking to one child in her own home. It was not the smallness of her task, but its greatness, its appalling greatness, that drove her from her home to the platform. A child's mind has been the Waterloo of many a woman and mother who, to hide her failure in the home, is on the platform crying for a wider sphere. The task in the home was too big for her.

HOW I RUBBED AWAY A STONE OF FAT FROM MY HIPS AND ABDOMEN IN TWO WEEKS' TIME.

For years I tried every possible means to hide the excessive fat on my hips and abdomen, it seemed as if it had accumulated on just the two places that it would be most noticeable. Everything that I tried failed to make me slim, but a friend who is a lady friend who had studied herboriterie, I learned the secret of a harmless plan which enabled me to rub away with ease a stone of fat in the course of two weeks.

The plan is so simple and some of my friends seem so glad to know of it that I think there may be sister readers of the "Skyrack Courier" who have perhaps been longing for the very advice. First, get from any good chemist 1 dram of quassia chips and 3 ounces of cirolax bark extract. Take them home and after putting the quassia chips in a pan pour over it a teacupful of boiling water. When this has stood for about minute, strain through a cloth and add the cirolax bark extract. The next step is mixture into a bottle and apply in every night and morning with your hands for about ten minutes, using a circular movement. Each time you can almost see some of the fat melt away. At first I thought it must be a dream, but when I measured there was no longer any doubt. I soon grew too slender for my clothes and had to have them taken in, but it was a pleasure to do it, and I shall feel eternally grateful to the lady who showed me how easy it was to regain my youthful figure. ROTHWELL MECHANICS' INSTITUTE

ANNUAL MEETING.

The annual meeting of the Rothwell Mechanics' Institute, was held in the schoolroom at the Institute on Wednesday night, Mr J. Hirst presiding. There was a good attendance of officers and members.

The annual report showed that the satisfactory progress of former years had been continued. The interest in billiards had been well maintained and several successful handicaps had been promoted, the winner on the cup for the year being Mr W. Armstead. The Institute's second team were to be congratulated on winning the second division of the Oulton and District Billiard League in the season 1912-1913. Both teams had again entered and held good positions in the League for the present season. During the year the smoke-room, reading-room, and side entrance had been repainted, the garden well fenced, and several other minor repairs carried out. Considerable expense had been incurred in recovering and repairing a billiard table, towards which Messrs O. Pawson and W. Pindar kindly played an exhibition match. The library had been reshelved with a good selection of books, on which £43 10s. 1d. had been spent; £40 of the grant had yet to be spent, and it was hoped the members would take full advantage of the facilities given for reading. The selection of the books was kindly undertaken by Mrs Bock, Miss Cromack, and Mrs T. P. Whiteley, along with the literary secretary, Mr C. J. Barker. The finances of the Institute were very satisfactory, even better than the high level reached last year; the total income was £358 3s. 4d., an increase of £59 2s. 6d. Billiards showed an increase of £49 2s. 0d., bowlings £8 8s. 10d., and ordinary subscriptions £4 12s. 2d. The increased income had enabled the committee to repay one and two-fifth shares owing to the Building Society, amounting to £122 5s. 10d. The monthly payments had reduced the debt by £47 10s. 7d., so that in all the debt had been reduced by £140 2s. 5d. This had reduced the weekly payments to 10s.

Mr Hirst, in moving the adoption of the report and balance sheet, said they would see that it was the 60th annual report, and they might take it as the diamond jubilee of the Institute, and he hoped it would be a memorable year in its history. He had made some enquiry, and was told that the Institute was formed in the schoolroom in Swithen Street, known as the Wesleyan Sunday School. He was proud to say that some of those who were associated with the forming of the Institute had grandsons who were members, and he hoped they would long have the friends or grandchildren succeeding grandfathers as members. They as members had to be extremely grateful to those who sixty years ago inaugurated the Institute. The present report, taking it on the whole, was a very satisfactory one. They were proud of the fact that the second room of the billiard section had won in the first place in the second division of the Oulton and District Billiard League. That was a good example to the senior team, who he hoped would win their division. He was glad to find they had tried to make the smoke-room comfortable by the recent renovations. He also referred to the new library. They had not, however, he said, carried out all the suggestions made at the last meeting in forming a swimming club or gymnasium, but they would probably come in due course. Commenting upon the balance sheet, Mr Hirst said he was pleased to see the increased interest in billiards, the receipts showing an increase of £9 2s. 6d. For the past two years the receipts had gone up more than 30 per cent. On the mortgage they had in two years wiped off £327 10s. 11d. The only unsatisfactory item was the arrears in subscriptions of £10 0s. 11d. No member, he said, who had full benefits of the Institute ought to be in arrears with his subscription. He would even go further and say that no member ought to be asked for his subscription. The best way he could suggest of their celebrating the diamond jubilee was for them to make up their minds that at the end of the year the Institute should be clear of debt. He felt sure that if the gentlemen would only show the ladies the way that would be accomplished.

Mr P. Wade seconded the adoption of the balance sheet, and it was carried. Mr Wade had one suggestion to make, and that was that the report should in future contain details of the membership of the Institute.

The treasurer (Mr A. W. Scaife) stated that since the balance sheet had been prepared some of the subscriptions had been paid, so that the figure was not so great as it appeared. Amounts which represented the arrears of members who had left the district had been included in the item. If they were only crossed off, as they should be, the amount of arrears would be very small.

Mr J. Butterick said he contended that if a member left and did not give notice to that effect he was liable to pay his subscription. He advocated that all members should pay their subscriptions in advance.

Mr G. Wade suggested that members be notified of arrears at the end of each quarter.

Mr Butterick: Supposing the member left they would be in precisely the same position as at present.

Mr J. Batty asked if there was no rule stating that in order to should give notice when he left the Institute.

The secretary said there was no such rule, but read from the rules that members might should cease if a member did no pay arrears one month after receiving notice.

Mr Butterick moved that the rule be in future strictly adhered to.

The motion was dropped.

The following officers were elected:—President, Major H. W. Oxberby; vice-presidents, Messrs. Ald. Ashdown, Andrews, G. Armitage, Jos. Armitage, Dr. Buck, J. Farrar, Jas. Hargreaves, J. B. Hindle, J. Hirst, T. Kirkby, J. R. Scaife, Dr. Stevenson, and T. P. Whiteley.

Mr W. F. Hirst was re-elected secretary, and Mr A. W. Scaife treasurer. Committee: Messrs. H. Armitage, J. F. Armitage, C. J. Barker, J. A. Bell, T. W. Bramley, J. Butterick, Jas. Cowgill, G. H. Palmer, and P. Wade. Mr A. Marshall and Mr Chas. P. Ward were re-elected auditors.

Votes of thanks to the officers of the past year were passed for their services, and Mr J. Hirst was also cordially thanked for presiding.

The Guardians have decided to increase the salaries of the master and matron at the workhouse.

A DOUBLE LAUNCH at Selby.—Two steel screw trawlers measuring 126.6 ft. x 26 ft. 3 in. by 12 ft. 3 in. were launched on Thursday by Messrs Cochrane and Sons, Selby. The vessels have been built for Messrs Pickering and Haldane's Steam Trawling Co. (Ltd.), Hull. The launching ceremonies were gracefully performed, in the presence of a good attendance, by Mrs T. L. Haldane and Mrs G. McCann, of Hull.

LECTURE TO ROTHWELL MINING CLASS.

THE USE OF EXPLOSIVES.

At the mining class on Monday evening, held at Rothwell Council School, a very interesting lecture was given on the students and several of their friends by Messrs Purdy and White, of the Nobel's Explosives Company, Limited, Glasgow, on "The use of explosives in mines."

Mr Purdy, in his opening remarks, gave his own experience in mining, and explained how the miners used to make up their own explosive cartridges at their homes. At that time the miner used to buy a barrel of powder and keep it at his own home. He then dealt with the passing of the Coal Mines Regulation Acts, from the early sixties, when the first inspectors were appointed, and the Act of 1872, which made it illegal for miners to stem their shots with iron or steel stemmers, and explained that this was the year when compressed powder was brought into use.

In dealing with the Act of 1887, which made it compulsory for colliery managers to be certificated, Mr Purdy said that at this time men who were holding positions as managers were granted what were called service certificates, instead of those having to go through the ordeal of passing an examination, and now they had come to the time when all deputies must be certificated. He went on to show how this Act had placed the scientific gentleman, who thoroughly understood his work, in an awkward position, as those who had no book science were now compelled to attend an evening school to gain their diplomas.

In dealing with firing shots with black powder and its dangers, the lecturer said that Professor Galloway had proved that air compressed in a shot hole during the stemming of a shot raised the temperature sufficiently to ignite the explosive and cause a premature shot.

Mr White, in a very interesting address, explained the progress which had been made in explosives since they came into use in their mines, etc. In was in 1886, said Mr White, that Alfred Noble made his first dynamite, and by experiments he brought out the strongest explosive made, which was called "blasting gelatine," and followed on with other types of explosives up to the present time, when all explosives have to pass the Home Office test before being placed on the permitted list of explosives. After Noble had found out these high explosives he was at a loss to know how to fire them. He, however, made experiments, and found that by using a No. 6 detonator he had attained a factor of safety. Mr White then showed the latest invention in shot firing with a very small battery and the safety match, experiments being carried out by both. He described how the detonators were made, and showed the difference between high and low pressure detonators, and how misfires in shot firing were caused. Experiments were also made with a galvanometer to show whether the detonators were good or bad ones.

A very hearty vote of thanks was proposed by Mr Wilson, and this was cordially passed.

REMINISCENCES OF A WELL-KNOWN FARMER.

ENTERTAINED ROYALTY.

Mr George Burton, of Thorpe Willoughby, Selby, who celebrated his 85th birthday on Monday, has been interviewed by a reporter of the York paper, and he gave some interesting information. He is a native of Selby, where both his paternal and maternal grandfathers resided, and his father carried on business. The grandfathers and his three uncles were captains in the merchant service. Fair sized vessels sailed out of Selby in those days, and a great shipping trade was done. His father was cosmopolitan in his pursuits. Not only was he a farmer, but he engaged in the shipping business, and was a wine and spirit merchant, and a butcher. In the last-named business he had extensive dealings with the London markets.

Mr Burton's recollections of his boyhood days are quaint and interesting. He remembers seeing the mail coach arrive daily as Selby. It was the event of the day when the horses were changed at the Old George Inn, now the Londesborough Arms Hotel. Another long-to-be-remembered occurrence was when his grandmother went up to London by coach to attend on her husband, the captain, who had fallen down the hold of his vessel and broken his leg. The venturesome journey undertaken by the lady was more a topic of public discussion than the accident to the unfortunate skipper. Then Mr Burton recalled the time when there were only three railways in the whole of England—the Stockton and Darlington, the Liverpool and Manchester, and the Leeds and Selby.

The first time he went up to London, he said, they left Selby at 7 o'clock in the morning, and arrived in town at 4 o'clock in the afternoon. The distance is 179 miles, and as he remarked, "They gave us plenty for our money." When the coaches were put off the roads of course there were hundreds of horses thrown out of work, and it was predicted on all hands that horse-breeding would cease and horses become practically extinct. But, continued Mr Burton, it was soon found that there were numberless purposes for which horses were required, and as a matter of fact the horse trade became better than ever. Casting back to the old mail coaches, Mr Burton said he remembered that after the mail had arrived the whole of the letters were delivered by a "woman postman," who carried them in a "reticule basket." At that time, he remarked, it cost sixpence to send a letter from London to Selby.

Turning to agriculture he expressed the opinion that farming had gone down. If a man could get a good farm at a reasonable rent there was a living to be made, but with heavy rent for poor land there was no money in it. As for a small holding, a man could not pay a rent and live. A man might get along who had sons and daughters to help him, and who were content to receive small wages. But young men and women would not work nowadays for nothing, and the Saturday night amusements had also to be reckoned with.

The late King Edward, while Prince of Wales, was, he said, shooting over Lord Londesborough's estate with a party which included his lordship, the late Duke of Cambridge, the Duke of Devonshire (then Lord Hartington), Lord Wenlock, and others. They had shot over Brayton Barff, which was a favourite partridge ground, and as they were near his farm he invited them all in to have a cup of tea. "And the Prince told me," said the old gentleman, "that he enjoyed it very much."

Mr Burton says his favourite exercise now is walking. He does not smoke, and is very abstemious; but he likes a pinch of snuff occasionally. But he accept is only under three conditions—namely, that it is offered by a gentleman, that it is contained in a silver box, and that it is good.

HUNTING IN THE DISTRICT.

THE FUN OF THE CHASE.

On Tuesday the York and Ainsty Hunt met at Skip Bridge, and there was a large field. Hounds went to Skip Bridge Whin for the first draw, and it proved blank. A fox had been viewed only a few fields away, so Cumpstone went to find him, first drawing the willows behind Moor Monkton village. Reynard got up the river bank, and hounds went away and travelled on at a very nice pace, and Red House Wood looked like being reached in a few fields. Whether the fox got turned or not hounds went practically extinct. But, continued Mr Burton, it was soon found that there were numberless purposes for which horses were required, and as a matter of fact the horse trade became better than ever. Casting back to the old mail coaches, Mr Burton said he remembered that after the mail had arrived the whole of the letters were delivered by a "woman postman," who carried them in a "reticule basket." A SAD ACCIDENT.—An accident of a somewhat serious nature occurred at Tadcaster about noon on Monday. It appears that Harold White, formerly in business at Easingwold, was exercising a horse and riding in the direction of Colton, a village about five miles distant to his farm, when the animal shied. The rider was thrown heavily to the ground, and it is feared that he has sustained a fracture of the skull. Mr White was to have been married on Wednesday.

ROGUE AND VAGABOND.—At an Occasional Court at Tadcaster on Monday—before Messrs C. B. Lamb and J. H. Ingleby—John Martin, of no fixed residence, was charged with begging at Tadcaster East. He went to the residence of P.C. Southern and asked for assistance. He also said that he wanted locking-up, and that he "wanted a month." There were many previous convictions against the man. He was treated as a rogue and vagabond, and sent to goal for a month.

ULLESKELF WESLEYAN CHAPEL.—On Wednesday evening an entertainment was given in the Schoolroom by Mr John Thorpe's party (York), and the following programme was rendered:—Pianoforte solo, Mrs Geo. Thorpe; song, "The River of Years," Mr Geo. Thorpe; humorous song, "A City Man," Mr P. S. Edmonds; humorous song, "The ship that first brought me over," Mr Jno Thorpe; song, "Angus MacDonald," Mrs Fred Bellwood; recitation, "Halfway Doins," Mr P. S. Edmonds; song, "Down the vale," Mr Geo. Thorpe; humorous song, "My Old Dutch," Mr Jno. Thorpe; song, "A May morning," Mrs Fred Bellwood; humorous song, "Tick tock," Mr Jno. Thorpe; recitation, "The Wreck of the Nancy Bell," Mr P. S. Edmonds; song, "My ain folk," Mrs Fred Bellwood; duet, "Larboard watch," Messrs G. and J. Thorpe; humorous song, "The ole black 'oss," Mr P. S. Edmonds; and song, "At the Ferry," Mrs Fred Bellwood. Mrs Geo. Thorpe acted as accompanist. Most of the items were encored, and the entertainment was thoroughly enjoyed by a very large audience. A collection was taken for the forthcoming bazaar fund.

ROTHWELL & DISTRICT JOTTINGS.

Rothwell is the only place in the district that possesses a Mechanics' Institute, although there are many institutes of one kind or another, and this year it is celebrating its diamond jubilee. It is the common meeting ground for all classes, and in its time the Institute has done an incalculable amount of good. Now it is suggested that this year is an opportune time for the residents of the old town to dip deeply into their pockets and wipe out the debt on the buildings, and the opportunity should not be allowed to slip. The committee should get to work at once, and if a properly-planned scheme were launched, one is optimistic enough to believe that the diamond jubilee would be celebrated in a fitting manner.

The rejection by the ratepayers of Leeds of the proposal to supply Doncaster and other districts with water cannot fail to have some influence on the arbitration proceedings to settle the amount of compensation to be paid by the city authorities to Tadcaster Rural District Council for the loss of Crossgates. Compensation is claimed for the loss of the Kiddal scheme, and I am informed that, in order to minimise its value, it was actually stated on behalf of Leeds that the people of Barwick parish were in favour of a supply being obtained from Leeds. That one does not believe. Now that the Leeds scheme has been defeated, what will counsel say? It may be brought forward again, but the Leeds officials could not say that it would not meet with any better fate.

It is impossible for anyone to express an opinion on the Leeds scheme without going thoroughly into it, but the figures given for Sherburn and South Milford are not reliable. In the first place, South Milford has a water scheme, whatever its merits or demerits, and there is a proposal to extend it under consideration. If it is carried out South Milford will require no water from the city, and the quantity credited to Sherburn is very much in excess of its requirements, having regard to the population that would avail themselves of the water.

What the Vicar of Seacroft states is perfectly true. In announcing that collections would be made for Leeds medical charities, he says that he fears there are many who accept the benefit of these charities as a matter of course, and some almost as a right, but forget that "money is needed to keep these great institutions in working order." Church collections furnish a part of the Leeds Infirmary income, but many villagers never contribute a farthing, and they are always ready to avail themselves of the institution's services when-ever they need them.

Although Crossgates people have a fairly high opinion of themselves, some of them apparently believe that their monetary value has been very considerably over-estimated. It is true, as Mr Chadwick stated the other night, that Barwick residents, before the annexation, asserted that they would save money by casting-off, like a poor relation, the pretentious suburb of Crossgates, and their belief has been well founded, inasmuch as their rates have dropped to a very low figure, but, on the other hand—and here they made a blunder—they are unable to carry out the Kiddal water scheme without the assistance of Crossgates ratepayers, and a very valuable undertaking has consequently been abandoned.

For the loss of the scheme compensation has been claimed—that the District Council will get it is another question—and, of course, in addition, Leeds will pay the amount of money expended on the works. This the Corporation have already offered. So far as the Poor Law is concerned, Crossgates is a valuable asset to Leeds Union, seeing that the poor rate is practically all profit, and it is only justice that compensation should be paid to Tadcaster Guardians. Without doubt, as I pointed out at the time, Tadcaster District Council were misled concerning the value of Crossgates, otherwise they would have fought the annexation proposals in Parliament.

A good story is related by the Vicar of Manston anent the falling of the west wall of the new church during a gale of wind. An old inhabitant (he says) regarded the ruins with satisfaction, and remarked: "Ah'm reet glad they've blown t'end in. Whatever do they want a new church at Manston for? Yon was good enough for my father. It's good enough for you." "I fear," remarks the Vicar, "his father's umbrella and boot soles, if they happily survive, would keep out water better than the old church, to say nothing of the fact that two sons take up more sitting-room than one father, even if we are not the men our fathers were. But it is a glorious and laudable devotion to tradition, and the sentiment is worth of preservation."

In South Milford and Seacroft the matrimonial market is by no means brisk, if all statements are true, and the fact that not a single wedding took place at Seacroft Church during the year may cause some emotion among the ladies. The example set by the squire, who has eschewed matrimony, may have had some influence, and the tax on bachelors, suggested the other night, might give some satisfaction to the ladies. It seems, however, the swains of Seacroft have not been altogether lacking in their duty, but they have not chosen Seacroft brides, for "in each case of banns published the bride lived in the other parish." Clearly the home attractions have not been sufficiently great for the male 'Crofters. In South Milford it was suggested that a competition in bread-making among spinsters of marriageable age—what that age is I dare not suggest—might induce competition for the affections of the leading prize-winners, but what inducement can be offered the young men of Seacroft?

The question of Leeds and Barwick charities, following the annexation of Crossgates, was bound to come up sooner or later, and the suggestion by the Charity Commissioners that a new scheme should be formed for the management of the parish property comes as no surprise. The yearly income from the property is about £70 per annum, and it goes towards the reduction of the poor rate. Such a sum is of real value to Barwick and Scholes, but to Leeds it is a triviality, and it would be a graceful act if the city authorities declined to participate in the charity. Of course, it may be argued that they cannot very well adopt such an attitude, inasmuch as they would be robbing the ratepayers of Crossgates, but if an expressed desire to waive all claim to the rents, and accepting the quarry at Manston as the share of the city, were made to the Charity Commissioners it would undoubtedly have great weight.

The Tadcaster Brewster Sessions report was an eminently satisfactory one, and the magistrates had no comment to pass upon it. In five years the number of persons proceeded against has fallen from 91 to 32—a reduction of 59, and a singular feature is that the number for the last two years is precisely the same, although there is a slight difference in the convictions. A gratifying feature is the fact that only ten persons resident in the area go into trouble with the police, no fewer than 22 non-residents being proceeded against, and that is a matter for congratulation. My own opinion is that the magistrates' duties, under the Licensing Laws, will never again be so heavy as they were five years ago. Either people are drinking less beer, or, as a wag put it, "they are carrying it better," although I incline to the view that the drinking habits are improving, and folks are exercising greater self-control.

Owing to the restrictions the animal known as the pig is decreasing in number, and, of course, the price of the breakfast bacon, which concerns everybody nearly, is bound to go higher unless some means are adopted to increase the swine herd. A Boston Spa correspondent, who has kept black Berkshire pigs for many years, makes some suggestions which are worthy of consideration. He says:—"I consider the pig a very intelligent animal, and naturally clean in its habits, if the chances to be so are given it. I think if the sties were kept clean, the food provided given while sweet and fresh, and not kept for weeks in a dirty tub, and eaten out of dirty troughs, as is very often the case, swine fever would be less frequent, and soon disappear."

If importunity will have any effect the people of Barwick and Scholes will eventually get reduced railway fares to Leeds. The parish "fathers" have written to the N.E.R. Co., they have given them the work of perusing a petition, but the question has not come to fruition. Let the railway officials have forgotten of the existence of the "haven of rest," the Council are to write them again, and the officials would, indeed, be wise if they would grant the request and save themselves further trouble. If they don't hurry up a deputation will be sent to them to convince them of the righteousness of the claim of Scholes.

As everybody knows, the cost of the maintenance of Station Road, Tadcaster, is a heavy drain upon the resources of the Rural Council, and assistance from the County Council cannot be obtained, nor could it be expected, seeing the Council were one of the leading authorities to attack the West Riding body for their extravagance. Nevertheless, it appears to me rather singular that the road from the end of Boston Spa highway to its junction with the Tadcaster Road is not considered a county highway, but the county officials declare that it is not. It is a puzzle, and it certainly justifies further investigation. If this portion of road were declared a main road it would be a considerable saving to the Rural Council, but one only wants to see absolutely fairplay between the ratepayers of the county and the ratepayers of the district, and a searching inquiry might reveal interesting information.

For several months an investigation has been going on about the ownership of an old quarry at Aberford, and the District Council have apparently finished with it. My information is that the parish has lost the quarry through disuse, and that it reverts to the lord of the manor or to one of the landowners in the district. If this is correct, it is very hard lines on Aberford. Garforth once possessed an old quarry, and the Parish Council sold it for £200, but the case of Aberford could not be similar, otherwise the quarry would belong to the parish now.

The Skyrack magistrates have been criticised at—of all places—Pontefract. It seems that a woman was before the borough magistrates for an offence, and it was stated that there were several convictions against her, and that she had been recently "sent down" for a month by the Leeds West Riding magistrates. "We're not bound by West Riding decisions here," said the Clerk. "Fancy a month for drunkenness!" "Well, surely there's no need to speak in that tone about West Riding magistrates," said Supt. Aykroyd. "No doubt they must have had a reason for the sentence." A month, I believe, is the maximum punishment for persons convicted of being drunk and disorderly, and it is only imposed in cases where persons have been repeatedly convicted. The Skyrack Bench is composed, for the most part, of business and professional men, and I believe they do their work very well.

Residents of Whitkirk, who are members of Templenewsam Ratepayers' Association will have an opportunity at the meeting to-night of ventilating their opinions about the erection of a school for the children of Whitkirk and the Green Lane district of Halton. Since the question was discussed first comparatively little building has taken place, and it is probable that the conditions are not much altered, but if there is a case at all for a school the matter should be carefully considered. Colton School, which has a good number of vacant places, is in an out-of-the-way spot, but the distance walked by the children is no greater than that covered by many little ones in the district. If this is considered a hardship the County Authority might be induced, as at Scholes, to provide a conveyance to take the children to and from school.

A number of years ago a Kippax man performed a great gastronomic feat in Leeds, but I fancy, if the gentleman is still to the fore, he would find a strong competitor in a Selby workman who has just distinguished himself in the eating line. For a wager he has, at one meal, disposed of two Yorkshire puddings, a quarter of a stone of potatoes, 2lbs of vegetables, a rabbit which weighed 5lbs before it was cooked, a slice of toasted bread, with three glasses of beer and one shandy gaff. It is not recorded that he "asked for more" as the completion of his feat.

AMUSEMENTS.

LEEDS EMPIRE PALACE.

At the Empire Palace this week the chief attraction is a revue, or musical comedy, entitled "The Red Heads." The robust colour suggested in the description is vividly reflected in the general scheme. The audience is permitted to see an amazing array of dress creations, and a few songs and sprightly dances complete a mixture which is accepted with approval. The Tiptree Buckleys display great dexterity in an electrical juggling novelty; Ross and Lewis present samples of American humour very neatly; Holden's Minnikins perform their miniature, but no less hearty, tricks; and others in an acceptable bill are That Boy Pam, Musto Trio, and Frank Lynne.

A striking novelty will be introduced to the patrons of the Leeds Empire next week by Demokritos, who has invented what is termed "The Wonder Lamp." Another novel attraction will be the famous juvenile actor, Kenneth Casey, universally known as "The Vitagraph Boy." This juvenile actor has portrayed nearly every child part in the films exhibited by the Vitagraph Company in all quarters of the globe. "The Animated Toy Shop," which will be presented by Leonard Gautier, is the most novel animal act to be seen. The scene opens with an interior of a large toy emporium. In it are seen what are apparently inanimate animals—ponies, dogs, etc. True, they look rather large on their stands, and one's first thought is that they are mechanical. The ponies, for instance, nod their heads, and the dogs wag their tails and bark. This illusion is kept up until the finish. At the top of the bill will be Gerald Griffin and "Fathers" have written to the N.E.R. Co., they Edward Owings Towne, entitled "Other People's Money," while other turns include Austin Rudd, "the popular purveyor of parodies"; the Five Mongadors, the world's greatest jugglers; Signor Torti, the Italian tenor; and Maggie Benson (late of The Bensons), a charming comedienne.

LEEDS HIPPODROME.

At the Hippodrome this week the programme includes a musical comedy entitled "Simple 'Earted Bill," which is presented by Mr R. G. Hunter. The scene represents "Winkle Bay," and Mr Huntley Wright, whom Leeds audiences will remember as being one of the principal mirth provokers in "Autumn Manœuvres," is the central figure in the character of a seaside boatman. The only lady's part in the cast is admirably played by Miss Florence Wray, who possesses a delightful voice. Another pleasing turn is provided by J. W. Rickaby, who has some good songs. Little Zaza, a girl of 15, performs some clever feats of thought transmission and mind-reading, and Nervo manipulates hats and dances skilfully. Percy Hayden smartly accompanies himself at the piano, the Bouncing Dillons contribute quite a novel gymnastic act, and Vesie Crowe, a nigger comedian, also appears.

Next week at Leeds Hippodrome Fred Karno's company will appear in "The Bailiff," and Albert Hall will fill the role of "Perkins." Beth Tate will sing her popular songs, Clown Barker will give his refined comedy animal act, and Edward Marris will present the new playlet "An Emperor's Sword." Others in the bill are Aimee Roberts, the versatile dialect impressionist; Maningoes, equilibrists; Potter, the American Scot; and Karl and Eddie. Bioscope pictures will also be shown.

LEEDS QUEEN'S THEATRE.

At the Queen's Theatre this week Messrs Dottridge and Longden are presenting the pantomime "Robinson Crusoe." Fun plays a prominent part in the production, and though the whole of the comedians are good, special mention must be made of Mr Arthur White, who in the part of Robinson Crusoe's brother, Bill, is allowed ample scope to display his eccentricities. All the latest songs and choruses are rendered. Miss Lily Edwards makes a good principal boy, and with Miss Ada Hellfield, as principal girl, renders numerous songs and duets in catchy style. Mr George Hyam is ever to the fore as the Dame, and plays no small part in the success of the pantomime. There is to be a special matinee on Saturday afternoon.

At the Queen's Theatre next week Mr J. Newton Cowling's company will appear in the play "The Collier's Lass." The special cast will include Miss Lynn Darlington, Miss Edith Rutland, Mr Stanley Radcliffe, and Mr J. Newton Cowling.

THEATRE DE LUXE.

At the Theatre de Luxe capital programmes have been submitted this week, and on the first three days the chief attraction was "Satan's Castle," a coloured fairy picture. Some wonderful effects were introduced in this film, which deals with the rescue of a peasant maid from the clutches of an unscrupulous baron. The attack on the baron's stronghold was especially good. "For the Sins of Another" was an excellent drama, whilst "Blink's Vacation" was a pleasing comedy. During the latter half of the week a drama entitled "The Child Detective" is the "star" picture.

ROTHWELL EMPIRE.

Capital pictures have been shown at the Empire, Rothwell, this week, and good houses have been the rule. The features during the first half of the week were "The great bullion robbery," showing the escapade of a daring gang of robbers, and "The burning rivet," which was of intense interest. Among other pictures worth commenting upon was a coloured production illustrating a visit to the Paris Zoo. To-night (Friday) and Saturday, the chief attraction will be "The globe of death." The plot reveals how a girl's chief faith in love with a novelist, and eventually saves him from death at the hands of her own gang. Other good subjects are down on the programme. Throughout the week an enjoyable turn has been provided by John Shaw, a blind concertina soloist, who has won hearty applause. His rendering of selections from "Maritana" and "The Death of Nelson" were especially good.

Next week the programme should provoke unusual interest. For the first three days a film said to be Lubin's greatest production—"When the earth trembled," is the special attraction. The picture is a wonderful story of love and devotion, woven round the disaster which befel San Francisco some years ago. "A glorious scar" another feature, dealing with the recent war in Tripoli. On Thursday, Friday, and Saturday the principal pictures will be "The bridge of terror" and "In convict garb." There are other good subjects. Novelty will be provided by Hermyn's enchanting fountain, featuring Middle. Nina.

Sherburn Brewster Sessions

The Sherburn Brewster Sessions were held yesterday, and the magistrates present were Major Allenby (in the chair) and Mr William Croxland.

Supt. Stafford's report was as follows:—There are 38 licences for the sale of intoxicating liquor within the division, being the same number as last year. They are classified as follows, viz., 31 innkeepers, 4 beersellers, 1 shopkeeper of wines and spirits off, and 2 shopkeepers, beer off. Of this number 24 are "tied," and 14 are "free" houses. The population of the division (1911 census) is 9,062. This gives an average of one fully-licensed house or beer-house to every 259 inhabitants, or, taking all classes of licences together, 1 to every 238 inhabitants. Since last Brewster Sessions none of the licence-holders have been proceeded against, the same being the case last year.

Forty-one persons (22 residents and 19 non-residents) have been proceeded against for drunkenness, as compared with 21 last year, being an increase of 20. Of those proceeded against 40 were convicted and 1 dismissed.

One innkeeper holds a six-days' licence. Since last Brewster Sessions 3 innkeepers' and 1 beer-off licences have been transferred, as compared with 2 innkeepers' licences last year.

There is one registered club in the division, with a membership of 70, being a decrease of 1 club since last year. The Coronation Workingmen's Club, Brotherton, had been struck off the register.

Nine occasional licences to sell intoxicating liquor at shows, sports, etc., and 18 extensions of time have been granted.

The Chairman said the report was eminently satisfactory.

All licences were renewed.

LIBERAL MEETING AT HAMBLETON.

In addressing an enthusiastic Liberal meeting at Hambleton, under the presidency of Mr Martin Harvey, of Peckfield Lodge, Mr E. H. Foster, the prospective Liberal candidate, dealt with the land question.

He said the Liberal Government meant that the agricultural worker should have a reasonable wage and a reasonably decent house and those conditions which would tend to bring comfort and happiness in the bringing up of his family.

Contrasting Liberal policy with that of the Tories, Mr Foster asked if there ever was a time in the history of the country when the Tory party were so absolutely poverty-stricken, both in ideas and in men. What was their only policy? A policy which was a kind of Tariff Reform, but which was absolute death and destruction to the agricultural industry.

A vote of thanks was passed to Mr Foster, on the motion of Mr F. W. Sutcliffe, seconded by Mr Palfreman.

A transfer of the licence of the New Inn, Ryther, was granted by Selby magistrates on Monday to Robert Burn from James Pickard.

The marriage of Lord Holden of Alston and Miss Edith Judd, whose engagement was announced a short time ago, is to take place quietly at St. Andrew's Church, Wells Street, London, on February 17th.

LIBERALISM.—A Liberal meeting was held at East Keswick on Thursday night, and there was a large attendance. Mr S. Clarke presided, and he was supported by Mr Fred Ogden, M.P., Mr Martin Harvey (President of the Barkston Ash Liberal Association), Mr F. W. Sutcliffe (Chairman of the Association), Mr R. G. Macpherson (hon. sec.), Mr Westwood (Clifford), Mr Allison, etc. Mr Harvey proposed a resolution of confidence in the Government, and Mr Sutcliffe seconded. Mr Ogden, in supporting, delivered an interesting and instructive address on the land policy of the Government. The resolution was cordially passed.

ALBERT COUCH, photographed after his splendid cure by Zam-Buk.

ZAM-BUK CURES SHOCKING CASE.

LITTLE inflamed pimples came on Albert Gough's face and head. In an attempt to relieve the severe irritation he scratched his skin, which then ran running sores.

"Albert was soon an awful sight," writes Mrs. E. M. Gough from 9, Moreland Road, Forton, nr. Portsmouth. "The running sores spread all over his head, body, and limbs. All his hair came off.

Recommended for eczema, ulcerated wounds, piles, abscesses, ringworm, blood poisoning, sores, chilblains, burns, scalds, cuts, sores etc.

Sold under its several names at 1/1½ and 2/9. Of all chemists and drug stores.

"I had no rest with him day or night. I might as well have thrown away the money I spent on ointments, liniments, lotions, etc., as none of them did the least good.

"A neighbour then advised Zam-Buk. So I got a box of this balm from the chemist and was delighted with the relief it gave Albert. His burning skin was soothed by Zam-Buk.

"By dressing Albert's sores daily with Zam-Buk the inflammation died away and the mattery discharge dried up. New healthy tissue then grew. Instead of a body covered with sores there is not a mark on the boy's skin now.

"Zam-Buk also cured our baby girl's severe attack of blotches.

"My brother, too, finds Zam-Buk splendid for skin eruptions and sores."

OUR GARDENS.

Amateur Gardeners, Allotment Holders, &c.

FLOWER GARDEN.

The ordinary work of the flower garden will in most instances now be completed for this time being. Where it is intended to make alterations, such as relaying gravel walks, removing trees or shrubs, or building rustic fences, etc., the work should be pushed forward as soon as the soil is in suitable condition to work upon. A few hours' sunshine and a strong wind soon alters the condition of the heaviest soil, and the work should be proceeded with as soon as the soil can be trampled without adhering to the boots. It is a great mistake to attempt to work on soil whilst it is in a wet state. Sourness and defective aeration must inevitably follow.

VEGETABLE GARDEN.

When the ground is in suitable condition digging or trenching may be proceeded with. The value of rich, well-rotted manure is recognised by all gardeners, but it is not as well known that this same manure when applied generously year after year, will in the long run result in disaster. It is no rare thing for good garden soil to get poisoned by the continued use of fat, rich manure. Lime is a wonderful purifier of soil, and when applied to a garden that has been regularly manured for several years without change the result is often magical. Lime should be substituted for manure about every fourth year. It will purify the soil and liberate quantities of plant food stored therein which, without its use, would be unavailable to the growing crops. Plant life is made up mainly of soda, lime, potash, chlorine, silica, sulphur, iron, and phosphates of lime. Heavy soils contain potash, sulphur, and phosphates, but needs the addition of lime and soluble silica. Light sandy soils are usually rich in silica but short of alkalies and phosphates. Farmyard manure, used in reasonable quantities, is best for heavy soils such as are mainly found in our immediate district. It is rich in feeding qualities and aerates the soil.

ROTATION OF CROPS

On no account should the same kind of vegetable or crown on a piece of ground two years in succession. Different kinds of vegetables absorb different plant foods and reject others. A crop of celery may be followed by cabbage, cauliflower, etc., and so on. A piece of ground that has been occupied several years by strawberries, rasps, or any other subject of a similar nature, will usually give excellent results after being broken up, well manured, and cropped with peas, beans, or cauliflowers. Brussels sprouts should be planted on last year's celery grounds. A little forethought in these matters will be rewarded by better crops and less expense in regard to manuring.

SEED SOWING

It is a wise proceeding to make an early start with the hardier crops, such as cabbage, cauliflower, etc. It is too early to sow outdoor, but if a frost-proof frame is available the seed may be sown as shallow boxes and covered with glass and brown paper until the seedlings appear. This covering is given with the object of keeping the soil at an even temperature, and to provide shade. As soon as the seedlings appear gradually reduce the covering, and as soon as possible raise the boxes to within six inches of the glass. This will keep them dwarf and sturdy, and when they are about an inch high prick them into other boxes or a nursery bed in the same frame. Grow as coolly as possible without admitting frost, and keep it sharp look-out for slugs, which are very destructive when they reach seedling vegetables. The best time to catch them is about an hour after dusk. As a preventive soot may be scattered lightly amongst the young plants.

CELERY

Celery is one of the most profitable crops it is possible to cultivate, and will pay for good culture. The trenches should be prepared early to enable the weather to do its share towards improving the soil. The old system of growing one or two rows of plants in each trench may be improved upon by adopting the bed system. A trench 2 feet wide will accommodate 2 rows of plants, and a space of from 3 to 4 feet is required between each trench. A five feet trench will hold five rows, and the same distance between the trenches is sufficient, so that by taking up 3 feet more space, more than twice the amount of plants may be grown. Under the bed system the work may be simplified by adopting the following method: Measure and peg out the ground first, then stretch a line at each side of the proposed bed. Take out about 4 barrow loads of soil at one end and wheel it to the other. This is sufficient to make a good-sized cross trench. Place the manure, old potting soil, or any other fertiliser it is intended to use at the bottom of the cross trench, and cover this with the requisite amount of soil taken from the next cross trench. The remainder may be banked up at the sides for blanching purposes later. Continue the process to the other end, and finish off with the soil wheeled across at the commencement.

PLANTS UNDER GLASS.

GERANIUMS AS WALL PLANTS

A plant that will cover a twelve-foot high back wall of a greenhouse in two years, has brilliant scarlet trusses of bloom in profusion all the year round, and require very little attention in regard to watering or tying in, is certainly worth more than passing consideration. The popular bedding geranium, Paul Crampel, has done all this with us, and is deserving of a place wherever such a wall is available. The soil needs no special preparation, in fact, a rich soil would cause the plant to produce gross, non-flowering growth. The plants may be put in during March or April, and, of course, must be planted into the border at the base of the wall. The restricted area of a pot would prevent free growth being produced. Select strong, sturdy plants for the purpose, and give them a little extra attention now and then to encourage them to make free growth. Once they are planted out they will require little attention afterwards. They throw up strong, firm growths from the base during the first year, and a few months after being planted they commence to bloom. The conditions of a miscellaneous greenhouse suits them very well, and when established they flower continually. Frost-proof they must be carefully guarded against. The roots may be kept comparatively dry, especially during the winter months. During the summer time the plants are literally covered with bloom, and it is then quite safe to give an occasional watering with liquid manure, or a light top dressing of rich soil.

BULBS

In most gardens where bulbs are largely grown the forcing season may now be said to be in full swing. It is to be feared that the ready adaptability in circumstances so marked amongst tulips, daffodils, etc., makes them the victims of rather careless treatment. They are either left too long in the plunging material, or subjected to such rough treatment as robs the object of forcing them to bloom early that much of the vitality of the bulbs is wasted. A regular supply of bloom may be kept up by placing a fresh batch in bed every week. From 55 deg. to 60 deg. is a suitable temperature for the first week. After that they may be given a warmer position, until the flowers commence to open, when they should be removed to a cooler house to harden off. In addition to the bulbs there are many other flowering subjects, suitable for forcing. Lilacs, azalea mollis, deutzias, and viburnums may now be forced under very similar conditions to those recommended for bulbs. A daily syringing with tepid water will help them to break freely into growth, and see no account must they be allowed to get dry at the roots. Roses in pots may be taken from the cold frames and placed in a cool, light position in the greenhouse. No attempt at forcing should be made, and a sharp look-out must be kept for green-fly. The safest course to pursue is to syringe the plants once a week with insecticide.

CALCEOLARIA CLIBRANI

The extreme gracefulness of this comparatively new plant is not realised until a few two-year-old plants have been grown and flowered. Under greenhouse treatment it usually blooms in April, May, and June. Young plants after flowering should have the flower stems removed, also straggling growths. The bulbs of soil should be sufficiently reduced to allow them to be repotted into 5½ inch pots. The cold frame will accommodate them for a few weeks and they should be kept fairly close until they break into new growth. During the summer months a semi-shaded position outdoors should be found for them, and on the approach of autumn they may be returned to the cold frame. About the end of November they should be transferred to the greenhouse and stood in a light position. As soon as free growth commences they should be given every encouragement. A moist atmosphere, plenty of light, and repotting when necessary will do much towards building up a large, healthy plant. The compost for the final potting should consist of three parts turf loam, one part leaf mould, half-part rotten manure, and a free admixture of silver sand and dust charcoal. Well-grown plants will require a nine-inch pot. To keep up a healthy stock cuttings should be struck either in the autumn or early spring. These, of course, will bloom the first year, but will not attain the size of the two-year-old plants. The flower spikes are long and graceful, and when freely mixed with the herbaceous variety do much to enhance the beauty, and remove any suspicion of stiffness. As an outdoor bedding plant C. Clibrani is superb, but must only be used in sheltered positions. It is too frail to withstand the ravages of high winds. For this purpose autumn-rooted cuttings should be used. They may have the same treatment as the ordinary bedding varieties. A bed carpeted with white lobelia, or Alyssuni minimum, with the Calceolarias dotted in about two feet apart, gives a delicate but charming effect. A more striking effect is obtained by substituting blue lobelia for the white groundwork.

CALCEOLARIAS

Herbaceous Calceolarias are perhaps the most decorative spring-flowering plants grown. The time for transferring the plants to flowering pots has now arrived and this task is one of the most important points in their cultivation. Their roots are very delicately constructed, and are quite incapable of penetrating a solid mass of soil. Not only must the compost used be of a light, fibrous nature, but it should not be pressed firmly into the pot. It is obvious that soil which is thus lightly placed in the pot will dry up quicker than it would be if made firm. This means that regular attention must be paid to the task of watering. Dryness at the roots is fatal to success when once the plants have started to grow freely. The necessity of frequent waterings which thus arises, makes it essential that ample drainage be provided.

CINERARIAS

Cinerarias are developing flower-stems, and must be encouraged to grow strongly. They like a cool, moist, airy position, and the nearer they are to the light, the sturdier they will become. A top-dressing of some approved chemical manures, given according to the makers' directions, usually helps them considerably if applied when the flower stem commences to run. Soot water and farmyard liquid manure are also very good. Syringing may be practised every morning until the flowers commence to open when it must be discontinued or the petals will get discoloured. Greenfly invariably attacks the plants just prior to them commencing to bloom. A moist atmosphere is the best preventative of attack, despite periodical fumigation. "Auto-shreds" are cheap, effectual and easy to manipulate. As a fumigant we have found nothing to equal them.

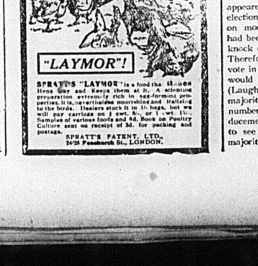
WHAT KIND OF HOUSE SHALL I USE?



Taste and pocket will determine the exact appearance of the house, but adequate ventilation is the real essential, whilst the house must also be such that I have to do is to send each of them a post card, mentioning this paper, and the books will be sent you gratuitously. Their names are:—W. Tamlin, 41, St. Margaret's, Whitstable; Rumsey Hatch Meeds, Poole, Dorset; and the Morland Appliance Co., Crawley, Sussex. A perusal of these works is really most instructive.

Ten cubic feet air space per bird has been quoted as a minimum house accommodation. This entirely depends upon the ventilation. I have known badly-built houses where even this allowance would have been inadequate, and well-constructed houses where half the amount would have sufficed. I always prefer houses without floors, because they change their air so much quicker than those with floors. Experiments conducted at the Agricultural College, Wye, last year fully demonstrated this fact.

OTHER APPLIANCES NECESSARY

To complete the equipment for a pen of birds a drinking fountain to hold at least a gallon of water, a feed-trough for the soft food, and a grit-box are required.

The two former must be looked upon as absolutely necessary; the last item by some will be termed superfluous and unnecessary, but inasmuch as it is a self-supplying hopper it only requires to be filled with grit and shell, say once a month, it prevents much waste of material, and certainly adds to the tidiness of the pen, and these economies, both in labour and goods, suggest to my mind that the luxury becomes a virtual necessity.

SPRATT'S "LAYMOR" is a food that Makes Hens Lay and Keeps them at it. A scientific preparation of grain-foods and meat-fibrine-producing meals, it is nevertheless nourishing and fattening to the birds. Hundreds of eggs per week have been got during the cold months of winter by users of "Laymor" Corn Meal. Send on Poultry Culture sent on receipt of 3d. for packing and postage.

SPRATT'S PATENT, LTD.
24-33 Fenchurch St., LONDON.

Undoubtedly the old-fashioned method of placing a china or dummy egg in each nest in order to encourage the hens to lay there was a good one. Modern research, however, has produced an insecticide nest egg which, while serving this useful purpose, also effectively rids the layings-box and nest-box of all vermin. They are too powerful to place under a sitting-hen, but I strongly recommend the use of one in every nest-box.

However, in this department much latitude can be observed, providing essentials are catered for. Consequently these columns are not suitable for laying down inflexible rules where a difference of opinion can legitimately exist; but should doubt exist in the mind of any readers, I shall be pleased for them to write me personally, when any information I can give is theirs to command.

BARKSTON ASH CONSERVATIVE ASSOCIATION.

ANNUAL MEETING.

MR LANE FOX, M.P., AND THE PLURAL VOTE

The annual meeting of the Barkston Ash Conservative and Unionist Association was held on Tuesday at the Leeds and County Conservative Club—Ald. E C Brooksbank, J.P. (Chairman) presiding, in the unavoidable absence of the Earl of Harewood (President of the Association). Those supporting the chairman were Mr G. R. Lane Fox, M.P., Mr D. B. Wilson, J.P., Scarcroft), Mr L. C. Paget (hon. treasurer), and Mr R. Lodge (Conservative agent). Others present included Messrs J. Ladley (Kirkby Wharfe), T. H. Prater (Aberford), H. S. Spark (Church Fenton), E. Hawkesworth (Crowgates), C. Sherston (Harewood), J. H. Tomlinson (Colton), J. C. Cornock (Collingham), J. W. Holdridge (Monk Fryston), W. T. Lipscombe (Bramham), J. G. Long (Spofforth), Hy. Crossley (Wetherby), J. T. Allan (Wetherby), Dr G. D. Todd, jas. Blacker, Ambrose Chambers, A. R. Swift, and J. Lobley (Selby), F. W. Lawson (Aldell), T. W. Noble (Swillington), A. W. Belby (Bramham), H. Welburn (South Milford), A. Johnson (South Milford), A. Burbert (East Keswick), W. H. Nicholson (Sturford), Grainger, G. Tucker (Boston Spa), Wm. Simpson (Aberford), R. Routledge (Garforth), W. H. Thackeray (Bramham), Tom Hey (Sherburn), Arthur Kendall (Kirkby Wharfe), F. M. Box (secretary to the Yorkshire Division of N.U.C.A.), and others.

Letters of apology for unavoidable absence were received from the Earl of Harewood, Lord Londesborough, the Hon. E. Wood, M.P., Mr Wm. Sykes, Dr. H. G. Beigham, and Mr Geo. Bromet (hon. secretary).

SUCCESS IN REVISION COURTS

The Executive Committee stated in their report they had to testify to the prosperity of the Unionist cause in the division, and to the zeal and activity of their member, Mr Lane Fox, who was indefatigable in the interests of the party and local requirements of the division. The accounts that would be presented showed an adverse balance of £212 1s. 8d., as against an adverse balance last year of £157 2s. 7d. The total expenditure amounted to £403 5s. 11d., as against £409 12s. 6d. recorded in 1912. During the past year meetings had been held in nearly every polling district in the division, at which Mr Lane Fox had been present, and addressed enthusiastic audiences. The Conservative contests in the courts of the Revision Courts were highly satisfactory. The details were given as follows:—Conservative claims sustained, 101; objections to Liberal claims sustained, 22; Conservative objections sustained, 221; overseers' objections to Liberal owners, 13; Conservative objections to Liberal occupiers, 31; Conservative new lodger claims sustained, 66; Conservative new lodger claimed himself, 1; total 201. Liberal claims and objections sustained, 72; showing a Conservative gain of 130. These figures only applied to claims and objections in respect of persons whose names were not on any other list, and did not include claims where other lists were already registered, or objections where the names remained on the list in respect of other qualifications. Under the allowing the provisions of the Act, a new Conservative polling district, there was a net Conservative gain of 127, and in addition there was a gain of 156 on reclaims.

The Chairman moved the adoption of the report, which was seconded by Mr E. Hawkesworth, and carried unanimously.

TREASURER'S STATEMENT

Mr L. C. Paget presented the treasurer's statement, which gave the figures mentioned above, and added that there was a reduction on expenses of £13 15s. They had been able to reduce the adverse balance by £35. The contributions of local associations showed a slight falling off, these amounting to £39 1s., as compared with £40 4s. the previous year. That was a serious matter and called for the consideration of the committee.

The report was adopted.

ELECTION OF OFFICERS

The election of officers was next proceeded with, and resulted as follows:—President, the Right Hon. the Earl of Harewood; chairman, Ald. E. C. Brooksbank; vice-presidents, Lord Londesborough and Mr D. B. Wilson; hon. treasurer, Mr L. C. Paget; representatives to the National Union, Mr H. G. Reigham and Mr Alfred Hobson; and Mr Joseph Pemberton.

The Hon. E. Wood, M.P., Mr W. Penrose-Green, and Mr L. C. Paget were co-opted members of the executive committee, which was also elected.

MR LANE FOX AND PLURAL VOTES.

Mr Lane Fox, M.P., at the close of the business portion of the meeting, spoke to the members, and thanked them for their attention to the cause of organisation. Many people made various predictions as to the date of the general election, he added, it was obvious that the Government were driving on to some shoals or rocks, upon which they must inevitably to be wrecked. A general election would follow, and the Unionist party, he believed, would return to office. (Hear, hear). One thing was perfectly certain, and that was George's protestations that he would be better off in private life, and that was that the Government was not likely to precipitate a general election sooner than necessary. During the Radical party really cared about was the Plural Voting Bill, and they appeared to be determined not to have a general election before they could face the country on one more disreputable cause than at present. It had been said that the Plural Voting Bill would knock off 350 from his existing majority of 700. Therefore they would be able to say that every vote in his majority over 350 at the next election would mean an increase in the Unionist vote. (Laughter). Of course, he did not think that his majority would be reduced by anything like that number. On the contrary, it would be an inducement to them to work all the harder, and to see if they could not increase the present majority. (Applause).

A FATALITY AT TADCASTER.

FUNERAL INSTEAD OF WEDDING.

A SAD AFFAIR.

At the Tadcaster Railway Station on Monday afternoon Mr J. H. Wood, coroner for the York district, conducted an inquiry relative to the death of Harold Ethelbert White (30), a native of Wakefield, who resided with Mr R. Dickerson, of Fairfield, Tadcaster, who was thrown from a horse on January 26th, through the animal shying at a grip, and receiving such injuries to his head as resulted in his death on Saturday morning. Mr J. J. Shilleto was the foreman of the jury.

Evidence was given by Mrs Mary Jane Hanby, who said that deceased, who was not a relative, had stayed at Fairfield, Tadcaster, during the last few weeks. He had taken a farm at Colton, and was to have been married on Wednesday, and intended residing there. On Monday, January 26th, he went out for a ride on a horse of his own. The animal was a hackney, aged 6 years. He left Fairfield shortly before 10 o'clock, and was brought back after the accident between 11 and 12

Thomas Harrison, farm labourer, High Moor, Tadcaster, said that on the 26th January, about 20 minutes past 10 o'clock, he was going up the road past High Moor when he saw a man on a horse; he was about 50 yards ahead of witness, and was going in the direction of Leeds. The animal was walking and did not appear restive until it came to a dry grip at the left-hand side of the road.

Deceased was riding on the grass, which is about 12ft wide. The horse shied at the grip and commenced buck-jumping, going to the other side of the road. Then the animal broke into a gallop, and appeared to be going straight towards a telegraph pole. When the horse had got nearly to it it swerved sideways, and Mr White seemed to lose his balance and to fall sideways halfway off the horse. He went in this position for a distance of about 12 yards, and then fell on his head on the high road. He fell clear of the horse, which galloped away. There was nothing to frighten the animal. He was not riding with spurs.

Witness went to the man and found him unconscious. He noticed a lump at the top of his head, but it was not bleeding. Mr White was placed in a spring float and taken to the doctor's.

John Gray, Tadcaster, said that on the day in question he was proceeding on the Leeds road with a spring float, when his attention was drawn by the last witness to the deceased, who was lying in the road. He was unconscious. Witness got him into the float and took him to Fairfield," and so on "free." On the basis of the last census population, 10,387, there is an average of one fully-licensed house or beer-house to every 237 inhabitants.

Since the last Brewster Sessions none of the licensed holders had been proceeded against and there was only one case the previous year. The persons proceeded against for drunkenness numbered 160 (78 residents and 82 non-residents), compared with 194 last year, being a decrease of 34. There were 155 convictions for drunkenness, the remaining five cases being dismissed. Seven innkeepers hold a six days' licence, and six are licensed for music and singing. The four registered clubs in the Division have a total membership of 1,250.

There were no applications for new licences.

Dr Todd said the Bench considered the report as very satisfactory. He edited that a number had been received from the Home Office, pointing out that it was particularly desirable that licensed victuallers should keep proper books of accounts, showing takings and out-goings.

All the licences were renewed.

Mr A. Gaunt, from the N.E.R. solicitors' office, applied that the amount payable to the Compensation Fund in respect of the Selby Buffalo refreshment rooms should be reduced to one-half, a similar reduction having been allowed last year.

Dr Todd asked if the police were allowed free access to the station without having to take a penny platform ticket.

Supt. Stafford replied that the police had free admission to the station.

Mr C. H. Murch, solicitor, Selby, applied on behalf of the Official Receiver, York, for protection order for Mr D. McCosic in respect to the licence of the Plough Inn, Selby, the holder of which, Jonathan A. Drury, having on his own petition been adjudicated a bankrupt.

The application was granted.

PROGRESS IN POULTRY JOURNALISM.

That competition is the life of trade none will gainsay; probably it is to this reason that the poultry fraternity are indebted for the recent developments in poultry journalism.

Analysising this progress, an outstanding feature is the wonderful stride made by our esteemed contemporary—"Poultry." The introduction of scientific articles in plain phraseology; practical dissertations on poultry culture and abundance on popular subjects pertaining to our industry, were marked features at the comparative recent change of proprietorship.

Their maintenance and improvement together with a corresponding increase of advertisement, jointly necessitated an enlargement of its pages, and with characteristic enterprise this was undertaken, and the issue of January revealed our old friend in its new, enlarged and improved form.

The old accusation that show reports and prize-lists of poultry-keepers' associations are only weekly can no longer be levelled at "Poultry." Whilst these important features are not in any way neglected, some sixteen pages out of its forty large ones are devoted to articles suitable to all conditions of poultry-keepers, the tout ensemble making a live magazine which must appeal to all interested in feathered life.

Many may not have seen "Poultry" in its new form; they are invited to make application for a gratuitous copy to the Manager, "Poultry," 10, Essex Street, Strand, London, W.C. It would be contrivance, also, to mention in connection therewith, when writing, for them to mention this paper.

A VALUABLE ROBIN HOOD QUARRY.

UTILIZING NATURAL GAS.

In regard to the utilization of an escape of natural gas at Robin Hood Quarry, recently referred to in our columns, Mr Abraham Armitage writes:

"About ten years ago it was discovered that, in a field adjacent to our brickworks, gas was escaping from a bore-hole that had been drilled either for the purpose of finding stone or discovering coal. I tested the gas with a light, and flames shot up to a great height. We sank a pipe some 13 feet down the bore-hole, and proceeded to utilize the gas. Since then, in the absence of any climatic conditions, we have used the gas to illuminate our works. During the day time we have about a score of jets burning, and at night-time about 50. Of course, we are troubled without ten jets supply light from the bore-hole. I am perfectly satisfied as to the origin of this gas. It is an emanation from old colliery workings, and can be described as marsh gas, fire-damp, carburetted hydrogen, or what ever scientists prefer to name it. We are here just on the edge of a big fault in the Haigh Moor coal seam. Coal has been worked in the district for a hundred years, and in the old days it was the practice to leave pillars of coal in the workings. This was due to the tendency of the earth above to fall in. We are here about 60 or 70 yards above Carlton Beck, under which coal is close to the surface, and I believe that we benefit from the gas that rises along the seam. But it is a peculiar fact that in the quarries adjacent to the brickworks there is no escape of gas."

Discussing the value of the gas, Mr Armitage said that it had been found impossible to use it for gas-engine burners. Ordinary flare jets had proved to be the most serviceable. The calorific value had been tested in the boiler-house, and was discovered to be particularly satisfactory. "At the present time," he added, "our workpeople prefer the natural gas illumination to the ordinary service. It is, however, necessary that we should have the ordinary gas service, for the reason that the supply has failed us many times. During last summer, when dry weather prevailed, we were without natural gas for three or four months. The quantity of gas that rises is controlled by water pressure or not we cannot decide. But one thing is clear, and that is that the same atmospheric influences that apply to mines apply also to our gas supply. As soon as the barometer falls there is a greater pressure of gas, and as the barometer rises it tends to shut off our supply. Sometimes half-an-hour will serve either to stop our supply or else increase it many times."

LOWER BARKSTON ASH QUARTER SESSIONS.

A SATISFACTORY REPORT

Before Dr G. D. Todd (in the chair), Mr W. N. Cheesman, Mr H. Pulleine, Dr. A. J. Somers, Mr T. S. Ullathorne, and Mr H. Acton, at the Selby Brewster Sessions (Lower Barkston Ash), held on Monday, Supt. T. Stafford reported that the number of licences was the same as in the previous year, namely 74. This total is made up of 64 innkeepers' licences, 5 beersellers' licences, 4 wine and spirit off-licences, and one beer off-licence. Fifty-four houses are "tied," and 20 "free." On the basis of the last census population, 10,387, there is an average of one fully-licensed house or beer-house to every 237 inhabitants.

Since the last Brewster Sessions none of the licensed holders had been proceeded against and there was only one case the previous year. ROTHWELL URBAN COUNCIL.

The monthly meeting of the Rothwell Urban District Council was held at the Council Offices on Monday night. Mr J. Hirst (Chairman) presided, the members present were Messrs. S. R. Chadwick, G. W. Bilkley, J. Armitage, T. Kirkby, R. McCullough, W. Lunn, T. P. Wade, T. Ellis, J. Cordeni, J. H. Hindle, S. Dobson, with the Clerk (Mr W. Dodgson), the medical officer of health (Dr H. Stevenson), the sanitary inspector (Mr E. F. Mawhouse), and the surveyor (Mr J. Scaibuarn).

HIGHWAYS COMMITTEE.

The minutes of the Highways Committee showed that particulars are to be got out for next meeting showing who has repaired Abraham Hill; that a resolution for making up Windmill Lane be submitted at the next Council meeting; that the Sanitary Committee be asked to inspect the yards in the district and submit a list of the most urgent ones for paving; that the surveyor estimate for tar macadam on the roads in the proposed Private Street Works off Carlton Lane, and that Mr Farrer's offer for a strip of land in Town Street, Carlton, be accepted.

The surveyor reported that he was getting some plates where necessary. It was resolved, that the Board of Trade's letter calling a conference in London as to the tramway abandonment be referred to the Council. The surveyor was instructed to get out estimates for tar spraying for the next committee meeting. A letter of the 8th January from the Local Government Board as to by-laws in regard to old lanes was read. The Clerk reported that he had forwarded to the County Council alternative estimates for the paving of Pontefract Road.

The minutes were passed.

The Chairman referred to the conference of the Board of Trade as to the tramway abandonment which is to take place in London on Wednesday next. The Tramway Company, he said, had obtained certain powers to extend the tramway, but these had so far not been carried out. They now sought to abandon the powers. He wanted to know whether it was the desire of the Council to be represented at that conference.

Mr Lunn (Chairman of the Highways Committee) and the Clerk were elected to attend as representatives.

Mr Hirst said that while Mr Lunn and the Clerk were down in London they ought to see some of the officials as to the reduction of tram fares, as it would be a favourable opportunity.

SANITARY COMMITTEE

The Sanitary Committee minutes set forth that the report of the public health visitor and housing inspector were read. The following licenses were granted for storing petroleum—Oleine Ltd. 600 gallons at the Works; John Elstob, 60 gallons at the shop in Commercial Street; C. Ward and Sons, 40 gallons, Commercial Street; H. Lunn, 30 gallons, Marsh Street; H. Lunn, 30 gallons, calcium carbide, Mr Lockwood attended the meeting in regard to a notice served on him to convert 8 privies in Park Street. A letter was read from Mr Lees, of Halifax, in regard to a notice for additional closet accommodation. The inspector was instructed to reply that the Council were prepared to pay part of the cost. Letters were read from the Yorkshire Copper Works asking the Council to pay an acknowledgment in respect of the window on the west side of the engine house at Snowden.

A letter was read from the Local Government Board asking the Council to obtain a report from the medical officer of health as to the district which should be made subject to bye-laws with regard to offensive trades. The medical officer was asked to consider whether the Oleine Works should be considered an offensive trade. The draft agreement for the purchase of Lemonroyd Sewage Works was returned by the vendor's solicitors with alterations, and it was decided to consider these on Monday, February 9th.

Mr Lunn asked how the members who were not on the Sanitary Committee were to see the report of the health visitor.

Mr Chadwick said in future the minutes of the committee showing the report would be placed on the table.

The Chairman remarked that Miss Storey had so far visited 96 babies.

The minutes were passed.

HEALTH OF THE DISTRICT

Dr Stevenson presented his report for the past four weeks, showing that twenty-one cases of infectious diseases had been notified. Of these thirteen related to scarlet fever, seven to diphtheria, and there was one of erysipelas. Six-teen deaths had taken place, including three in the Workhouse. During the same period there had been thirty births—thirteen males and seventeen females.

WATER COMMITTEE

The minutes of the Water Committee showed that for the month ending January 8th the average daily consumption of water in Rothwell was 69,000 gallons, as compared with 175,000 gallons last year. Thorpe showed an increase on last year's consumption of 10,000 gallons, being 89,000; Stourton consumed 50,000 gallons last year. The Midland Railway Co. used 92,000 gallons, which, together with selling meters and domestic uses and leakages, brought up a total of 8,527,000 gallons.

The minutes also showed that a resolution was passed calling upon the surveyor to select half-a-dozen men qualified to act in cases of fire and report to the next meeting. The Clerk was instructed to ascertain from the Stanley Urban District Council the fee charged for fires outside their district and whether any modification in their charges would be made if an outside Council permanently retained them.

The Clerk was instructed to attend the funeral from Leeds City Council to attend fires outside the district, and also to report on telephone arrangements.

A letter was read from Messrs Harold Arnold and Son stating that they were enquiring into the proposed three-inch water main across their land at John O'Gaunt's.

The surveyor was instructed to take a test of the water pressure at Spilsby Lane corner and near Podfoot Steps.

CHILDREN'S HOMES WATER SUPPLY

Mr Lunn referred to the question of the supply of water to the Children's Homes, and said he had, on seeing certain correspondence in the minutes of the Hunslet Guardians, raised the question and tried, if at all possible, to avoid any litigation between the two bodies. He understood that two or three of the Guardians along with the Clerk were to meet a similar number from the Council. He asked if they had met.

Mr James Armitage said so far they had not met, but they were prepared to meet the Guardians at any time.

Mr Hirst asked if they had obtained any men as volunteers in case of an outbreak of fire.

Mr J. Armitage said Mr Southwart was going to get the men by the next meeting of the committee.

The minutes were passed.

LIGHTING

The minutes of the Lamps and Gas Committee showed that for the month the consumption of gas was as follows:—Rothwell gas 293,700 cubic feet; Leeds gas 29,500 cubic feet.

It was resolved that the lamps be lit every night during the Lighting season and turned out on moonlight nights if it became clear. An application from the Stourton Ratepayers' Association for a lamp in Ledgy View, and for light on the North side of the Pontefract Road was left over until the committee visit the places.

Mr Hirst asked if the committee had fallen out with the moon. (Laughter).

Mr Ellis (Chairman of the Committee) said they had lost faith in it.

Mr J. Armitage said that of late the lamplighters had not carried out the instructions of the surveyor and on dark nights the lamps had remained unlighted.

The minutes were passed.

A CARLTON QUESTION

The correspondence included a letter from the post master at Wakefield in reply to a second petition of the Council for the post office at Carlton to be used as a money order office. The reply stated that according to the returns of the post office, it was not thought that a money order office was wanted. The postmaster, however, promised to reconsider the matter a year hence.

Mr Chadwick said he could not understand how the postmaster knew whether a money order office was wanted or not if it had not been tried.

Mr Kirkby said he would like to press it further, but on the motion of Mr Lunn, it was decided to let the matter stand over for a month, and in the meantime the Carlton representatives are to inquire into the matter.

SUNDAY DELIVERY OF LETTERS

With regard to the resolution passed at the last meeting of the Council asking that a Sunday delivery of letters be granted at Rothwell, the postmaster of Leeds (Mr A. Dowding) replied that the resolution did not comply with the requests as set out in the post office guide. A Sunday delivery could only be granted on condition that the local authority applying for such a consideration could show that it was the substantial desire of the inhabitants of the rural district or town making the application. The Clerk said he wanted a resolution that it was the substantial desire of the inhabitants.

The Chairman: Why not make it an election cry? (Laughter).

Mr Armitage asked if it was the substantial desire all over the Rothwell people.

Mr Chadwick said he believed it was.

Mr Armitage contended that steps should be taken to ascertain whether there was a desire for Sunday delivery.

On the motion of Mr Chadwick, seconded by Mr Blakey, it was resolved to again apply to the postmaster of Leeds.

A letter was read from the County Council stating that Saturday, April 4th, had been fixed for the election of Urban District Councillors.

A resolution to adopt the Notification of Births Act was passed.

CONSERVATISM AT BOSTON SPA.

ADDRESSES BY EARL PERCY AND MR G. LANE FOX, M.P.

On Friday night a meeting, promoted by the Clifford and Boston Spa Conservative Association, was held in the Town Hall, Boston Spa, and it was well attended. Dr. H. G. Brigham presided, and others present included Colonel Nickalls, Dr Oulton, Dr John Selkirk, Messrs George Bromet, E. G. Simpson, R. Kilby, John Thompson, F. Botterill, George Foster, George Thurlwell, and J. Whitaker (secretary of the Association).

Earl Percy said it was now rather more than seven years since the present Government came into power. Their supporters told them unctuously that those years had been seven years of peace, plenty, and prosperity such as the country had never known before, and they spoke of the rare and refreshing fruits prodigally crammed down the throats of the people, and in fact, med down the throats of the people, and in fact, if they were to be believed, a new heaven and a new earth had come into being. (Laughter). There was, however, another side to the picture, it told of seven years of labour unrest and strikes of unprecedented magnitude; seven years of enmity and hatred sown between various classes of the community; seven years in which the smouldering fires of religious bitterness and hostility had been assiduously fanned into flame; seven years in which our expenditure had gone up by leaps and bounds, until now on the threatened eve of a £200,000,000 Budget, with the Army reduced to 40,000 men, while foreign armies were increasing by hundreds of thousands, seven years during which our flag had disappeared from all the most remote seas and our maritime supremacy been transformed from a supremacy in every sea to a bare margin of superiority over one Power alone—Germany—in the North Sea. Finally, as a glorious consummation, we were threatened in a few months' time with civil war in Ireland. That was the situation out of which Liberalism so professed to look for its derive comfort, but as a matter of fact it was very patent that the Government vessel was heading straight for the rocks, and her crew were correctly reassured by the sophistry of mingled-eating pheasants or newly-shorn lambs. (Laughter and applause). Two captains were on the bridge, one shouting "Full steam ahead" and the other murmuring "Wait and see." (Laughter). Possibly there might be more method in the Premier's madness than was apparent. He recognised that he was going to be faced with the armed resistance of 70,000 men in Ulster, and he didn't know quite how to negotiate the difficulty. Apparently he hoped, if he kept drifting on, that these loyalists of Ireland would ultimately be guilty of some outbreak of violence which would alienate from them a large measure of public support in this country and so enable the Government to deal effectively with them. If so, then the Premier was "waiting and seeing" to no purpose. (Hear, hear). We had learned three great principles of democratic government from Mr Asquith and his followers. They were (1) never let the people know the intentions of the Government and prevent them finding out by deceiving them at election-times, (2) in no circumstances to submit any issue to the electors for decision, and (3) to destroy altogether the independence of the House of Commons, wrongly called the People's Chamber. That was what, nowadays, was known as government of the people for the people and by the people. (Laughter and applause).

Mr George Lane Fox, who spoke very briefly, remarked that it was unfortunate that many Radicals seemed to have been captured by the suggestion that the Government should meet their liabilities and cut their losses by whittling down the Navy Estimates. It was a policy both dangerous and insane, for the Navy represented the one form of national insurance which was absolutely vital and necessary in order to protect our commerce and hold our own with other Powers. (Applause). Alluding to the land campaign and the much-talked-of shortage of land, he said he had himself told Mr Runciman that if he had any difficulty in obtaining land he would sell him some. (Hear, hear). He had been told that he stood to gain by Mr Lloyd George's land proposals, as he would be able to obtain about 30 per cent. more money in rents. Personally he would rather remain in his present state as a landlord for ever than gain his rents with the assistance of the Radical Government. (Applause). No one knew precisely what the land proposals were; it was his opinion that they were being deliberately kept back in order to act as a bait for the unwary back in order to act as a bait for the unwary at the next election, which the present state of events might precipitate at any moment. (Applause).

The speakers were heartily thanked on the proposition of Colonel Nickalls seconded by Mr. G. Thurlwell.

To the Editor.

Sir,—When one of the controversialists in a political argument writes a letter composed mainly of personalities, it is a sure sign that the discussion is degenerating and that it would be best concluded. As far as I am concerned I am neither intimidated by haughty language nor impressed by blaster. I have established the fact that Mr Martin Harvey, while protesting that I ought to give proof of every statement I make, is evidently determined to give no evidence whatever of the correctness of the counter-statements he makes. He affects to loose for that I have "found salvation" because I admitted that when Protestants were excluded from all share in county government or offices, they were not told that their Protestantism was the reason of their exclusion. But seriously can anyone (except Mr Martin Harvey) expect that they would be? To leave personalities and come back to matters of fact, I asserted in round terms that the majority in Ireland did not give fair play to the minority to-day—hence the apprehensions as to what would follow Home Rule. Not to satisfy Mr Martin Harvey (I the substantial desire of the inhabitants of the rural district or town making the application. The Clerk said he wanted a resolution that it was the substantial desire of the inhabitants.

The Chairman: Why not make it an election cry? (Laughter).

Mr Armitage asked if it was the substantial desire all over the Rothwell people.

Mr Chadwick said he believed it was.

Mr Armitage contended that steps should be taken to ascertain whether there was a desire for Sunday delivery.

On the motion of Mr Chadwick, seconded by Mr Blakey, it was resolved to again apply to the postmaster of Leeds.

A letter was read from the County Council stating that Saturday, April 4th, had been fixed for the election of Urban District Councillors.

A resolution to adopt the Notification of Births Act was passed.

CONSERVATISM AT BOSTON SPA.

ADDRESSES BY EARL PERCY AND MR G. LANE FOX, M.P.

On Friday night a meeting, promoted by the Clifford and Boston Spa Conservative Association, was held in the Town Hall, Boston Spa, and it was well attended. Dr. H. G. Brigham presided, and others present included Colonel Nickalls, Dr Oulton, Dr John Selkirk, Messrs George Bromet, E. G. Simpson, R. Kilby, John Thompson, F. Botterill, George Foster, George Thurlwell, and J. Whitaker (secretary of the Association).

Earl Percy said it was now rather more than seven years since the present Government came into power. Their supporters told them unctuously that those years had been seven years of peace, plenty, and prosperity such as the country had never known before, and they spoke of the rare and refreshing fruits prodigally crammed down the throats of the people, and in fact, if they were to be believed, a new heaven and a new earth had come into being. (Laughter). There was, however, another side to the picture, it told of seven years of labour unrest and strikes of unprecedented magnitude; seven years of enmity and hatred sown between various classes of the community; seven years in which the smouldering fires of religious bitterness and hostility had been assiduously fanned into flame; seven years in which our expenditure had gone up by leaps and bounds, until now on the threatened eve of a £200,000,000 Budget, with the Army reduced to 40,000 men, while foreign armies were increasing by hundreds of thousands, seven years during which our flag had disappeared from all the most remote seas and our maritime supremacy been transformed from a supremacy in every sea to a bare margin of superiority over one Power alone—Germany—in the North Sea. Finally, as a glorious consummation, we were threatened in a few months' time with civil war in Ireland. That was the situation out of which Liberalism so professed to look for its derive comfort, but as a matter of fact it was very patent that the Government vessel was heading straight for the rocks, and her crew were correctly reassured by the sophistry of mingled-eating pheasants or newly-shorn lambs. (Laughter and applause). Two captains were on the bridge, one shouting "Full steam ahead" and the other murmuring "Wait and see." (Laughter). Possibly there might be more method in the Premier's madness than was apparent. He recognised that he was going to be faced with the armed resistance of 70,000 men in Ulster, and he didn't know quite how to negotiate the difficulty. Apparently he hoped, if he kept drifting on, that these loyalists of Ireland would ultimately be guilty of some outbreak of violence which would alienate from them a large measure of public support in this country and so enable the Government to deal effectively with them. If so, then the Premier was "waiting and seeing" to no purpose. (Hear, hear). We had learned three great principles of democratic government from Mr Asquith and his followers. They were (1) never let the people know the intentions of the Government and prevent them finding out by deceiving them at election-times, (2) in no circumstances to submit any issue to the electors for decision, and (3) to destroy altogether the independence of the House of Commons, wrongly called the People's Chamber. That was what, nowadays, was known as government of the people for the people and by the people. (Laughter and applause).

Mr George Lane Fox, who spoke very briefly, remarked that it was unfortunate that many Radicals seemed to have been captured by the suggestion that the Government should meet their liabilities and cut their losses by whittling down the Navy Estimates. It was a policy both dangerous and insane, for the Navy represented the one form of national insurance which was absolutely vital and necessary in order to protect our commerce and hold our own with other Powers. (Applause). Alluding to the land campaign and the much-talked-of shortage of land, he said he had himself told Mr Runciman that if he had any difficulty in obtaining land he would sell him some. (Hear, hear). He had been told that he stood to gain by Mr Lloyd George's land proposals, as he would be able to obtain about 30 per cent. more money in rents. Personally he would rather remain in his present state as a landlord for ever than gain his rents with the assistance of the Radical Government. (Applause). No one knew precisely what the land proposals were; it was his opinion that they were being deliberately kept back in order to act as a bait for the unwary back in order to act as a bait for the unwary at the next election, which the present state of events might precipitate at any moment. (Applause).

The speakers were heartily thanked on the proposition of Colonel Nickalls seconded by Mr. G. Thurlwell.

CORRESPONDENCE.

LIEUT. E. H. BOUGHEY, R.N., AND MR E. H. FOSTER, J.P.

To the Editor.

Sir,—When one of the controversialists in a political argument writes a letter composed mainly of personalities, it is a sure sign that the discussion is degenerating and that it would be best concluded. As far as I am concerned I am neither intimidated by haughty language nor impressed by blaster. I have established the fact that Mr Martin Harvey, while protesting that I ought to give proof of every statement I make, is evidently determined to give no evidence whatever of the correctness of the counter-statements he makes. He affects to loose for that I have "found salvation" because I admitted that when Protestants were excluded from all share in county government or offices, they were not told that their Protestantism was the reason of their exclusion. But seriously can anyone (except Mr Martin Harvey) expect that they would be? To leave personalities and come back to matters of fact, I asserted in round terms that the majority in Ireland did not give fair play to the minority to-day—hence the apprehensions as to what would follow Home Rule. Not to satisfy Mr Martin Harvey (I fear no evidence would do that) but for the information of your readers who have followed this correspondence, I give a small part of the evidence on which I rely.

Let it be believed, I make no attack on Roman Catholicism as such. It is when united with Nationalism in Ireland that it becomes an instrument of oppression.

The following resolution speaks for itself:—

"Resolved: That we, the members of the A.O.H., Sligo Division (No. 23), strongly denounce, and place on record our united protest against the conduct of a number of local Protestant merchants who, whilst living in a community which is ninety per cent. Catholic, and on whom they are almost entirely depend-dent, publicly avow their disapproval of the Home Rule scheme for Ireland on the alleged grounds of finance, and that we hereby call on all the Catholics in the Sligo Urban district to vote the signatories of this treacherous document to whom Home Rulers' money must be as equally objectionable as Home Rule itself."

James Colleery.
Henry Monson.

The Rev. Dr. Horton and the Rev. Joseph Hocking in an interesting book called "Shall Rome Reconstruct England?" say:—

"The priests control not only the worship but the life of the people. If the fetish possessed desires freedom for emigrants to leave it and find that not only peasants but even priests frequently cross the Atlantic, not for economic or worldly reasons at all, but to escape from the rigid and perfected system of the Roman obedience, which is, as Catholics think, the supreme blessing, and as Protestants think, the most crushing bane of that lovely and melancholy land."

Mr William O'Brien, M.P., a Home Ruler, and himself a Roman Catholic, wrote in these terms of the Ancient Order of Hibernians (or Molly Maguires), an exclusively Roman Catholic Society:—

"Mr Dillon described it as 'an infamous falsehood' that the object of Molly Maguirism was to drive the Protestant of the Protestant community in Ireland. We repeat that it is nothing but the simple truth. The fundamental object of the organisation of such a society would confirm this country a hell. It would fight the flame of civil war in our midst, and blight every hope of its future prosperity. To imagine that Disraeli would ever give Home Rule to a Molly Maguire-ridden country is sheer lunacy. The fact is that the salvation of the Irish cause depends on the utter overthrow and crushing out of this baneful sectarian organisation." "Cork Free Press," September 12th, 1910.

And again Mr O'Brien speaking in Cork said:

"It means treading one million of our Protestant fellow-countrymen as irreconcilable enemies, and taking care to keep them irreconcilable enemies.

It means, in plain English, boycotting them, persecuting them, making their lives intolerable for them in their native land."

And Cardinal Logue, speaking of the New Irish University (which was intended to be un-sectarian), said:—

"No matter what obstacle the Nonconformists of England and the Irish Nationalist Party are able not only to talk fair play to Protestants, but also to enforce it. The case of Mr Kingston ought not to be forgotten by Home Rule and Home Rulers. It is a magnificent test case. Hitherto we have hesitated to write about it, for we were waiting to hear the other side of the case. To-day, in the "Daily News," the Rev. J. O. Hannay makes it plain that there is no other side.

There is another farmer in the parish who holds land from which a former tenant was evicted. His name is Regan, But Regan is not boycotted. Why? Because he is Roman Catholic. That is to say, Kingston would probably not be boycotted if he were a Roman Catholic and had a "pull" in the League. . . .

We simply say that the United Irish League is wrong, monstrously wrong, and that it is the duty of Mr Redmond, Mr Dillon, Mr Devlin, and the whole Irish party to stand up like men and repudiate its action, and compel it to do justice to Kingston. It is a test case. The Local Government since 1898 has been entirely in the hands of the County Councils. In the following counties no Protestant has been appointed to any paid office by any of these bodies:—Kerry, King's County, Kildare, Kilkenny, Leitrim, Louth, Mayo, Queen's County, Roscommon, Sligo, Westmeath, and Wexford.

In the Sligo Corporation there is not a single Protestant, and at a demonstration after the election, Councillor John Jinks delivered himself as follows:—

"You have 24 members on the corporation, 24 Catholics, thank God."

I leave these cases to the impartial judgment of all who have followed this correspondence.

In politics, personal abuse is generally condemned as pusillanimous and distasteful; and mention of "showing the white feather" in any connection with the present Irish controversy surely applies more fittingly to His Majesty's political advisers and their anxiety for coming quarter-days—Yours, etc.,

E. H. BOUGHEY.

TEMPLENEWSAM FARMERS AND CO-OPERATION

To the Editor.

Sir,—If you will kindly allow me the use of your columns I am presumptuous enough to think that what I have to say may be of service to a number of hard-working, industrious men who toil long hours and generally find strenuous lives for very small reward. I refer to the farmers generally of Templenewsam and the surrounding districts.

In conversation with some of them the one outstanding feature seems to be their woeful lack of a true perception of their own best interests. If I were to tell a farmer he didn't know how to buy, I feel pretty sure he would think me a foolish man, even if he did not say so, yet the manner of some of his dealings would almost justify the same being said of him.

For instance, the market price of twine is at the present time 46s. per cwt., and likely to advance, but it can be bought co-operatively at 39s. 6d. Other farmers are doing that to-day through their clubs. They are also buying feeding cake, meal, seeds, tillages, etc., through their clubs, and every time they make a purchase of any sort they save money.

Another great saving can be effected in insurance of all kinds; in insuring stock, etc., in the ordinary way, the agent receives 15 per cent. commission, in the case of a farmer insuring through his club, the farmer receives 10 per cent back and the club 5 per cent.—another gain to the sensible farmer, and a gain also to his club.

There are many other benefits besides these all waiting for the farmer who has wisdom enough to throw off his insular prejudice, to trust his fellows, to co-operate, to form a club that will undoubtedly bring grist to the mill in the shape of greater profits. When are they going to move? —Yours, etc.,

LEEDS AND BARWICK CHARITIES.

CROSSGATES' INTERESTS.

At a meeting of Barwick-in-Elmet Council on Monday night, as well as Crossgates and Leeds, was discussed. Mr Wright presided, and other members present were Mr Wetherall, Mr Scholes, Mr Robshaw and Mr Lumb (Barwick), with the Clerk (Mr H. R. Clarke).

The Chairman said that several years ago the Parish Council appointed three trustees to manage the parish property, and recently they had the misfortune to lose the services of one of them. Mr W. Simpson, and himself were the remaining trustees, and they communicated with the Charity Commissioners as to the mode of procedure to be adopted in electing a third trustee, and the Charity Commissioners had replied suggesting that a new scheme should be drawn up and that Leeds should be represented on it.

The Clerk read the letter from the Charity Commissioners as follows:—

With reference to your letter of the 11th ult. I am to say that in the circumstances it appears to be desirable that a scheme should be established by order of the Board for the future regulation of the parish lands, or poor's estate scheme. The scheme would provide for the appointment of a body of trustees including representatives of the Parish Council of Barwick-in-Elmet and that of the City Council of Leeds, the owner of that of the City Council of Leeds, the owner of that part of the ancient parish which is now included in the city. Directions would also be given for the filling up of vacancies as and when they occur.

The Chairman said it was a valuable asset to the parish, and they could reckon on receiving £30 a year in relief of the poor rate. The offices had been built by the trustees, and a portion of the income went in payment of the interest and capital.

Mr Rayner inquired if the rents were received from land.

The Chairman said that the charity consisted of Mr Wetherall's farm at Scholes, the old workhouse estate and several fields there. He mentioned that there were other charities, such as the Doles Charity, but the Council had not exclusive control over them.

Mr Pemberton said that he was distinctly in favour of the Council managing their own charities, but regard to the other charities, they could let Crossgates Church have a representative if they liked, but he did not favour Leeds having representation on the trustees as applicable for the invitation.

The Chairman said that he was in sympathy with Mr Pemberton's remarks, but he pointed out that the Order by which Crossgates was annexed by Leeds stated:—

Nothing in this Order shall prejudice, vary, or affect any right, interest, or jurisdiction in or over any charitable endowment which now is or hereafter may be enjoyed by any existing township affected by this Order.

Mr Rayner said that a certain part of the parish property was vested in Crossgates, and he asked how it could not be adjusted at the time the arbitration was going on between Leeds and the District Council.

The Chairman said it had nothing to do with that.

Mr Rayner said that some scheme might be formed whereby Leeds could be bought out.

Mr Pemberton: Crossgates has not any of the property.

The Chairman: Yes, it has about an acre at Manston.

Mr Pemberton said he forgot about the quarry. They might come to some arrangement, whereby Leeds could have that land.

The Chairman said he agreed with Mr Rayner that they should ask the Charity Commissioners whether a scheme could not be devised whereby they could pay Leeds out.

Mr Rayner proposed that a letter be sent to the Charity Commissioners in these terms.

Mr Pemberton seconded, and this was agreed to.

AN ALLERTON BYWATER MAN.

WIFE PETITIONS FOR DIVORCE

In the Divorce Court on Monday—before Sir Samuel Evans—Mrs Maud Carrington, of Castleford, petitioned for a divorce from her husband on the ground of desertion and misconduct.

The petitioner, giving evidence, stated she married Mr Jonathan Carrington at the Baptist Union Church, Castleford, on February 22nd, 1902. After the marriage they lived together at Wilkin Street, Castleford, and later in Hugh Street. In 1909 her husband left her in order to go away with a woman named Violet Barnaby.

Witness took proceedings in the police court, and obtained an order from the magistrates for maintenance, or that he should return to live with her. The husband did, in fact, return, and they lived together for a time at Castleford. He left petitioner, however, again in 1910. He went away in the morning saying he was going to get his wages, but he had never returned to cohabitation since.

Petitioner had two children, daughters, aged 9 and 10 respectively.

His Lordship: Have you heard of him since?

Witness: No.

Witness understood he was living at Allerton Bywater now, and she added, in reply to his Lordship's question: "I don't want to go back to him again."

Richard Davidson stated he saw the respondent at his house. He was living with Violet Barnaby. Witness served him with the petition papers, and the respondent replied, "She's going in for divorce is she? Well, I will not try to stop her getting it."

Witness again saw him on January 6th of this year at Robinson Street, Allerton Bywater, when he served the respondent with the amended petition.

Respondent did not say anything, but Mrs Barnaby, who was present in the house, said that they were all right at Pontefract police court proceedings, and then the people began to know they were not married, and an uncomfortable position arose.

Police-constable Bruner, of the West Riding Police, gave evidence, and his Lordship granted a decree nisi and costs.

TADCASTER BREWSTER SESSIONS.

ENORMOUS DECREASE IN CONVICTIONS IN FIVE YEARS.

The annual Brewster Sessions for Tadcaster division took place on Monday at Tadcaster, and the magistrates present were Mr E. T. Besoles (Chairman), Col. Gascoigne, Mr J. H. Ingleby, and Mr Wailes Fairbairn.

The Clerk (Mr Green) read Supt. Slack's report to the magistrates as follows:—

There are 38 licensed houses in the division, and they are classified as follows:—33 full licenses, 1 beer "on," and 4 beer, wine and spirits "off." These figures are the same as last year.

The population of the division, according to the census of 1911, is 6,803. There is, therefore, an average of 179 persons to each license.

During the past 12 months 4 fully-licensed houses have been transferred, viz:—Golden Lion Inn and Robin Hood Inn, Tadcaster; Lion Inn and Robin Hood Inn, Towton; and Fox and Hounds Inn, Marston, as compared with 5 transferred during the preceding year.

The following comparative statement shows all prosecutions taken under the Intoxicating Liquor Laws within the division during the past 5 years:—Year ending January 31st, 1910, 91 convicted; 1911, 74 convicted and 2 dismissed; 1912, 27 and 3; 1913, 25 and 7; and 1914, 29 and 3. Of the 32 persons proceeded against during the year 22 were non-residents within the division. The licensed houses have been conducted satisfactorily during the past 12 months.

Four occasional licences have been granted during the year authorising the sale of liquor at places other than licensed premises in the division, against 3 in the previous year, while 19 exemption orders for extension of licensed premises for special occasions were granted against 20 in the preceding year.

There are no applications for new licences for consideration at this licensing meeting.

The Chairman stated that the report was quite satisfactory, and he was sure that it represented exactly what had taken place during the year. Supt. Slack's management of the licensed-houses having been well-conducted was satisfactory, and he hoped that it would be continued.

All the licences were renewed.

ENTERTAINMENT AT TADCASTER WORKHOUSE.

TREAT TO THE INMATES.

On Friday evening the inmates of Tadcaster workhouse had their annual entertainment, and the function proved a most enjoyable one. At five o'clock an excellent knife and fork tea, which was paid for by subscription, was served to the inmates and to the children of the Bilbrough Home, who were present at the invitation of the Master and Matron. Before leaving for the home each child was presented with a toy.

Subsequently the entertainment took place, and Mr E. Payne presided, several residents of the district being present.

The programme was as follows:—Song, Mr. Swinden; humorous tit-bits, Mr Cunningham (Leeds); song, "Love, the peddler," Miss D. Harrison; recitation, "The folks that won't come back," Mr F. Terry; song, "Amid the bush of the corn," Miss Brayshaw; dialogue, "Rival relatives," Messrs. Dyson, Dyson, and Bottrell; song, "Down the vale," Mrs Shearsmith; whistling selection, Mr. Cunningham; song, Mr Smart; song, "When Jack's at sea," Mr Wilson; recitation, "The fireman's wedding," Mr E. Midgley; and ventriloquial sketch, Mr Cunningham, who caused roars of laughter. Mrs Smith (Tadcaster) was the accompanist.

A pleasing feature of the proceedings was the presentation to each woman inmate of a shawl or other article of wearing apparel, 1lb. of tea, and sugar, while each man got an ounce of tobacco.

At the close Mr Payne, on behalf of the Tadcaster friends, proposed a vote of thanks to the master and matron for inviting them to the concert.

Mr Milsom, stationmaster, seconded, and this was cordially passed.

Thereafter the officers and their friends had a dance, and music was supplied by Mrs Smith (Tadcaster), while Mr Lacey acted as M.C.

The arrangements for the tea and concert were admirably carried out by the master and matron and their staff.

LOFTHOUSE COLLIERY COMPANY

ANNUAL MEETING.

The annual meeting of the shareholders of the Lofthouse Colliery Company (Limited) was held in the Philosophical Hall, Leeds, on Saturday.

Mr A. Armitage (the Chairman) moved the adoption of the report, in which the directors recommended a dividend of six shillings per share. He referred to the installation of two air compressors, and the fixing of an engine in the new engine-house, the work connected with which, he said, would be completed some time next June.

Mr George Armitage, a director, who seconded the motion, said it was satisfactory to know that the year had passed without serious dispute with the workmen. The output of the colliery for the year had been a record one of 350,000 tons gross, although it had to be regretted that the miners had not attended at the colliery as regularly as they might have done. The Sillstone seam, from which the bulk of the output during the company's existence had been obtained, was fast being exhausted. It was, however, continued good, he thought that the output would be increased in the future.

In reply to questions, the Chairman assured the shareholders that the directors had kept a sufficient sum in reserve to meet possible developments. The quality of the Beeston seam was as good as now others, and he thought that when opened out would produce a "second" quality.

Mr George Armitage added, in regard to the questions as to the development of the Beeston seam, that the directors did not think it fair to place all the cost of the development upon the present-day shareholders, who were entitled to their share of the profits. The Chairman, on this point, remarked that £1,000 had been taken from the depreciation fund.

Mr H. B. Talbot and Mr J. J. Ely were re-elected as directors, and Mr J. W. Close and Mr John William Hirst (in the place of Mr S. Bottomley), resigned, were appointed as auditors.

A YEAR'S FIGURES FOR SEACROFT PARISH.

PROGRESS RECORDED—NO MARRIAGE.

In his magazine the Vicar of Seacroft gives some interesting figures relating to the parish for last year. He states:—

During the year there were 30 baptisms. All these were in church, and all were infants except one adult, who was conditionally baptised. The average number for the previous 10 years was 27·4.

Marriages.—We had none during the year, because in each case of banns published the bride lived in the other parish. The average for 10 years was 5·5.

Burials.—We are happy again in having a small number of burials, 9 in all against an average of 14·8. Of these 5 were males (aged 6, 45, 57, 64, and 77) and 4 were females (aged 4, 35, 45, and 60). Three were non-parishioners formerly resident in Seacroft.

Congregations.—There is naturally no record kept of the attendance at our church services, but for many years past the number of coins in the collections has been recorded. This in no case probably is the same as the attendance, but serves well as an indication of increase or decrease. Taking these figures, the average number in the mornings was 47·1 and in the evenings 80·0 (averages for the previous 10 years give 45·9 and 74·3 respectively).

Communicants.—The exact number is recorded every time. The total number of communions made during the year was 1,060 (450 males and 610 females) and the average for 10 previous years was 790·9.

Contributions.—So far as I can gather, the voluntary contributions for church purposes which have passed through the hands of the church officials were £179 19s. 9d., and the previous 10 years averaged £166 8s. 5d.

ABERFORD

Mr E. O. Simpson's Views.—On Saturday night Mr E. O. Simpson addressed a Primrose League gathering at Gildersome. He said it was the Government had found out their mistake in believing that the people of Ulster were merely braggarts in the position they had taken up. We were spectators to-day of such a scene as had never been witnessed in the history of this country before—a body of men organised and prepared to enforce by the way by force of arms a measure which the Government sought to impose upon them. Such a situation should make people think seriously. He, as a voter, his duty as a voter, his duty was to look, his duty a voter, his duty not only to England, but the United Kingdom at large, could come to any other conclusion than that the Government which proposed to create such a position as that with which we were threatened ought to be removed from power before they could do any mischief.

SHADWELL.

Unsustained Charge.—Annie Varley (39), the wife of the licensee of the Wellington Hotel, Wetherby Road, Shadwell, appeared before Mr Horace Marshall (Stipendiary Magistrate) at the Leeds Police Court on Monday on a charge of being drunk in charge of a horse and trap, and being drunk in charge of a child. Police-sergeant Dimbley said that at a quarter to eleven on Friday night last he was standing at Oakwood, Roundhay, when he saw the defendant driving a horse and trap. She was on the wrong side of the road, and pulled the horse on to the footpath. She spoke to him in a low voice, and then pulled the horse round again. In the trap there were her child, aged three years, and her nephew, aged ten. The wheels got the right out of the trap, and she staggered. She smelled very strongly of drink. Mr Arthur Willey, for the defence, said there was evidence that his client was perfectly sober when she left the Black Swan Hotel in Vicar Lane, Leeds, about twenty minutes before the officer saw her. Mrs Varley had had tea in town, and the food had disagreed with her; in fact, by the time Roundhay was reached she was feeling very ill. She had only had two bottles of beer all day. Mr Willey added that the pony was "a brute," and when it had been standing it invariably backed before it started again. After evidence had been called for the defence, the magistrate said he was of the opinion that Mrs Varley was not morally to blame. He did not think it was her fault at all. She was discharged.

PUBLIC NOTICES

ROTHWELL URBAN DISTRICT COUNCIL.

NOTIFICATION OF BIRTHS ACT, 1907.

NOTICE is hereby given that the above Council have by resolution passed at a meeting of the Council held on the 2nd day of February, 1914, ADOPTED the NOTIFICATION OF BIRTHS ACT, 1907, which resolution will come into force at such date (not being less than one month after the first publication of this notice) as may be appointed by the Local Government Board. By section one of this Act it is provided that in the case of every child born within the area of the Council it shall be the duty of the father of the child if he is actually residing in the house where the birth takes place at the time of its occurrence, and of any person in attendance upon the mother, at the time of, or within 6 hours after the birth, to give notice in writing of the birth to the Medical Officer of Health of the above Council, by posting a pre-paid letter or postcard, addressed to the Medical Officer of Health giving the necessary information of the birth WITHIN 36 HOURS AFTER THE BIRTH, or by delivering a written notice of the birth at the office of the Medical Officer of Health, within the same time. Any person who fails to give the notice will be liable to a penalty of 20s.

This notice is in addition to, and not in substitution for, the requirements of any Act relating to the registration of births.

ROTHWELL URBAN DISTRICT COUNCIL.

THE PRIVATE STREET WORKS ACT, 1892.

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN that at a General Meeting of the Urban District Council of Rothwell held on MONDAY, the 2nd day of February, 1914, it was resolved:—

"That in pursuance of Section 5, Sub-Section 2, of the Private Street Works Act, 1892, the Specification, Plan, Sections, Estimate and Provisional Apportionment amounting to £367 2s. 2d. prepared by the Surveyor, and submitted to this Meeting, for the Sewering, Levelling, Paving, Metalling, Flagging, Channelling, and making good of WIND-MILL LANE, in the Parish of Rothwell (part only) from Carlton Lane to the Parish Boundary of Carlton, be and are hereby approved."

Dated this 6th day of February, 1914.

Ison's Eye & Ear Dispensary
LIMITED.
71, GREAT GEORGE ST., LEEDS.
MR. THOS. ISON,
OCULIST and AURIST.
THIS INSTITUTION was ESTABLISHED in 1871. The system of working is the strictly modern one, each patient paying a small periodical fee whilst under treatment, and they may, therefore, justly expect to receive the prompt care and attention which in many instances in charitable institutions is too often omitted. The treatment is of a mild and safe character, without operation or the use of Ear Drums, Ear Corners or other mechanical or painful appliances. Another advantage appertaining to this dispensary is its system of treatment by correspondence, by which sufferers at long distances, and in isolated positions can have the advantage of MR. ISON'S advice and remedies forwarded through the post. No case is undertaken unless there be a reasonable hope of cure, or benefit to the patient.
Attendance at Leeds every Tuesday, from 10 to 7 on Alternate Saturdays, February 7th and 21st.
Hours 10 to 7. Other days by appointment.
TREATMENT WITHOUT OPERATION.
ARTIFICIAL HUMAN EYES fitted from 1s.
SPECTACLES and EYE PRESERVERS, 3/6 to 10/6. Gold Frames from 20s.
SPECIAL NOTICE.—There are many cases of failing eyesight which can be speedily remedied by mild local treatment, thus dispensing with the use of glasses.

Rothwell Courier and Times.

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 7th, 1914.

In a Derbyshire village the schoolmistress has been given the crown of martyrdom because, in the exercise of her profession, she thought it desirable to teach eugenics to a number of girls who were leaving school. It seems that the mystery of the origin of birth had created among them a desire for knowledge, and as their mothers, who should have been their guides, failed to enlighten them, they naturally appealed to their friend, the school-mistress. In order to safeguard girls starting on life she thought it was very desirable that they should have some knowledge of eugenics, and she imparted such information as would be helpful to them. When this became known the school-managers called the teacher before them, and when she candidly admitted that she had given the information for the girls' good, they promptly passed a resolution recommending her resignation. The County Committee, however, have more common-sense, and they have told the managers they see no reason for asking the teacher to resign. Some of the good mothers who failed to do their duty to their own children are indignant, and have actually gone so far as to withdraw their children from school—presumably for fear of contamination. It is not unlikely that the villagers will make it so hot for the teacher that she will have to flit.

Yorkshire miners, whatever their faults, have a higher appreciation of their women folks than to allow them to revert to working conditions which were condemned years ago. Owing to a scarcity of boy labour the management of the Sharlston Colliery offered employment to a number of girls at the pit head, and, as showing the independence of the rising generation, a number at once engaged themselves for the work. The Yorkshire Miners' Association, however, very promptly interfered, and stated plainly that they would not allow the re-introduction of female labour at collieries, and the management wisely decided to revert to male labour. While admitting that the colliery may be handicapped by a scarcity of boys, it would assuredly have been a downward step had the attempt to employ the sex at this class of work been successful. The girls were no doubt employed under proper safeguards, and they appear to have been perfectly happy in their work, but had this been allowed at one colliery the employment of women at mines would have become general in the county, and its condemnation by the men who understood the question is the best proof of its undesirability. At one time men and women worked together in collieries, with dire results, and it is probable that comparatively good wages would have tempted young women to brave the anger of their families and accept work at the pit head, but it would not have been for the benefit of their own class. Fields of employment, to which women are suited, are increasingly open to the sex, and there is no need for them to enter a sphere which was regarded long ago as undesirable.

Following the publication in this journal of an article on the monetary rewards of unskilled labour a reader discusses its position and inquires the reason why so many thousands of men belong to this particular class. Coal mining and agriculture are the principal industries in the district, giving employment to a very large number of men, and both may fairly claim the designation of "skilled," although in some parts the remuneration of farm hands is lower than that of the worst-paid labour. Agricultural labourers, who can plough, thatch, cut hedges, etc., show a degree of skill which even the townsman might envy, but, comparing the returns for his work with those of the artizan, he is poorly paid. But this is not the class to which reference is made. Throughout the country, in towns and in villages, vast numbers of men are compelled to earn their living by means of "labouring jobs"; they are "hewers of wood and drawers of water" for skilled men; and not only are their wages small, but their employment is irregular, with disastrous physical results frequently. These people, as a rule, occupy the worst property in the place, they are the class who most frequently are stricken by disease, and they yield by far the largest number of paupers. In themselves they constitute an economic and social problem, and they are so helpless or indifferent that they do not try to find a solution for themselves. When a man and his family get into the social slough hopelessness frequently overtakes them, they lose all independence they may have possessed, and prey on the charitably-disposed. Unskilled labour there must be, but its condition would be very different were employment better regulated. The great evil, in the first place, is the multiplication of the unskilled, and this must be attributed, in no small measure, to the selfishness and greed of avaricious parents. Many people, it may be granted, have a hard struggle to bring up their families, but surely their own experience should be a lesson to them, and prevent them sending their children to employment which leads into the "blind alley." A boy of ten years the boys earn what is considered a good wage, and this goes into the family exchequer, but when they come to manhood they discover themselves in precisely the same position as their parents, with low wages and bad conditions of living. The parents owes something to the child, and, whatever his position, he is expected, as a matter of bare justice, to make some sacrifice in order that his off-spring may have advantages he does not possess. Unfortunately these Britons, men unworthy of the name, sell their child labour to the highest bidder, take the proceeds as long as they are permitted, and perpetuate the wrongs which their own parents had probably inflicted on them. Compare a pauper-child or a reformatory boy with the son of one of the men referred to, and immediately this free Briton will be fired with indignation, but, as a matter of fact, the pauper child and the reformatory boy are better done to, because they are taught skilled trades. Parents have the solution of this question largely in their own hands. If they were less selfish, and had a better realisation of their duty, they would work such a transformation in England as the country has never seen. Another reason for the multiplication of the unskilled is the change brought about in the apprenticeship system and the restrictions imposed by trades unions. In the old days when workshops were smaller the master and the apprentice worked side by side, but industrial evolution has brought about great establishments controlled by limited liability companies, which are responsible, in some degree, for industrial troubles, and the trades unions have, in order presumably to protect their members, placed a restriction on the number of apprentices to be employed. Under the old system no doubt a larger proportion of better tradesmen was turned out, because the lads were taught their trades by the masters themselves, and there was a pride in their work. But in the great undertakings no such responsibility rests upon the people who really control the labour conditions, and the apprentices must get their training in the best way they can. Moreover, the extraordinary restriction in the number of apprentices is calculated to prevent lads from getting employment in trades for which they have a fancy, and the result is that in some trades, at certain seasons, it is impossible to get workmen. To reasonable restrictions no objection could very well be taken, but if its object is simply the aggrandisement of those engaged in a particular trade it assumes a different aspect.

Patent list compiled by John E. Walsh, chartered patent agent, of 25, Royal Exchange, Boar Lane, Leeds; and at Crossley Street, Halifax. Applications—C. E. Oldroyd, Leeds, an improved scarlet dye process for cotton and wool union fabrics; M. A. Harper Mitchell, Otley, an improved skirt and blouse holder. Application completed—Daniel Todd, Otley, combined inflating valve and safety relief valve for motor tyres. Patent sealed—T. J. and C. H. Bottomley, Leeds, an improved safety pocket for coats and fke garments.

ROTHWELL

The treasurer of Leeds Infirmary acknowledges receipt of £48 10s. 6d. from the workpeople of J. and J. Charlesworth, Rothwell Haigh Colliery, and £7 from the customers of the Black Bull Hotel, Rothwell.

LEEDS WEST RIDING PETTY SESSIONS.—At the Leeds West Riding Petty Sessions on Tuesday the magistrates present were Mr. F. M. Lupton (in the chair), Mr E. H. Parker, Mr J. B. Breed, Mr S. Hudson, and Mr E. Parkin.

WORKING MEN'S CLUB.—In connection with the Rothwell Working Men's Club, the Marsh, the Ballot paper for the election of the committee were scrutinised and resulted in the following members being placed on the committee:—Messrs J. Bridges, J. Tate, G. W. Noddings, J. Fox, T. Thurwell, E. Haigh, and J. Goddard. There were 135 papers, three being spoilt.

WHIST DRIVE.—A successful whist drive and dance, promoted on behalf of the Church Sunday School, was held in the Church Schools on Wednesday night. Mr J. Harrison was the M.C. for the whist. The prize-winners were:—Ladies —1, Mrs E. Harrison; 2, Mrs Newsome. Gentlemen—1, Mr J. Harrison; 2, Mr T. W. Taylor. Mr F. Hirst was the M.C. for dancing.

FOOTBALL.—Rothwell Wednesday played their neighbours, Leeds Tradesmen, at Rothwell, on Wednesday. Ended-to-end play characterised the first half, and neither side could score until close on the interval, when Nellkton gave the Tradesmen the lead. On resuming Rothwell had rather the better of the play and repeatedly assailed their opponents' goal, but the game was well advanced before Heaton equalised the scores. Result:—Rothwell Wednesday 1 goal, Leeds Tradesmen 1 goal.

PICKWICKS SOCIETY.—Continuing his readings from the "Pickwick Papers," Mr G. W. Nodding gave the chapter recounting "The interview between Sam Wellee and a family party" at the meeting held in the Pickwicks Society on Thursday night. Mr G. Wright gave a Yorkshire reading, entitled "A wife who took to football." Mark Twain's "My first lie and how I got out of it" and "Original and impromptu" and a reading from W. W. Jacob "In borrowed plumes" was given by Mr P. Kemshell. Mr J. H. Bowling presided.

LANGUISH.—At the Leeds West Riding Petty Sessions on Tuesday Thomas Atack, miner, of Rothwell, was summoned for using obscene language at Oulton. Defendant's wife appeared. P.C. Robinson said that on Sunday, 10.40 p.m. on Thursday, January 22nd, he was in Fleet Lane, Oulton, when he heard the defendant, who was about 300 yards away, making use of obscene language. He continued to do so until he came up to the officer. When spoken to, defendant said he was aggravated by some other men or he would not have used it. A fine of 5s. and costs was imposed.

WESLEYAN CHURCH.—In aid of the married women's stall for the forthcoming Wesleyan bazaar, a social gathering was held in the Wesleyan Schoolroom on Tuesday evening. There was an enjoyable programme of songs and recitations, while a portion of the evening was given over to games. Miss Kate Ellis and Mr R. Ellis gave a duet, and Miss Ada Bayley recited. An amusing sketch, entitled "Who's who," was presented by Miss R. Rowley, Miss A. Rowley, Miss K. Ellis, and Miss D. Dawson. Miss M. Wright and Miss Ellis gave songs, and a pianoforte duet was admirably executed by Miss M. Wright and Miss M. Armitage, the latter also contributing a pianoforte solo. The proceeds amounted to about 22s. 6d.

DRINK.—At the Leeds West Riding Petty Sessions on Tuesday John Sutcliffe, a miner, of Stourton, was summoned for having been drunk in Rothwell on Saturday, January 24th. Evidence was given by P.C. Bosomworth that about 11.50 p.m. on the day in question he received a complaint about the defendant, whom he found in the house of the person making the complaint. He was very drunk and made use of bad language. P.C. Womack corroborated, and said defendant was so drunk that he had to be almost carried to the tramcar by his son. Defendant said the bother had all arisen over a discussion about a dog. He was fined 2s. 6d. and costs.

LIBERAL CLUB.—The annual meeting of the Rothwell Liberal Working Men's Club was held on Saturday night, the President (Mr J. Stead), who has been ill for some time, occupying the chair. There was a good attendance of members. The annual report, which showed that a satisfactory year had been recorded, was read by the President. It was reported that the membership of the Club numbered 137, and during the past year 45 new members had been enrolled. The balance sheet, which showed a balance in the hands of the treasurer of £100 18s. 6d., was read by the secretary, Mr W. Wilshire. Reference was made to a sum of £14 which had been contributed by the club to the Leeds Workpeople's Hospital Fund. In connection with this item it might be mentioned that the committee of the above Fund attended at the Liberal Club on Tuesday night and presented an emblem together with a medal to commemorate the club's generosity. The highest contribution in the division. Votes of thanks to retiring officers, and the auditors were passed. The election of officers took place at a previous meeting, and resulted as follows:—President, Mr J. Stead; vice-presidents, Messrs R McCullough and J. C. Watkin; treasurer, Mr G. W. Blakley; secretary, Mr W. Wilshire; Committee of Management—Messrs W. Bills, H. Bartett, F. Hough, A. Smith, G. Walker, C. Heaton, O. Taylor, A Cripps, J Flower, J Faulkner H P. Smith, and T. Smith.

ALLERTON BYWATER

On Saturday afternoon in the Leeds and District Football League Rothwell W.R. overcame Allerton Bywater Institute by three goals to two.

BARWICK

AN OLD INSTITUTION.—It will be remembered that the Parish Council decided to remove the old pump at Barwick, which has served the village for many years, and put down a new one. Mr Stead, of Thorner, was given an order for a new pump, and at the meeting of the Council on Monday night he wrote stating that he would carry out the work as soon as possible.- Mr Robshaw said the work had not yet been commenced.

BILLIARDS.—Leeds Deaf and Dumb Institute and Barwick-in-Elmet Institute played their best in the first round of the charity competition at Hixon and Sons' Showroom, Park Street, Leeds, on Tuesday night. Leeds were successful in only two of the five games, but on the aggregate totals won by 30 points. The scores were 456 and 426. Details (Leeds names first):—H. E. Grantham 86 v. T. Robshaw 100, W. Stephenson 100 v. G. Lovett 58, J. E. Spencer 93 v. E. Forbes 100, T. Robshaw 100 v. J. Barker 100. and A. Coyle 100 v. K. Birch 68.

PARISH COUNCIL.—At a meeting of Barwick Council at Scholes on Monday night Mr Wright proposed a vote of sympathy with Mr A. Booth, of the School House, Barwick, one of the members, who was ill, having recently undergone an operation. Mr Needham seconded, and the resolution was agreed to.—Mr Rayner inquired if any further communication had been received from the N.E.R. Co. in regard to cheap fares from Scholes.—The Clerk answered in the negative.—Mr Rayner moved that the Clerk again write the Railway Company on the matter, and Mr Needham seconding, this was agreed to.

BOWERS ALLERTON

TEMPERANCE WORK.—A very profitable time was spent in the Mission Schoolroom on Saturday by the workers and friends of the Bowers Allerton and District Band of Hope. A tea conference in the afternoon was addressed by the Rev. J. W. Davies, of Castleford, his subject being "The progress of temperance during the last 50 years." The conditions of society previous to those years was briefly surveyed, and how temperance principles took root and gradually won their way into the sympathies of doctors, judges, and all who had the welfare of humanity at heart was described. The reverend gentleman gave many quotations from various authorities which proved that public opinion was growing more and more opposed to the present drinking customs. A very interesting discussion followed. Mr Herbert Firth (President of the Union) presided, and delegates representing most of the societies were present. After a substantial tea, to which about 70 sat down, an entertainment took place. Miss J. Thompson, of Methley, presided. The programme consisted of songs, recitations, action songs, and drills, given by the members of the Bowers Allerton Band of Hope, who had been well trained by Miss Robinson. Master Cyril Stockwell presided at the piano. An address was given by the Rev. J. W. Davies.

CARLTON

ANNIVERSARY SERVICES.—The choir anniversary of the Carlton Primitive Methodist Church was celebrated during the week-end. On Saturday a public tea, which was well attended, was held in the schoolroom, and this was followed by a capital entertainment given by the members of the Ardsley Primitive Methodist Choir. Mr John Dobson presided. On Sunday afternoon the choir gave the service of song "A word in season," the reading portions being given by Mrs Thompson. Mr H. Collinson, of Stourton, who also preached an excellent sermon in the evening, presided. All the services were successful.

BENEFIT CONCERT.—For the benefit of Mr Harland, who has been incapacitated from work for over twelve months, a concert was held in the Rothwell Empire on Sunday afternoon, under the auspices of the Farnley and Wortley Independent Order of Rechabites, and there was a large attendance. Mr J. P. Crook, of Leeds, presided. The following gave the programme through:—Song, "The toilers," Mr Whiteman (songs); song, "How lovely are Thy dwellings," Miss O. Rinder (Carlton); recitation, Miss Holroyd (Rothwell Haigh); song, "Bonnie Ring," Madame Holroyd (Rothwell Haigh); quartette, "Le Prophet," Carlton Quartette Party; song, "The trumpeter," Mr Backhouse (Hunslet); song, "Queen of angels," Mr Whiteman; song, "The rosary," Miss Rinder; recitation, "In the children's hospital," Miss Holroyd; song, "Abide with me," Madame Holroyd; recitation, "Bobby," Miss Rinder; song, "The young royalist," Mr Backhouse. Mr Herbert Firth was the accompanist.

CROSSGATES

DANCE.—On Friday evening a successful dance, promoted by the Crossgates Golf Club, was held in the Recreation Hall, and it was attended by about seventy ladies and gentlemen. Mr Thewlis acted as M.C., and Messrs Simpson and Townsend were the stewards.

FOR THE NEW CHURCH.—An important sale of work in aid of the New Church Building Fund will be held on Friday and Saturday, February 20th and 21st. Numerous attractions will be provided, and there is no doubt the residents will give the sale excellent support. The names of the ladies who will perform the opening ceremony on both days and other particulars are given in our advert columns.

WESLEYAN CHURCH.—On Sunday special services were held at the Wesleyan Church, and there were good congregations. At the morning service Mr S. Dibbs, of Leeds, was the preacher, and in the evening the pulpit was occupied by the Rev. F. Boyce. Organist Rawling sang solos at both services, and in the evening the choir sang an anthem. The collections were for the choir fund.

GARFORTH

DRINK.—At the Leeds West Riding Petty Sessions on Tuesday William Reed, a miner, of Garforth, was summoned for having been drunk and disorderly. P.C. Jackson gave evidence about 10.10 p.m. on Saturday, January 24th, he was in the Station Road, Garforth, when he saw the defendant staggering along the footpath. He was very drunk. A fine of 5s and costs was inflicted.

B.W.T.A.—The junior branch of the B.W.T.A. arranged a concert that took place on Saturday night. The Rev E. Rees was in the chair, and a most interesting and instructive address was given by Mr Hasle Carr, of Leeds. Pleasing dialogues on temperance subjects were admirably given by the children. Miss C. Couldwell's singing and Miss Dobson's recitations gave great pleasure, and added much to the enjoyment of the evening.

"SLEEPING OUT."—On a charge of sleeping out at Garforth a prisoner at the Leeds West Riding Petty Sessions yesterday—Mr Willis was sent to prison for two months. P.C. Hogg stated that when he was examining the premises of the County Council Farm about ten minutes past twelve that morning he found Willis asleep there. On being searched he was found to be destitute and refused to give any information regarding himself.

LANGUAGE.—At the Leeds West Riding Petty Sessions on Tuesday Charles Martin, a labourer, of Garforth, was summoned for having used obscene language at Garforth, on January 22nd. P.C. Hogg stated that about 6 p.m. on the day in question he was on duty on the Station Road, Garforth, when he heard the defendant using the language complained of. He spoke to him about his conduct, and told him he would be reported. A fine of 5s. and costs was imposed.

SKELETONS FOUND.—Whilst digging in the sand pit in Gildwell field, East Garforth, a workman came upon two skeletons buried about three feet from the surface. The heads and feet of the skeletons rested on stones, but there was nothing to show why or when they had been buried there. The skeletons have been reinterred in the quarry.

URBAN COUNCIL.—A special meeting of the Urban Council, at which the Press representatives was excluded, was held on January 21st to discuss the re-organisation of the Council's staff. The minutes show that Mr Gascoigne opposed and Mr Chappel supported that a working road surveyor be appointed at a salary of £80 per annum, and that a certificated sanitary inspector at £60 per annum be appointed, he also to act as building and water inspector, with an additional salary of £20 per annum for the two latter offices. An amendment was proposed by Mr Slater and seconded by Mr R. Routledge, senr., that the present arrangement of offices and their duties remain as at present. The resolution was carried. It was agreed that £5 be paid to Mr H. M. Driver and that he receive the thanks of the Council for the services he rendered in connection with the outbreak of fever.

PICTURE HOUSE.—"The Banshee," a story of pathos and humour, is as Irish as anything possibly can be, the characters, dress, scenery, and sentiment belonging essentially to Ireland. The picture was well received and an excellent programme filmed during the first half of this week, included a coloured stirring drama, "Vengeance of the Waffia," and a clever comedy "Max and the Postmistress." During the latter half of this week, the chief item is a three-part picture, entitled "The life of a murderer," and deals with a parent's devotion, to her wayward son, the trials she endures, and her reward. Although of a tragic nature, the story is full of lively interest. A shorter and more thrilling story is "Suffragettes," in which a man in desperation steals a motor-car to save the lives of wife and child. Next week the outstanding features in the excellent programme are "A Goodness repaid" and "Heart of an artist" in the first half, and "Wheels of fate" and "The death sentence." On the last three days, all of which are calculated to grip the attention and sustain the interest of the audience throughout. For times and prices see advert.

GREAT PRESTON

INFIRMARY EFFORT.—A very successful social was held in the Infants' Schoolroom on Saturday evening for the benefit of Leeds Infirmary, a large number being present. Mr G. Nowell was M.C., and the music was supplied by Messrs A. Dyer (piano) and T. G. Dyer (violin).

HALTON

A hockey match was played between Whitkirk and Undercliffe on Saturday afternoon, and the latter won by four goals to three.

On Saturday afternoon, in the Church Football League Leeds St. Paul's defeated Whitkirk Church Mission by a goal to nothing.

LECTURE.—The Templenewsam Allotments' Association has arranged for a lecture on "Edible and Useful Gardens" to be delivered by Mr Thomas Boughton, of the Leeds University, in Halton Council School, on Thursday, February 12th. Particulars are given in our advert columns.

PIGEON SHOOTING.—At the Halton Gun Club members' shoot on Tuesday a 3 bird sweep resulted in Stead and Green dividing, a 5 bird sweep was won by "Staunton," a 3 bird sweep was divided by Crawshaw, Taylor, Seal, R. Morris, and a 5 bird sweep by "Staunton" and Seal.

BILLIARDS.—In the Non-Political Billiard League Halton Institute first team played Park Street, at Leeds, on Monday, the result being a win for Park Street by 19 points. On Tuesday the second team met at Halton, and after excelling match was seen, Park Street, who are the leaders in the second division, gaining a victory by 1 point. In the first match both teams had the start, and Halton scored 858 and their opponents 875. Details (Halton names first):—J. Thompson 150 v T. Marsden 68, E. Green 150 v. A. Jennings 140, G. Butterill 150 v. H. Hobday 117, G. O. Bell 68 v. P. Oglesby 150, J. P. Loveday 135 v. S. Wood 150, and V. Schofield 105 v. A. Yardley 150. In the second match Halton (80 start) scored 747, and Park Street (50 start) put on 748. Details (Halton names first):—R. Lucas 100 v. W. Proctor 83, W. A. Taylor 100 v. C. Ibbotson 76, J. Hunt 37 v. KIPPAX

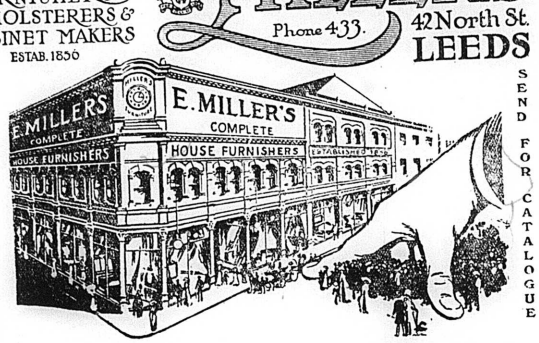
PARISH CHURCH.—A sewing meeting tea was held in the schoolroom on Monday afternoon, and this was followed by a social in the evening. The company indulged in games and amusements, and the time was passed very pleasantly.

PRIMITIVE METHODIST CHURCH.—A service was held in this church on Tuesday, when the Rev. E. Dalton, D.D., preached in the afternoon. A public tea took place in the schoolroom immediately after, and was served by the following ladies:—Mrs J. Appleyard, Mrs A. Firth, Mrs J. Firth, and Mrs A. Appleyard. In the evening Dr Dalton delivered a very interesting lecture on "London by night and by day," and there was a good audience. Mr F. Forgham, Shackburn, of Astley, presided, and he was supported by the Rev. B. B. Parkins, of Castleford.



CONSERVATIVE MEETING.—Under the auspices of the Conservative Association a meeting was held in the Church Schoolroom on Tuesday evening. Mr G. H. Wheeler, M.P., presided, and Mr Campbell Johnston, the Unionist candidate for Osgoldcross, was the principal speaker. The Chairman said that if Ireland wanted Home Rule she ought to be able to finance herself. If Ireland got Home Rule 42 of the Irish members would sit at Westminster, and have a vote and voice in matters connected with the government of this country. He respected every man's religion, but the fact remained that in the carrying out of certain laws the Protestants would be penalised. He spoke as some length on the housing and land questions, and the PRIMROSE LEAGUE IN BARKSTON ASH.

ADDRESS BY MR LANE FOX, M.P.

NAVY—HOME RULE—DISESTABLISHMENT.

A Primrose League demonstration was held at the Selby Baths on Thursday night, and speeches were made by Mr G. R. Lane Fox, M.P., Dr. Todd (who presided), and Mr Marsh. An excellent entertainment was provided by Messrs E. Vickers (bass), H. Drury (humorist), the Comedy Four, and Masters John, Barre, and Algy Rockett. Mrs Rockett was the pianist. Mr Richard Ledger, who is both secretary of the Selby Habitation and Conservative agent for the Barkston Ash Division, organized the meeting.

Amongst those supporting the Chairman and Mr Lane Fox were the Hon. Mrs Lane Fox, Mrs Hawdon (Dame President), Mrs Todd, Mrs O'Gram (late secretary), Mrs T. S. Ullathorne, Mr and Mrs Walter Gray, Miss O'Gram, Mrs R. Ledger, Mr T. E. Blanchard, Mr H. Connell, Mrs Dent, (treasurer), Miss Neville, Mr W. Weaver, Mr and Mrs Petty, Mrs Millar, Mr W. D. Foster, Mr Geo. Gray, Mr W. H. Gray, Mr and Mrs C. H. March, Mr and Mrs Kilburn, Mrs Hatfield, Mr and Mrs R. Petty.

Mr Ledger read an apology for non-attendance from Ethel Lady Beaumont, who as Ruling Councillor of the Selby Habitation, wrote from Carlton Towers as follows:—"I am sorry I cannot come to the meeting to-morrow. I intended doing so, but the Dowager Lady Beaumont has broken her hip bone, and I must go to London, as she is 90 years old."

A pleasing part of the programme was the presentation by Mr Fox to Mrs Annie O'Gram of the diploma of the Order of the Grand Star, which was accompanied by the familiar badge designed in silver and gold, and inscribed: "Imperium et Libertas."

The Chairman said he was sure they were all very sorry to know the cause which kept Lady Beaumont away. He should like to congratulate them upon the splendid meeting, and remind the ladies of the enormous political power they possessed. He had an open mind on the question of women's votes, but was bound to say they had the command of half the votes of the country if they only used their power properly, by giving peaceful, calm advice to the men over whom they had influence. Indeed, the nation was in their hands, and he counselled the ladies to be wise in the selection of their husbands—(laughter)—and if they should be married to Radicals they should soon set about converting them, and if their husbands were Tories they should see to it that they kept them as such. Ladies would not get their power by roaming about the country burning churches and so forth, but by calm, cool consideration; and he thought a very large number of them would get their votes in the end. For his part he would not be sorry. (Applause).

Mr Lane Fox, M.P., who had a very hearty reception, said he had been trying, during the time when Parliament had not been sitting, to see as many people and parts of the constituency as possible. It was what was called "the M.P.'s holiday," and part of the privilege of that holiday was that they should spend most of their time trying to see the people they represented. After all they were paid £5 a week for it, so he supposed they must not complain. (Laughter). It was all in a day's work. He did not want the audience to be misled by some of the things they were reading in the newspapers, and to think that there was necessarily going to be an election immediately because they saw certain dissensions among members of the Cabinet and differences of opinion between Ministers. He would tell them just what his diagnosis of affairs was. The difference the Cabinet was suffering from and quarrelling over at the present time was very common ailment with mankind—they were "broke"—"stoney-broke." "—they were at the beginning of a financial crisis in which they had a difficulty in paying their way. It often happened that when people were in that position they were driven to doing very foolish things, and not paying their insurance premiums for instance. They all knew it was absolutely necessary for the safety of the country that they should have a strong and adequate Navy, and he did not think any of them wished to see that section of the Cabinet prevail in their desire to reduce the Navy to a level at which the security of the country could no longer be maintained.

It was not in the least likely the Government would resign—not the least likely that these dissensions would not be patched up between them; but it was quite possible that their difficulties would be such—the Irish question, for instance—that they would have to appeal to the country. Therefore, his word to them was to be ready in case anything of the sort happened, and he was quite sure the Primrose League in Selby would not be loth to respond to that appeal and do all they could to assist the great cause of Unionism. (Applause). He had come there merely to have the pleasure of seeing some of his constituents and show that he was a real live thing—(laughter)—that he was still their Member and still prepared to do his best for them whenever he could. (Applause). The Government were going to force the Home Rule Bill, but he was told that matter was to be put off till the autumn. A matter which Selby was very greatly interested in was the Disestablishment Bill, for they had there had a striking demonstration against the Bill that proved that if no other place had an opinion against the Bill Selby had. He ventured to suggest that those who supported the Bill in Selby should get up a similar demonstration to show that they approved the Bill. (Hear, hear). Not a single approbation of the Bill had been given, and it was perfectly clear that nobody was favourable to taking money from religious uses to put it into the hands of County Councils. He thought it was a very remarkable fact that whereas they had had these enormous demonstrations all over the country against the Bill, and whereas there had been no sign of enthusiasm in favour of it, yet the Government would in the coming session of Parliament force the Bill through against the proved opinion of the electors of the country. It was to be one of the first items that they would take into consideration in the session. It remained to be seen what would arise from this, but in the meantime it was noticeable that the Government simply went about dealing on the platforms with the land question, which indicated that they were not proud of their disestablishment.

SWILLINGTON AND PRESTON CONSERVATIVES.

MEETING AT GARFORTH BRIDGE.

Under the auspices of the Swillington and Preston Conservative and Unionist Association a smoking concert was held in the Old George Hotel, Garforth Bridge, on Saturday night. Mr J. C. Bartle was to have presided, but he wrote regretting his inability to fulfil the engagement owing to a sudden call away. In his place Mr E. H. Lowe (Allerton Bywater) officiated, and he was supported by Mr C. Marsden (secretary), Mr R. Lodge (agent for the Barkston Ash Division), Mr T. W. Noble, Mr J. W. Poole, Mr A. Gummerson, Mr A. Fatcher, and Mr Grainger. An enjoyable evening was spent by all, a lengthy programme of musical items being gone through. Those contributing to the harmony were Messrs T. W. Noble, A. Mann, J. W. Poole, Rawdin, Rea, and Brunton.

An address was given by Mr J. W. Will, of Bradford, who is touring the division as agent of the Yorkshire Division of the Conservative and Unionist Association. He hoped, he said, to justify the party he stood for by pointing out the fallacies of the present Government. Whatever creed they had been brought up to if they examined the affairs of their country as they were to-day they would agree that all was not satisfactory. What they wanted to get at was the cause of the dissatisfaction. Whatever section of the community they cared to look at they would find a great feeling of unrest. If they looked at the industrial classes they would find that during the past few years the epidemic of strikes had been greater than at any time previous to the coming into power of the present Government. What was the cause? In the first place, it was due to the Ministers stumping the country and pointing out that certain conditions existed, and in attempting to remedy these conditions they had made things actually worse. The favourite cry of the Liberal Party was retrenchment and economy. In the face of it, it was peculiar that the party of economy had the largest Budget ever known in the history of the country. Taxation was unparalleled, and naturally being taxed so high they wanted to know what they were going to get for it. Practically speaking, there was not a man, woman, or child who was in a better position to-day than before the incoming of the Government. They had been promised rare and refreshing fruits. It was, however, more like knocking the cherry against the mouth of the British public. To sum up the Liberal Party, it was a party of destruction. The policy of the Liberals was always to destroy. He had always been taught that the policy of true statesmanship was the policy that constructs. The Liberal Party had, however, destroyed the constitution, and had done nothing to remedy it. Mr Will referred to Mr Asquith's promise about the reform of the House of Lords. That pledge, he said, had been made some three years ago and had never been fulfilled. The party were endeavouring to destroy the Church in Wales, the union between England and Ireland and even more than that. If they examined the offices of the army they found the same destructive policy, and in the navy too. They had had just recently what had been called the land campaign. They had perhaps been asked to focus their attention on that very issue. When the Budget of 1909 was introduced the Chancellor of the Exchequer had made the remarkable statement that in this country there were good and bad landlords, but the good landlords were so overwhelmingly in the majority that the bad landlords would have to follow the example of the good. However, they found that when the land inquiry was commenced, Mr Lloyd George said in the House of Commons that the land was vital and essential to the welfare of the country, and that was the reason for his investigations into this problem. He appealed to the Conservative Party for their co-operation, and, as a party, they were agreed to co-operate with him so far as he asked for assistance in friendly fashion. He went to Bedford to commence his land campaign, and in his speech set class against class. They found him making most atrocious statements, which were utterly untrue. He contended that if owners of land and the farmers were allowed to settle their own affairs they would come to a far better agreement. In conclusion, Mr Will dealt with the question of the Navy and Home Rule.

A vote of thanks to Mr Will was proposed by Mr R. Lodge, seconded by Mr Noble, and heartily carried.

TADCASTER GUARDIANS AND DISTRICT COUNCIL.

STATION ROAD, TADCASTER.

IMPROVEMENT AT SHERBURN CROSS.

The fortnightly meeting of Tadcaster Board of Guardians was held on Monday at Tadcaster—Mr E. C. Brooksbank, J.P. (Chairman), presiding. The other members present were Miss Bethell (Newton Kyme), Col. Gascoigne (Lotherton), Rev. C. D. Ash (Saxton), Messrs B. Benham and H. Green (Garforth), J. H. Ingleby, J.P., W. Sykes, and J. Nettleton (Tadcaster), J. W. Dobson (Newth-upe), W. P. Nicholson (Sturton Grange), W. Simpson (Lead), J. Woodsworth and E. H. Lowe (Great Preston), R. Wright (Barwick), T. H. Prater (Parlington), J. H. Scholefield (Oxton), J. Hewett and J. Harding (Kippax), F. Phillips, R. Benson, H. Sandy, and Pearson (Allerton Bywater), R. H. Hooper (Askham Bryan), Walter Crosland, J.P., and A. Johnson (South Milford), E. Midgley (Colton), W. Y. K. Young (Aberford), J. J. Foster and T. Hey (Sherburn), Copley (Ryther), F. Myers (Bilbrough), G. Webster (Huddleston-cum-Lumby), Carlton (Stutton), Gray (Church Fenton), J. Ladley (Kirkby Wharfe), E. Parker (Ledsham), J. Y. Wheatley (Appleton Roebuck), and White (Barkston), with Mr Dabrey (Acting Clerk), Mr Mountain (Relieving Officer), Mr Dixon and Mr Wood (sanitary inspectors).

The Chairman said they would all be sorry to know that Canon Greenwood and Mr Bromet were ill.

The treasurer was reported to have a balance of £5,455 in hand.

THE HOUSE

The master's report showed that during the fortnight there had been four admissions and one discharge from the workhouse, and the inmates numbered 92 in the workhouse and 19 in the children's home against 95 and 19 at the corresponding date of last year.

The tramps relieved during the fortnight were 21 and 31 against 19 and 33.

The minutes of the House Committee showed that a gift of books and oranges for the inmates of the infirmary had been received from Mrs G. A. Bromet, and a resolution of thanks to her was passed. An application from Mr and Mrs Bortoft for an increase of salary was ordered to be placed on the agenda for next meeting.

Mr Dishrey read the half-yearly return of pauperism to July, 1913, and there were 104 indoor poor, 52 lunatics, 321 outdoor poor, and 3 casuals—total 480, a decrease of 18 as compared with the corresponding half-year of 1912.

DISTRICT COUNCIL

The minutes of the Sanitary Committee showed that plans for two houses in Station Road, Allerton Bywater, were passed.

A wooden building has been erected by a person at Kippax, and he is to be asked to remove it at once.

It was reported that a drain at Ledsham was broken, and Mr Cox is to be written to and asked to provide a new length of pipe.

A proper system of dry Ash Closets has failed to comply with the Council's orders to provide privy and ashpit accommodation at his property, and legal proceedings are to be taken.

A letter was received from the Local Government Board sanctioning loans of £100 and £100 for different periods, but it was resolved to ask sanction to the borrowing of £400 to meet the cost of the schemes.

It was stated that Mr Foster had accepted the Council's offer of £23 for easements at Sherburn.

In regard to the old sewage works at Sherburn, a letter was read from Mr Prater, and it was resolved that the land should be put into proper condition.

The minutes were approved.

HIGHWAY COMMITTEE

The minutes of the Highways Committee showed that a tender for £8 had been accepted for putting a fence into repair at Ledstone.

The question of a footpaths improvement at Allerton Bywater was adjourned.

An application for an increase of salary was received from the surveyor in order to enable him to run a motor car, and it was adjourned.

In regard to a quarry at Aberford, certain correspondence was submitted, and it was resolved to refer to the Parish Council that it was the property of the lord of the manor, and that the Council had no locus standi.

A letter was read from Sherburn Parish Council asking that a footpath should be repaired, and it was referred to the surveyor.

A letter was read from Mr S. Smith, of Tadcaster, offering land for the widening of Oxton Lane at 2s. a yard, and it was resolved to apply to the Local Government Board for sanction to purchase land for the improvement.

An application for leave to open a road at Aberford was received from the Garforth Gas Co., and it was granted.

It was decided to write to the N.E.R. Co. and ask them to deal with the approaches to the Railway Bridge at Church Fenton.

STATION ROAD, TADCASTER

A letter was read from the County Council stating that they cannot accede to the application for a grant towards the cost of maintaining Station Road, Tadcaster.

The Chairman said that he had seen both the county surveyor and the county solicitor about the matter, and they denied that it was a main road. When the railway was made the new road in front of the workhouse was constructed, and that was not the main road.

Mr Sykes asked what about the road from Boston Road end. The traffic there still remained.

The Chairman said that was so. They showed on plans that that never was a main road. He could not understand it. The West Riding officials absolutely denied that it was a main road, but it seemed to him most ridiculous that a main road should commence near the houses, and not be continued to meet the other main road.

Mr Sykes said he should like to see the plans. He supposed that the Council had no plans.

The Chairman said the only people who would have had information would be the Vestry, whose duties were taken over by the Parish Council.

Mr Sykes said it would be worth while going into the matter.

Mr Wright said that the people who would have had information would have been the old highway surveyors.

The Chairman said that the books should now be in possession of the Parish Council.

Mr Parker asked if it was within the province of the County Council to make a grant for the maintenance of the road.

The Chairman: Certainly.

Mr Parker said he thought they ought to do that.

Mr Wright said that when a census of the traffic was taken it was found that there were fifty local vehicles to one outside vehicle.

The matter afterwards dropped, it being understood that further inquiries would be made.

SHERBURN CROSS

In regard to the proposed improvement at Sherburn Cross, it was reported that Mrs Pearson, the owner of land that was required, declined to sell.

The reason for the refusal was stated to be a fear that if land was removed it might disturb the foundations of the property.

Mr Hey said it would take very little land to carry out the improvement.

Mr Sykes said it was a very necessary improvement.

Mr Foster asked if it would not be as well to appoint a deputation to see the owner.

Mr Scott said that he had seen the owner.

Mr Sykes: What did you ask for?

Mr Scott: For a few yards off the garden.

The Chairman suggested that the Sherburn representatives and the surveyor see the owner.

Mr Hey said he would be very pleased to meet Mr Scott.

The Chairman: We don't want to damage her property in any way.

Mr Hey: Certainly not. But we want this improvement carried out.

It was agreed that the Sherburn representatives and the surveyor meet Mrs Pearson.

BRAMHAM MOOR HUNT.

MEET AT WIGHILL.

The Bramham Moor Hounds were on Friday at Wighill Village, meeting in the customary field alongside Mr J. Miles Dawson's residence. As is always the case on Fridays, the field was largely augmented from the York and Ainsty Hunt, among those present being Prince Arthur of Connaught. Despite the drawbacks of catchy scent and boisterous wind, hounds put in a busy, though by no means brilliant day's sport. A ringing fox from Shirecoates was eventually killed at Helbholes, after a slow hunt of 35 minutes.

Ainsty Cliff was blank. A narrow spinney near by held a fox, which went down the York Road and was marked to ground. Bilbrough White was blank, but also was Catterton Wood, but at the Springs hounds found, and pointed near Bilbrough. The fox, however, turned left-handed by Catterton Village, and crossing the drain, went over Healaugh Village, where he bore to the left, leaving Duce Wood just on the right, and pointed for Catterton, but swung into Shireoaks and was marked to ground after a slow hunt of 40 minutes.

Hall Parks was now drawn, and a nice hunting run of 30 minutes began by the fox going through Champaigne Gorse and Hatfield's Plantation, and after crossing the York and Wetherby Road to the Big Wood at Ingmanthorpe, it went on leaving the Willow Garth on the right, to within a field of Goose Moor, where the fox turned and pointed for Hesleden Field Rush, but having right-handed, reached Lingcroft and got to ground.

MEET AT RYTHER.

On Saturday the Bramham Moor Hounds were at Ryther.' An outlyer picked up near the Ryther Beck to the left of the Ryther coverts, and, crossing the Sherburn and Cawood Road, went over the Bishop Dyke to Bishop Woods, and being pushed through this wood strongfield was hunted across Cawood Common, and leaving the light railway station on the right, headed back towards Ryther, but turning right-handed the fox crossed the river, and pointed for Brayton Wood, after a slow hunt of an hour and 15 minutes, during which some good hound work was seen. A fox found in the Ryther coverts was almost at once lost. The day ended with woodland hunting in Bishop Woods.

MEET AT NORTH DEIGHTON.

The Bramham Moor Hounds met on Monday at North Deighton, in spring-like weather. The day began with a surprising number of blank draws, which included such well-known covers as Smiler's Gorse, Deighton Spring, Dent's Plantation, Brahm Wood, Scalabar, Abraham's Whin, Tickhill, Birkham Wood, and the Plumpton Covers. Hounds then went on to Rudding Park, but did not find there. They did find, however, in the park at Sir Joseph Ratcliffe's covers, near the Crimple Viaduct, but the fox got to ground after crossing a field in the direction of the Harrogate and Knaresborough Road. Hook-gate provided the next fox, which went through Bathing Well, and turned right-handed across the Harrogate railway and was lost near the Sharbeck line while pointing for Spacey Houses.

Leconfield's Gorse was afterwards drawn, and a fox pointed at first for Kirkby Overblow, but turned left-handed through Parkin Wood, and crossing the railway, reached Follifoot. Up to this point hounds had run Tase for 25 minutes. They now hunted on slowly into Rudding Park, and got their fox out on the Spofforth side, but soon lost him. Finding again in Ingham's Gorse, hounds ran out towards Lund Head, where they turned sharply to the right, and passing Low Haw, ran straight up, leaving the Leconfield Gorse on the right, and went forward fast past Leconfield's Gorse up to the brickworks at Follifoot.

A long check here ensued, the fox being eventually hunted on over the top of Grimpit Tunnell, pointing for Fulwith Brow. Here he turned right-handed across the railway to Bathing Well, and on through Rudding Park, and out towards the brickworks. Here he turned left-handed again, and leaving Leconfield's Gorse on the left, was hunted slowly through Herbert's Larches to Walton Head, and hounds were stopped after a run of one hour and 20 minutes.

FOOTBALL JOTTINGS

WEST RIDING JUNIOR CUP.

On Saturday afternoon the next round of the West Riding Junior Cup Competition will be played, and the only representatives in the tourney now are Wetherby, who will play Clarence Iron and Steel Works (Leeds), who ousted Garforth. Where the latter failed many will probably think Wetherby will not succeed, but given a fair amount of luck they may do better than many anticipate. The match will be decided at Wetherby. One of the most interesting games will be at Fryston, where Allerton Bywater intend to make a strong bid for honours.

DRIGHTON SHIELD COMPETITION.

On Saturday afternoon in the Drighton Shield Competition Garforth White Rose defeated Aberford by the odd goal in three, Wetherby Cor. scored the only goal got in the match with Boston Spa, and Whitkirk overcame Monk Fryston by three to nil. Tadcaster had a good victory over Harewood, and South Milford beat Barwick by three goals to two.

TADCASTER V. HEWORTH.

In the third round of the Faber Cup Competition on Saturday these teams met on the Heworth ground, in windy weather. Both sides were at full strength, and a close game was expected. In league engagements the "Magpies" were successful by 3 goals to nil, and in the return Heworth won by the same margin. The "Magnets'" supporters were, however, confident of at least a draw, and the result of 5 to 1 in favour of Heworth came as a big surprise. Especially was this so, as when playing against a strong wind the visitors proved themselves the better team in all departments, and at half-time, with no score, and the wind in their favour, it was expected the "Magnets" would have no difficulty in winning. The first half had been contested strenuously, and whether the pace had told on the visitors or not there is little doubt that Heworth were all over them in the opening stages of the second half, and quickly registered 3 goals. The homesters continued to hold the upper hand, although the "Magnets'" forwards indulged in some good movements. The halves, however, did not hold the opposing forwards at all well. Eberbeck, Madeley, and Moss, for the visitors, were often dangerous, and the first-named on several occasions was the victim of questionables tactics when going strong for goal. Garbutt, at half, who always proves useful, whilst the backs, although playing a sound game in the first half, were unable to cope with the rushes of the Heworth forwards in the second moiety. Moverley made many good saves, and was in no way to blame for the heavy defeat.

LEEDS SENIOR LEAGUE.

In the Senior League on Saturday afternoon Waterloo Main (Templenewsam), who seem to be improving, defeated Benson Lane R.R. by two goals to one, and Rothwell W.R. went under to Wortley United by a goal to nil. Methley Perseverance and East Ardsley played a drawn game of two goals each. Horsforth overcame East Hunslet by six goals to two.

The Waterloo team entertained the Benson Lane team at Thorne's Farm, East Leeds. Hanley kicked off for the visitors, and the home team forced a trio of corners early in the game, but the strong cross wind made scoring very difficult. After twenty minutes' play a pass by Dale to Platts, the home centre-forward, gave the latter an opening, and rushing down the ball sent in a splendid shot which completely beat Poole. Close on time Crossley scored for Waterloo Main with a shot high up in the net, far out of Poole's reach. At half-time Waterloo Main had a two goals' lead, and afterwards Benson lane scored.

LEEDS AND DISTRICT CUP.

The third round of the Leeds and District Cup Competition will be played on February 21st, and the draw is as follows:—

Waterloo Main (Colliery v. Altofts Albion.
Referee, Mr H. Milburn.
Leeds University Y.M.I. v. Methley Perseverance. Referee, Mr R. W. Smithers.
Rothwell Parish Church v. New Wortley Gas Works or Altofts White Star. Referee, Mr E. J. Milner.
Beeston Hill Parish Church v. East Hunslet. Referee, Mr W. Lupton.

Rothwell Parish Church seem to have a good chance of securing the trophy.

ROTHWELL CHARITY CUP.

Aided by a strong wind, and thanks to the indiscreet play of one of the visitors, Rothwell Parish Church defeated Methley Parish Church by fifteen goals to nil at Rothwell on Saturday afternoon. Had the homesters only have found their shooting boots in the first half of the match the score would have been even greater. The Methley lot were a weak combination, but if they had only maintained the form which they displayed in the opening stages Rothwell would not have had the game entirely to themselves. The homesters kicked off, facing uphill and a stiff breeze. Methley took the ball down the field, but play was quickly reversed, the homesters carrying the leather back into their opponents' area. Here the ball remained for some time, and the Rothwell forwards tried to get the leather into the net, but the wind proved an awkward factor, while many of the kicks were badly placed. However, Hirst got in a good shot which beat the visitors' custodian, who also fell beneath the attempts of Hitchin and another by Hirst. Once matters looked bright for Methley when the right wing man gained possession, but the ball was carried to the field by the wind quicker than he could sprint, and rolled dead. Just before the interval a clever passing movement was seen on the left wing, but this ended fruitlessly. At half-time, Rothwell had a lead of three goals to nothing. The second half would have made a good comedy for the cinematograph. Methley were helpless, and little wonder their goaler was deprived. Goal after goal (twelve in all) was scored, and of this number a Methley full-back contributed his share. The scorers were Shiers, Hirst, Pickersgill, Stringer (5), Gregg, Lunn, and Kale.

SHADWELL AND THE CUP.

Shadwell lads defeated York Road boys in the second round of the Schools' Cup Competition on Saturday afternoon. The match was at Shadwell, and the homesters, at the outset, had the advantage of a boisterous wind, but Nugent, Hopkins, and Broadmount put up a gallant defence, and it was not until near the interval that the Industrial lads could notch a point. On resuming the Roaders asserted themselves, and Kershaw scored a soft goal. Stung by this reverse the homesters attacked with vigour, and a shot by Jackson cannoned off Nuttpriss. Especially was this so, as when playing against a strong wind the visitors proved themselves the better team in all departments, and at half-time, with no score, and the wind in their favour, it was expected the "Magnets" would have no difficulty in winning. The first half had been contested strenuously, and whether the pace had told on the visitors or not there is little doubt that Heworth were all over them in the opening stages of the second half, and quickly registered 3 goals. The homesters continued to hold the upper hand, although the "Magnets'" forwards indulged in some good movements. The halves, however, did not hold the opposing forwards at all well. Eberbeck, Madeley, and Moss, for the visitors, were often dangerous, and the first-named on several occasions was the victim of questionables tactics when going strong for goal. Garbutt, at half, who always proves useful, whilst the backs, although playing a sound game in the first half, were unable to cope with the rushes of the Heworth forwards in the second moiety. Moverley made many good saves, and was in no way to blame for the heavy defeat.

CRITICISM OF GARFORTH MANOR FARM.

A FARMER WHO LEARNED NOTHING.

The annual meeting of the Wharfedale Chamber of Agriculture was held at Otley on Friday, Mr T. Lupton (Farnley) presiding. The balance-sheet showed £15 4s. 1d. in hand. Mr F. H. Fawkes, of Farnley Hall, was elected president, with Mr I. Rhodes (Carlton) vice-chairman. Mr George Skirrow was re-elected secretary.

When it was proposed that the Chamber should make a trip to the West Riding Council farm at Garforth, Mr George Carver (Clifton), said that on the occasion of a former visit he was far from satisfied with what he saw. There was only one breed of pigs and one breed of cattle. A calf was being raised on some sort of fat food, but he would be ashamed to own such a calf.

The Chairman: Did you learn anything while you were there?

Mr Carver: I learnt nothing.

The Chairman: I am of opinion you cannot learn anything where they are losing hundreds of the ratepayers' money. We have to make our farms pay.

Mr I. Rhodes, who was also one of the former party, said he did not think the visit was quite worth the expense, and Mr T. Dinsdale (Otley) said the stock was a disgrace to the county that kept it, but there were some good crops of grass.

Mr H. Lamb (Arthington) said the first time he was at the farm there was a large number of pigs and cattle, but now they did not do well and were dropped. The grass tillage was one of the most interesting features of the farm.

Mr Carver criticised the small quantities of land which were under the experiments in grass tillage. He wanted the members to go again, however, in the interests of the whole of the agriculturists in the West Riding. They could then see if there had been any improvement since their previous visit, and, if there had not been, they could condemn the methods.

Mr A. W. Hargreaves (Bramhope) pointed out that considerable expense was necessary on the experimental farm, as against an ordinary farm, in that all the manures and products were carefully weighed, checked, and the results recorded. In relation to the feeding of his own cattle, he had recently benefitted by advice from the farm.

It was finally decided to pay another visit to Garforth, and a small committee was appointed to arrange the details.

PRINCIPAL CHARACTERS:

LAURENCE WORKMAN, the inventor of a new motor for aeroplanes.

SIR JOHN BEDFORD, a partner in the Armadale engineering firm.

L'ABBE BREMOND, a close friend of Sir John's.

LILIAN DELOMOSNE, ward of Sir Herbert Armadale.

CHARITY WRAYE, a typist in Sir John Bedford's office.

CHAPTER XXII.

When Sir John Bedford left Miss Delomosne in Eaton-square she found herself faced by a question which Life puts to some of us a good many times, to others of us seldom, but to all of us at least once—What to do next? There are some of us who answer that question easily and readily; others of us who find it difficult to answer. Miss Delomosne, at this juncture, felt herself to be one of the latter class, and, after some thought, she took refuge in a proposal to do what everybody else of that class does—that is, to seek counsel of somebody wiser and stronger than herself. And, being a woman, she naturally turned to a man for counsel, and the man she instinctively selected for the rôle of father-confessor was the man to whom she herself wanted to give advice.

Miss Delomosne had been curiously interested in Laurence Workman from the moment of their meeting on board the Princess Elisbeth. He seemed to her to represent a type of man of whom she had known little. His very faults—which only amounted to a certain outspokenness, and perhaps too much candour—commended him to her, because she had, by some strange whim of fortune, lived from childhood in a certain atmosphere of trickery and deceit. Then, again, his sublime self-confidence; the way in which he insisted upon himself; the fashion in which he laughed away obstacles—all these things appealed to her more strongly than she herself imagined. And she was now resolved to do all that lay in her power to save him from the machinations of Sir John Bedford, of whose nature and character she herself was only too well aware.

With a woman of Miss Delomosne's temperament immediate action always follows resolution. She knew Laurence's address, and determined to go to him that very evening, taking her chance of finding him there or not. Sir Herbert Armadale, when in town, invariably went to his club in the afternoon, and very often dined there—he had mentioned at lunch that day that he intended to follow this course that night, and Miss Delomosne accordingly made her own plans. At 8 o'clock, very quietly dressed, and wearing a thick veil, she left the house, and presently, finding a taxicab, was carried away to the dismal region in which Armadales, Limited, reared its roofs and chimneys. On her way down she suddenly encountered Sir John Bedford's motor-car—that worthy gentleman glanced at the occupant of the taxicab, and promised no sign of recognition. It seemed to Miss Delomosne that he looked preoccupied and careworn, and she wondered if the afternoon had brought any further developments in his machinations.

Laurence had reached his lodgings before Miss Delomosne arrived, and was in a state of considerable depression. The accident to Groot had upset all his calculations; he knew of another workman whom he could have brought over from Germany, but in that case could not place the trust and confidence, either as workman or man, which he had placed in Groot. Then, again, there was the mystery of the anonymous letter still troubling him; he had put it from him as far as he could, but, in spite of himself, he could not help thinking about it. He had never known what it was to harbour or encourage gloomy feelings; but he certainly felt just then that there was some conspiracy of fate against him. He was like a man who could not resist tempting to touch its contents, for some minutes after she had gone. Presently she came upstairs again, tapped at his door, and looked in.

"There's a lady would like to see you, sir," she said.

Laurence stared at her. "A lady to see me?" he exclaimed.

"A tallish lady—in a veil, sir."

"Then bring her up," he said. His first thoughts turned immediately to Charity Wraye—there could be no one else. Surely nothing else had gone wrong on this most unlucky day! Surely there was nothing the matter with Dickie!

Then the door opened again, and he found himself face to face with Miss Delomosne.

Laurence was quick to rise to the occasion, mindful of the fact that his landlady was still within the room. He welcomed his visitor quietly, and bade the landlady bring another cup.

"You must be very much surprised to see me, Mr. Workman," he said Miss Delomosne, as she took the chair which Laurence drew forward for her.

"Very many strange things are happening just now, Miss Delomosne," he replied. "That I am almost forgetting how to feel surprised. I am very glad to see you here, and I hope you will let me give you a cup of tea. I'm afraid," he went on, as the landlady returned with a cup and saucer—"I'm afraid I've nothing much to offer you, but perhaps—"

"Please, I only want a cup of tea," she said. She waited until Laurence had handed her the cup and the landlady had gone, and then she continued: "Mr. Workman, I came to see you because I felt that I must."

"Yes?" he said.

"You are quite right in saying that strange things are happening just now," she went on. "I am sorry to be concerned in them, but I am. It was I who wrote the anonymous letter which you showed us at the Carlton Dinner."

A word, and to Laurence's surprise Laurence did not seem to receive this announcement with any great amount of wonder. He poured out a cup of tea for himself, and sat by the table slowly sipping it, and he merely nodded his head on hearing her confession.

"Yes," he said. "I knew that someone either employed by the firm or connected with some member of the firm had written the letter."

"You did! Why?" she asked.

"Because the paper on which it is typed was some specially manufactured for the firm, and the typewriter also is of a make exclusively used by the firm and its members," he answered.

Miss Delomosne gazed at him wonderingly. "That was clever of you," she said.

"Not at all—the two facts were pointed out to me by a friend," he replied.

"Who is evidently well acquainted with the inner workings of Armadales, Limited, then," she said.

"Just so," said Laurence.

Miss Delomosne trifled with her teaspoon at last she looked up at him. "You must wonder why I sent you that anonymous letter?" she said.

"No," he replied, "I don't. Because I am sure you sent it meaning to do me a service. But—"

"Well!" she said, seeing him hesitate because of some thought which he did not seem to care to put into words.

"Why not have told me of this yourself instead of sending me that letter?" he asked.

"Ah!" she replied. "Perhaps I should have done so. Now—have you any idea as to the identity of the people who are trying to rob you, cheat you?"

Laurence shook his head. "So far—none," he answered.

"Then, whatever it may cost me, I am going to tell you," she said. "I can't rest until you know. The—"

"Stop!" he said. "You say 'whatever it costs me.' Am I to understand that there might be personal danger to yourself—personal danger, mind!—in your telling me what you evidently know?"

"It is possible that there might be," she replied.

Laurence rose and began to pace the room. "Then don't tell me, please," he said. "If—"

"No," she said, interrupting him with a peremptory motion of her hand. "That's no use. I must tell you! If you don't let me tell you, I shall tell somebody else—the police, I suppose."

Laurence watched her in silence for a full minute.

"Very well," he said.

Miss Delomosne handed him her cup. She folded her hands on her knee, and something very hard and determined came into her face.

"You must have wondered who your enemies were," she said. "Yet you say you have no idea of their identity. Well, then, first and foremost, Sir John Bedford."

Laurence made no sign. He stood leaning against the table, his hands thrust deep into the pockets of his trousers, watching his visitor intently.

"And with him Francis Armadale—"

"What!" Laurence exclaimed. "No!"

"I tell you the truth," she said. "It was he who initiated the whole plot. He knew what you were attempting, and estimated its worth."

"Go on," said Laurence.

"And M. Bremond."

Laurence laughed, almost incredulously. "Oh, I say!" he exclaimed. "Why, he is a priest!"

"No," she said. "He is a most unscrupulous Belgian speculator and financial agent—a moneylender, in fact—who passes himself off as an ecclesiastic on occasions."

Laurence stared at her as if he could scarcely believe his own ears.

"Anyone else?" he asked.

"Yes—the Frenchman, Paul Sabatier."

Laurence gave vent to his feelings in a sharp whistle. "Ah!" he said. "Now I see daylight. Sabatier! That, then, was why they stole my last lot of papers! They thought that Sabatier would be able to deduce my secret from them. Well—I say, How diabolically clever. Sabatier indeed! Why, Paul Sabatier is the most ingenious chemist and chemical engineer in Europe. Tell me—tell me," he exclaimed, "what do they intend—what are they doing?"

"They want to sell the—whatever it is—to the German Government," she replied.

"And they—are they—is Sabatier at work on my papers—has he found the secret, the formula?" he demanded.

Miss Delomosne shook her head. "I don't know," she answered.

Laurence smote the palms of his hands together. "And your part!" he said, suddenly turning on her. "What were you to do? You must have been privy to this for some time—perhaps from the beginning? Ah! I see it now. I met you on the Ostend boat—perhaps you were tracking me then. And Bremond—he, too, was there! Why don't you tell me! Tell me—all. Sabatier in possession of my papers! Why, I may be ruined. Who would believe me against Sabatier!"

He was now so agitated that Miss Delomosne rose and laid her hand pleasingly on his arm.

"Mr. Workman," she said, earnestly, "believe me, I didn't know everything—everything until this morning. I knew a little, thing by thing, but this morning I knew all. believe me again—I've come to you as soon as I could, and I hope and think I'm not too late."

Laurence stared at her as if he could scarcely believe anything that anybody ever told him again.

"Why do you think you're not too late?" he demanded.

"Because Sir John Bedford tried to induce me this morning to persuade you to let him and his friends come in with you," she answered. "That shows that so far, at any rate, Sabatier has not succeeded."

Laurence, who had dropped into a chair, he was impatiently beating the hearthrug with his right foot, stared at her again with a sharply questioning gaze.

"What made you come and tell me in the end?" he said. "Pardon me if I seem suspicious, or speak rudely or wantedly to you, but I am easily wronged, and I don't understand—I don't understand!" he broke out, bringing his fist heavily down upon his knee, "you've evidently been in their confidence for at any rate some of the time—what's made you break it in the end? I want to know."

If he had not been so excited, so carried away by his indignation, he would have seen that Miss Delomosne became very pale, and that her fingers tightened upon each other.

"Mr. Workman," she said, "I could not tell you of this until now, or, at any rate, until recently, because I was in Sir John Bedford's power."

"You! In his power!"

"Yes," she answered. "Let me tell you about it. John Bedford is a thoroughly bad man—a scoundrel. He had me in his power, and he abused his power."

Laurence gazed at her wonderingly and miserably. "I'm very sorry," he said.

"My father was Sir Herbert Armadale's dearest friend, and when he died he confided to Sir Herbert, who is also my legal guardian, and of whom I am very fond. When I was eighteen John Bedford wanted to marry me, and was continually urging himself upon me. I did not like him in any way, and steadily refused him. The truth was, Mr. Workman, I fused him. The truth was, Mr. Workman, I was in love—a young and foolish girl's love—with a man named Edward Penrose, who was, to all intents and purposes, the adopted son of Sir Herbert; had been educated by him, and was always with us in Eaton-square or at Hurstdene Manor, though he did not live with us. He was a very handsome and fascinating man, and I, as I say, was only eighteen. He exercised a terrible influence over me, and I was quite dominated by him by the time that I found out that he had been leading a double life, and was married to a woman who was then a hopeless inebriate. He persuaded me that he would feel if he knew of my secret about Edward Penrose. Lately, those letters have come into my hands, and I have destroyed them, so I fear John Bedford no longer. Now, Mr. Workman, do you understand why I did not speak before, and why I tell you that the man you have chiefly to deal with is a thorough scoundrel?"

Laurence, who had listened to this story with evident amazement, jumped to his feet, and stretched his arms, as if he meant to plunge into action.

"Yes, indeed," he said, "he is a scoundrel, and I am glad—very glad—you're out of his hands. And thank you for coming to tell me. I shall beat them yet, unless Sabatier has has already forestalled me. Sabatier! Ah! that's the difficulty. If only— Miss Delomosne, you will wait here while I run to the telegraph-office? I have an idea—a fine idea! Ring for more tea—please be at home. I will run there and back—it's not far."

Therewith, snatching up his hat, Laurence darted out of the room and the upstairs, leaving Miss Delomosne somewhat tearful and tremulous after her confession. It was very tremulous after her confession. It was very soon after this that Charity and Dickie Wraye came in and found her alone.

"The flora and fauna of the mountain included sandfrage and parsley, and red deer, weasels and foxes, the latter being timid at sight of mankind. Bird life was represented by snow buntings, fulcons, and hawks. The rainfall averages 240 inches per annum.

Some 14 or 15 years ago, there was a great craze to beat records to the summit and back to the base—a distance of 15 miles, the ordinary walking time being about 4 hours. The first record established was 2hrs. 41min., followed by others of 2hrs. 27min., 2hrs. 20min., 2hrs. 18mins., and finally by Ewan McKenzie in 2hrs. 10mins. The ascent was also covered by a girl in 1hr. 58mins. The top of the mountain is a flat surface covering 10 acres, one edge being a sheer precipice of 2,000 feet.

Mr H Johnson efficiently acted as lanternist. Mr Fred Pearson, in moving a vote of thanks to Mr Hamilton, referred to the great interest he displayed in all parts of the district. This was seconded by Mr A. J. Wood, and supported by the President. The motion was carried with acclamation.

As a response to the vote, Mr Hamilton showed a series of unique slides recalling certain historic scenes of 14 years ago.

TEMPLENEWSAM AND ITS AFFAIRS.

ALLOTMENTS—RECREATION GROUND —BEE-KEEPING

A meeting of Templenewsam Parish Council was held at the Council School, Halton, on Monday evening—Mr Joseph Oxwid presiding. The other members present were Messrs Baker, Catton, Firth, Crosthwaite, Goodall and Speight, with the Clerk (Mr V. Greaves).

An application for an extra lamp to be placed in Barker's Yard was received from a ratepayer, who had been requested by eight other ratepayers to make the application. It was, however, explained that this was the work of the District Council, so the letter was to be handed over to that body.

The question of providing water to the allotments was again discussed, the cost being, of course, the principal obstacle in the way. It was proposed by Mr Catton and seconded by Mr Fitton that the cost of carrying the water be ascertained and brought before the next meeting of the Council. The resolution was carried.

A letter from the Leeds Town Clerk (Sir Robt. E. Fox) on the Roundhay, Harehills, and Crossgates town planning scheme was read, and a plan submitted. It was found that the scheme did not affect the parish to any large extent, only fringing the boundary, and it was decided to leave the matter in the hands of the District Council.

The question of the fencing at the Recreation Ground was then brought before the meeting, and several tenders were read, but did not meet with the views of the Council, and after a long discussion the following resolution was carried:—"That 40 yards of iron fencing with terminal posts and a gate sufficiently wide to allow a perambulator to go through be purchased and fixed, with a view to continuing the same at a future date; that the remaining portion of the fence be repaired with wire netting, and that the work be placed in the hands of Mr Teale at once. Mr Greaves and Mr Goodall are to measure the ground to ascertain the length required.

It was decided to accept the offer of Mr Marsden (Templenewsam) of post and rails, and of Messrs Thomas Green and Sons for the iron fencing.

Mr Catton complained of the matter of arrears of rent by allotment holders, and said he considered that all the rents should be paid before the 1st of November each year. Mr Firth said the rents due January 1st should be paid before March 1st.

Mr Crosthwaite asked what the remedy was to secure payment. The answer was given that the rents for allotments were the same as the rates, and were due in advance, and if not paid summonses for payment could be issued, and fine the 1s 6d was then added. A resolution to that effect was then passed, and Mr Catton moved that as the Allotments' Association were having a meeting on Wednesday evening a copy of the resolution should be sent to that body and that their influence might be brought to bear in the matter. This was agreed to.

A letter was read from Mr Richardson, of Whitkirk, the secretary of the Yorkshire Bee-Keepers' Association, offering to present to the Parish Council a hive and bees for the use of the Allotments Association for the purpose of giving instruction on bee-keeping on Saturday afternoons or some other convenient time, suitable to himself and the parties wishing to learn. Mr Richardson proposed that the hive and bees offer be accepted, and that the matter be left in the hands of Mr Fitton and Mr Richardson. This was agreed to.

Mr Baker called attention to the bad state of the footpath over the pit hill in the Primrose Valley, and it was decided that Mr Marsden be written to and asked to put it in proper repair.

It was left to the lease a precept upon the overseers for the sum of £20.

The next meeting of the Council was fixed for the last week in March.

On Friday the Hon. E. L. Wood's harriers met at Thornton Grange, and among those out were Mr Wood and Lady Dorothy Wood. Good sport ensued.

PRIMROSE LEAGUE.—A social gathering in connection with the Primrose League was held in the Masonic Hall, Leeds, on Thursday night, and the speeches were received by the Hon. E. L. Wood, M.P., who is President of the Barkston Ash Divisional Council, and Mr J. S. R. Phillips. Mr Wood said that as to why no compromise was arrived at on the Irish question, they had no guarantee that that with the present state of politics, whatever settlement might be come to would not be torn up in ten years' time.

It will likely be some time before the arbitrator's award in the dispute between Tadcaster District Council and Leeds Corporation is received. Of course, it is expected Tadcaster Council will get £20,000, but we hope they will get such a substantial sum as will assist in deterring Leeds from going on with schemes of "grab."

Farmer, brewer, and poetry lover! Mr Michael Stead, of Kearby, Wetherby, is a farmer and brewer of ale. His farmyard is a picturesque sight, with its vats and barrels—a sight not common in these days when farming brewers are scarce. CROSSGATES LITERARY SOCIETY.

LECTURE ON BEN NEVIS.

On Monday evening, according to announcement, a lecture was to have been delivered by Mr F. Swann, of Leeds, on "The romance of ancient glass-making," under the auspices of the Crossgates Literary Society, but owing to his being ill, this had to be postponed, and the Society were fortunate in being able at the eleventh hour to have the gap filled by one of their vice-presidents, the Rev. J. Miller Hamilton, who gave a lecture on "A day on Ben Nevis," illustrated by some fifty lantern slides. Mr E. Hawdesworth presided, and there was a good attendance.

Starting from Fort William, a defined line showed the path up the mountain from the glen side, which is comparatively easy walking for 1,260 feet, or about one-fourth of the ascent. At this elevation a lovely loch emerges into view, a favourite spot for the national pastime of curling. A description of a sudden storm on the mountain gave one an idea of the perils of mountaineering. Why go to Switzerland, asked the lecturer, with such magnificent scenery in our own land.

One of the finest slides represented cloudland 500 feet below the summit. The observatory, 4,400 feet above sea-level, was shown as seen at various seasons, and the representations of fog crystals, some over 6 feet in length, were very fine. Ben Nevis in winter, the highest point in the British Isles, has a covering of 20 feet of snow, and has been the training ground of Antarctic explorers. A story told by Rev. A. N Cooper, the walking parson, of a tramp being sent to the observatory 7½ miles Journey from Fort William in search of employment caused considerable merriment.

A ROBIN HOOD MAN'S TRAGIC DEATH.

AN EXTRAORDINARY AFFAIR.

VERDICT OF "FELO DE SE."

Mr J. G. E. Gardner, coroner for the Northern District of Yorkshire, held an inquiry on Monday into the circumstances of an extraordinary affair at the Millbank Arms Hotel, Well, near Bedale, where John Wilfred (30), quarryman, of Robin Hood, shot himself.

The first witness called was Annie Waller, aged 21. She said the deceased, who was aged 36, was her brother. Up to a fortnight ago they had been living at Robin Hood, near Leeds. She kept house there for her brother for nine years, and before that time for her father. A fortnight ago her brother sold the furniture, and it realised about £6, which money her brother kept. They then went to Leeds and took lodgings from Mrs Green in Belgrave Street. Her brother was single, and was a quarryman by occupation, but had been out of occupation.

The Coroner: When did you leave Leeds?—Witness: On Friday last, for Ripon.

The Coroner: What was the idea in going to Ripon?

Witness: We were on our way to Tanfield. My brother said he would try and get work at his old place.

The Coroner: Where were you born?

Witness: I have forgotten the place, but my father used to live about here. My brother knew the place well.

The Coroner: What did you do at Ripon?

Witness explained that her brother went to the Unicorn Hotel at Ripon and booked a room. They had a box with them, and left it there. When with us saw the room it was too big. In answer to the coroner she explained that it was "too grand." She persuaded her brother to go to another hotel, and without telling the landlord of the Unicorn they left there and went to a temperance hotel. Witness did not know the name of it. Her brother was charged 2s. 6d. for the room and 1s. each for breakfast. They only had one room. In the morning they went to the Unicorn Hotel for the luggage, and had to pay 7s. 6d. for the room they had engaged before they could get the box. They left Ripon on Friday morning for Tanfield, and arriving at the station her brother left the box, and said some men would call for it.

The Coroner: Did he not leave the box in the name of Wilson?

Witness: No, he did not give any name.

The Coroner: But you know the station authorities do not take luggage without a name being given. How do you think they got hold of the name Wilson?

Witness: The name was on the box, and they must have got it from there.

The Coroner: Has your brother used the name Wilson before?

Witness: Yes; at Leeds. We went as Mr and Mrs Wilson. We had to go as man and wife, or else we would not have got a room.

The Coroner: But you could have used the name of Waller.

Witness stated that they could have done so. Witness proceeding, said that leaving Tanfield station they went on to Nosterfield, and had a drink of beer. Her brother had had some beer at Ripon, as he had left for Ripon after about an hour from Nosterfield they walked to Langwith, with the intention of going through Well, and on to Tanfield again for lodgings. They had had nothing to eat since breakfast.

When at Langwith, coming to a field, her brother said "Now, wait here a moment, I won't be long." With that her brother went through the gate of the field, and she heard a shot. Witness said she shouted "Jack, come; I am frightened." She went to seek her brother and found he was lying on the ground dead.

Witness said that before they left Robin Hood her brother had a "bit of cold." He had the doctor, but soon got better. He had never threatened to take his life before. The Coroner pointed out that their night at Ripon had cost them 7s. 6d. for the Unicorn Hotel, and 4s. 6d. for the Temperance Hotel. Did witness know how much money deceased had upon him. She replied that she did not, and would be much surprised to hear that he had not a penny piece upon him.

Alfred Kettlewell, labourer, Nosterfield, said that on Saturday afternoon he passed the last witness and the deceased walking on the road towards Nosterfield about 150 yards from Tanfield. The man was walking with his head down and the woman was about three yards behind him. Witness called at the public house at Nosterfield and the couple he had passed came in about half-an-hour later. The man ordered a glass of beer and a lemon. Witness asked the man if there was a trip in, and he replied: "No, we have come by train." Witness added that the man did not say it was an ordinary train. Witness then asked the man if he had come from Leeds, and he replied: "No, further than Leeds." Witness then asked from Low Moor? and the man replied: "No, nearer Halifax than Low Moor." Witness said that that was all the conversation. The couple went out and seemed to walk a little quicker than when they did at the time he first saw them. The couple seemed to be on friendly terms. He had seen the landlady of the public house who said that the man gave her us., and she gave him 6d. change. There was nothing in the man's behaviour to give witness any suspicions. "He seemed a nice young man," commented the witness.

Police Constable Coulan stationed at Well, said that on Saturday he received information of this affair at 5.45 p.m., when he met the first witness crying and in a distressed state. She said: "My brother has shot himself in the field." Witness accompanied the woman for about three-quarters of a mile to the field. He found the man lying on his back. The woman said that the deceased said to her: "I am going behind the hedge to shoot myself," and that she did not pay any heed to him, not thinking that he had any intention of doing it. Witness searched the deceased and found a box of cartridges, a pocket knife box, and there were five cartridges in the revolver, and three spent ones. He also found a railway guide and a key, but no money at all.

Dr A. W. Hansell, medical practitioner, of Bedale, said he was called in at the Millbank Arms, Well, to examine the body. There was a wound at the right side of the head, no singeing, and another wound four inches above the left ear. The bullet had gone straight through the skull. Only one shot had entered the head, and it was feasible for the man to have shot himself.

Annie Waller was recalled, and in answer to the coroner, said she went to the policeman and said her brother had shot himself. She had some more conversation, but she was quite sure that she did not say to the police constable that her brother had told her to wait, as he was going behind the hedge to shoot himself.

In answer to the Coroner, witness said that she did not know of any trouble her brother might be in, nor even about being unemployed or in connection with a woman. When they were in lodgings at Leeds they had one room. For sleeping, one had the bed and the other the chair on afternoon nights. She had no other brother, but four sisters, and she had written to them.

The jury, after a minute's deliberation, and without retiring, returned a verdict of "Felo de se."

HUNSLET BOARD OF GUARDIANS.

The fortnightly meeting of the Hunslet Board of Guardians was held at the Guardians' Offices, Hunslet, on Wednesday afternoon, Mr J. Butterick being elected to the chair in the absence of the chairman and vice-chairman. Other members present were: Mrs Dickinson, Rev. F. Cody, Dr E. Groves, Messrs D Hargreaves, W. Verity, J. Gwinn, E. B. Pickersgill, T. Conyers, W. Schofield, W. A. Appleyard, T. Bramley, G. W. Nolee, J. W. Verity, and W. Stead, with the Clerk (Mr F. W. Mee).

It was reported that during the fortnight the number of vagrants relieved was 47 as against for last year, a decrease of 14. There had been three deaths in the Workhouse.

The minutes of the Children's Homes Committee showed that a further letter was received from the Rothwell Urban District Council promising to bring the Guardians' letter, asking for a meeting of representatives of both authorities on the question of water supply and charges before the Water Committee, and stating that the new scale of water charges, which does not come into force until the 1st April next, will provide that water charges based on rateable value or rental shall be increased by one-third of the amount at present in force in place of the special charge of water closets, which will be withdrawn.

The minutes were passed.

The minutes of an adjourned meeting of the Workhouse Visiting Committee showed that the Clerk submitted sixteen applications for the post of assistant master at the Workhouse. Two of the candidates were outside the age limit, and of the remaining candidates four were called upon to appear before a further meeting of the Committee. The minutes of a further meeting showed that upon the candidates attending the meeting, and the testimonials being considered, it was resolved that, subject to the Guardians' approval, Harold Charles Huggins, of Barnsley, be appointed as assistant master at a salary of £135 rising by 12 months' approved service to £140 per annum, together with rations, lodging, and washing, subject to the usual conditions. It was resolved that the Clerk be authorised to engage such temporary assistance as he may consider necessary until Mr Huggins can take up his duties on the 1st March next.

The Clerk reported an interview with the medical officer and submitted draft of the certificate proposed to be granted to probationer nurses after a fourth year's training in surgical nursing and midwifery, and a letter from Dr. T. Wardrop Griffith suggesting a slight alteration in the proposed terms of his certificate. It was resolved that the proposed form of certificate with the alteration suggested by Dr Wardrop Griffith be approved, and that it be left to the Clerk to arrange for its engraving so as to distinguish it from the ordinary three years' certificate.

A letter was received from the Leeds Market Gardeners' Association asking if the Guardians will contribute a portion of the exhibits of rhubarb at their show to be held on the 28th proximo. It was resolved that the gift be accepted with thanks.

The minutes were passed.

A resolution moved by Mr W. Verity that the salary of the superintendent nurse at the Workhouse be increased from £45 to £50, together with all emoluments, was carried.

The Clerk read a letter from Mr and Mrs C. P. Ward (the master and matron of the Children's Homes) asking for an increase of salary. The letter was referred to the Homes' Committee.

It was reported by the Clerk that in accordance with the returns of pauperism for July 1st, 1913, contained in the Blue book, that the four local unions Bramley had a decrease on last year of 112; Leeds a decrease of 393; Holbeck 94, while Hunslet showed an increase of 28 on the previous year. With one exception, said the Clerk, Hunslet had the largest increase in the whole of the West Riding.

BAZAAR AT GARFORTH.

FOR THE REDUCTION OF DEBT.

The members of the Primitive Methodist Church, Garforth, are now engaged in an effort to reduce the debt on their premises, and for this object a three days' bazaar was opened in the schoolroom, which was nicely decorated, on Wednesday afternoon. The tastefully adorned stalls, which were set out round the room, were heavily laden with all manner of things, and it was evident that the ladies had been busily at work for many months.

The stall-holders were as follows:—No. 1 Drapery Stall—Mrs Backhouse, Mrs Dobson, and Mrs F. Richardson. Young Men's Stall—Messrs E. Goodhall (sec.), H. Pickersgill (treas.), F. Richardson, H. M. Driver, G. Wilkinson, H. Hancock, A. Bond, H. Hudson, A. Pickersgill, and H. F. Harrison. No. 2 Drapery Stall—Mrs Driver, Miss Clarice Wilkinson, and Miss Connie Pine. Confectionery Stall—Mrs G. Wilkinson, Mrs G. Simpson, Miss Pickersgill, Miss Nellie Wilson, and Miss Annie Tillotson. Plant Stall—Mrs G. Smith and Mr Bond. Village Pump—Mr N. Brownridge and Mr C. Kilburn. Tea Room—Mrs Wellock, Mrs J. Hemsworth, Mrs T. Hemsworth, Mrs Robinson, Mrs Brownridge, and Miss E. Hancock.

At the opening ceremony Mr Job Day, of Stanks, presided (in the absence of Mr Backhouse), and he was supported by the Rev. S. S. Henshaw, the Rev. J. P. Osborne, Mr Herbert Smith, Mr J. Best, Mr J. B. Breese, etc. There was a good attendance.

The Rev. S. S. Henshaw said that they were engaged in a big effort to reduce the debt on the church premises. A year ago the debt was £787, and then Mr Best made a definite challenge that if they paid off £150 in three years he would give them £25. They had, however, modified the challenge, and had resolved to get £200 in two years. To enable them to do that they had applied for assistance to the Congregational Chapel Fund, and the committee had agreed to give them 7½ per cent. on all they raised, so that if they got £200 the contribution would be £15. They had paid their current expenses, they had discharged a note for £50, they had paid £18, and they had in hand about £26. In round figures that was £70, so that left them about £130 to raise, and he was confident they would get it by that time next year. (Applause).

The Chairman said that they were engaged in important work, and if they all worked harmoniously together they would achieve their purpose. They should try to encourage and help each other and not try to find out the faults others had—they all had faults and failings—but endeavour to find the best that was in them. He advised them, if they could afford it, to get ten per cent of their income to the work. For fifty years he had donethat, and he was no worse off now than he was fifty years ago.

Mr Herbert Smith, who had a very hearty reception, said the fact that he was on Primitive Methodist premises recalled to his mind a little cottage where Primitive Methodists used to worship, and he mentioned some of the more prominent names in the church—who were associated with it. Everyone engaged in church work knew that it was hard, telling work. It told physically, and it sometimes had a depressing effect upon the higher and spiritual nature. They must all do their share, however, and it was a sign of love to God when one was working among His children. In declaring the bazaar open, he said he hoped that their expectations would be fully realised, and that success would meet them at every turn. (Applause).

The Rev. J. P. Osborne, in proposing a vote of thanks to Mr Smith and the Chairman, said they were glad to have Mr and Mrs Best present. They had been true friends to them, and he would always have the kindliest feelings towards them.

The Rev. S. S. Henshaw, in seconding, said that Mr Smith had presented him with a cheque. Mr Smith was a member of the Wesleyan Church, and it was very kind of him to show his sympathy with their work in that substantial way.

The bazaar was continued on Thursday, and it will be opened on Saturday by the children. A report of the proceedings will be given in our next issue.

Agriculturists and their Work.

A MAGISTRATE AND AGITATORS.

A annual meeting and dinner of the Tadcaster and District Chamber of Agriculture were held in the Londesborough Hotel, Tadcaster, on Tuesday. At the meeting the chair was occupied by the President, Mr J. Ladley, Kirkby Wharfe, and there was a good attendance, amongst others present being Messrs F. Myers, C. B. Lamb, J.P., J. Midgley, J.P., J. Slater, H. Watson, L. Sampson, A. Kendall, W. Wilcock, T. B. Watson (secretary), M. Thomlinson, G. E. Wright, and S. Elvidge.

THE REPORT.

The Secretary (Mr Watson) submitted the annual report, which showed that the subscriptions for the year amounted to £144 3s. 6d., whereas a year ago the subscriptions amounted to £143 6s. The expenses for the year amounted to £148 1s. 6d., which was a good deal more than last year. The balance in hand at the close of the year was £12 12s. 2d.

The Insurance Business report stated that the total premiums were £63 10s. 5d., while a year ago the premiums were £51 12s. 7d., an increase of £11 17s. 10d. The increase was more especially due to there being more policy holders, though there had been more; but many had increased their premiums.

The report of the purchasing branch showed that a very big trade had not been done, but it had paid its way.

The result of the year's working was that £15 15s. 2d. was available for bonuses for those interested in the branch.

ELECTION OF OFFICERS.

On the motion of Mr Myers, seconded by Mr Rendall, Mr Lamb was elected president for the forthcoming year.

Mr Lamb, in accepting the position, said that he had done a little farming himself, but that was in the palmy days of agriculture in the early seventies. They had not the difficulties then that farmers had nowadays to contend with, with agitators going about the country trying to make their men dissatisfied with their lot in life. Nor was there the same trouble with labour that there was to-day. He had pleasure in accepting the position, and would do what he could in the interests of the Chamber.

On the motion of Mr Bramley, seconded by Mr Wright, Mr Thomlinson was elected vice-president.

Mr Watson was re-elected secretary, on the motion of Mr Thomlinson, seconded by Mr Lamb. In making the proposition, Mr Thomlinson said Mr Watson had worked hard in the interests of the Chamber.

Mr L. Sampson was re-elected treasurer, and Messrs Thomlinson and Watson were elected auditors.

As delegates to the Yorkshire Union of Agricultural Clubs, Mr Myers proposed that Messrs Wright, Kendall, Watson, and Sampson be re-elected, and Mr Thomlinson seconded. This was agreed to unanimously.

The Chamber then considered applications as to where to place the bulls, providing the Chamber received grants applied for. It was explained that the applicant for a bull had to have the bull tested, and if it was passed he could purchase the bull, and the Government would give him a grant of £12 towards the cost, and £5 would be given to the society for expenses. It was suggested that applications be sent in for bulls to be placed with Messrs Myers, Slater, and Holtby, and this was agreed to.

ANNUAL DINNER

The annual dinner followed the meeting. The chair was occupied by Mr Ladley, and there was also an excellent attendance of members of the Chamber.

Following the dinner, which was purveyed by Mr Short in good style, the usual loyal toast was proposed from the chair and duly pledged.

Mr J. Midgley submitted the toast of "The Houses of Parliament," and said he was not there to propose the success of any political party, but success to the old and honoured Constitution of the country, which he hoped would for be long preserved to make just laws and to watch over the destinies of one of the most powerful and one of the largest empires on which the sun had ever shone. The two constituencies in which the district of Tadcaster was situated were singularly fortunate in having such able representatives as Lord Helmsley and Mr Gervase Beckett. (Applause). He (the speaker) did not agree with them in everything, but still he had confidence in them. It seemed to him that at the present time a member of Parliament was very little more than an automatic machine. He was wound up and had to strike every hour. Until this was altered he was afraid they should not get very much from legislation. Every important national committee was ruined, in his opinion, in the House of Commons by strong party politics. (Hear, hear.) They could not find a man who would dare to vote against his party whether he agreed or not. He was certain that even the next election someone else would sit in his chair. So far as agriculture was concerned, the other political party had they received very much assistance for, say, the last fifty years. For 25 years up to about 1878 or 1879 the farmers did not need any looking after, because agriculture was in a very prosperous condition. But somewhere about 1879 things began to fall off and there was a marked depression in agriculture. The reason for the neglect from which the industry had suffered was, he thought, the rapid rise in manufactures and in minerals, but nowadays people were beginning to realise that agriculture was a very valuable national asset. In his opinion it was the most important asset of the country. (Hear, hear). There was no trade in which so much capital was laid down and earning practically nothing; nor was there a trade giving employment to more men. That being so it was important that they should have direct representation in Parliament, and until farmers saw their way to have that agriculture would still suffer.

MR THOMLINSON'S CRITICISM

Mr Thomlinson, who responded, said he felt greatly honoured in having so reply on behalf of Lord Helmsley and Mr Lane Fox. He agreed with Mr Midgley that they should have every confidence in those gentlemen; he believed they had the interests of agriculture at heart. (Applause). But even although they had gentlemen like these who were willing to do all they could, if the farmer was to be successful he would have to depend very much upon himself. He did not think legislation was going to carry them through depressed times and bad markets. He believed it was true that people, and the Houses of Parliament included, were now recognising that agriculture was one of the largest and most important industries in the country, and he felt sure that if there was the need for it, there would be a subsidy for agriculture. He was pleased to say, however, that, at the present time, in any rate, there was no need for that. To-day agriculture was more encouraging than it had been for 20 years. Many people deplored the number of young men who were going abroad, but he did not look at it in that light. He thought that was good both for the young men and for the colonies they went to develop. But he would urge the Government to keep a sharp look out on the wastrels who came into the country from the Continent to rob the Englishman of his market. Referring to the recent outbreak of foot and mouth disease in Ireland, Mr Thomlinson said if the Government adopted the same measures as they did before it would be a serious matter for the farmers of England. To put an embargo on the whole country and deprive them of store cattle was an evil worse than the disease itself. He would like farmers to speak as one man in advising the Board of Agriculture to slaughter the affected areas. He thought a radius of five miles would be sufficient, but certainly ten miles would be enough. Mr Thomlinson also criticised the methods adopted by the Board of Agriculture for dealing with swine fever, and urged the adoption of the serum treatment.

GOOD RESULTS OF COMBINATION

The toast of "The Tadcaster and District Chamber of Agriculture" was submitted by Mr C. B. Lamb, the newly-elected president of the Chamber. He referred to the good work that was done throughout the country by combination among farmers, and especially to the excellent results that had always attended the Tadcaster Chamber of Agriculture. He hoped that the Chamber's usefulness would not in any way decline, but on the contrary would increase each year. The benefits of such combinations could not be over-estimated, but it was essential that all farmers should join the Chamber, and that they should work together towards a common end. Agriculture was an industry which called for combination even more than any other industry. He wished the Tadcaster Chamber of Agriculture every success, and assured them he would always do his best to forward its interests.

The Chairman responded, and also referred to the good results that had followed the existence of the Chamber in the Tadcaster district.

The toast of "The Yorkshire Union of Agriculture" was proposed by Mr H. Watson, and in replying Mr F. Myers gave an interesting account of the work done by these bodies in the interests of agriculture generally.

The toast of "The Prize-winners" was proposed by Mr Thomlinson, and a number of members responded.

In a hockey match on Saturday afternoon Wetherby Ladies defeated Tockwith by six goals to nil.

Mr Henry Crossley, for 26 years secretary to the Wetherby Agricultural Society, has consented to fill the position for another year.

The treasurer of Leeds Infirmary acknowledges the receipt of £1 12s. from the customers of the Oddfellows' Arms, Sherburn-in-Elmet, per Mr P. Townend.

The magistrates at Tadcaster Petty Sessions on Monday were Mr E. C. Brooksbank (Chairman), Col. Gascoigne, Mr J. H. Ingleby, and Mr Walles Fairbairn.

On Monday at Tadcaster Petty Sessions Mr Thomas Short, of the Londesboro' Hotel, Tadcaster, was granted an extension of hours for the Licensed Victuallers' Ball on the 13th inst.

MARKET RIGHTS.—The Wetherby Rural District Council have decided, along with the Local Government Board, to protect the market rights of a footpath in Victoria Street, Wetherby, on which store cattle offered for sale are at present allowed to stand.

SHERBURN AGRICULTURAL CLUB.—The annual meeting of Sherburn Agricultural Club was held on Friday, and the members present were Messrs T. H. Hey (President), who was in the chair, S. Wright, T. Jones, C. A. Wither, C. Helm, W. Wainwright, H. Farrar, F. Bedford, Jeffrey, J. Bramley, T. Tomlinson, R. Lamb, and J. Wister. The Chairman said the last year had been a very successful one for the club, the balance sheet showing a turnover of nearly £3,000 against £1,700 a year ago, and that would be very much augmented if more farmers would join and buy through the club. One thing the club was beginning to find out, and that was that some firms were very reluctant to quote the club prices of their commodities, the reason for which being thought to be on account of having to face the test of the analyst. Officers for the ensuing year were elected as follows:—President, Mr T. H. Hey; vice-president, Mr C. W. Helm; Council (additions), Messrs C. A. Wither, T. Hey, F. Bramley, J. T. Leake, T. Jones; hon. vet. surgeon, Mr R. Hayes, M.R.C.V.S.; secretary, Mr C. Estbelby. It was proposed to again affiliate with the Yorkshire Agricultural Club and Chambers of Agriculture. Mr J. Wister, who is leaving the district, was accorded a hearty good wish from the club for his welfare in the farm he is going to near Nottingham this spring.

ROTHWELL & DISTRICT JOTTINGS.

Residents of Rothwell urban area will notice that the District Council have adopted the Notification of Births Act, and I suppose this is to assist the health visitor in her excellent work. Under the Act it is the duty of the father of a child, if he be residing in the house where the birth takes place, to give notice in writing to the medical officer of health of the arrival of the baby within 36 hours after the birth. If the father is not resident in the house at the time the person who is attending the mother must give the information to the medical officer. Failure to do this (as the advert shows) will render the person responsible liable to a penalty of 20s. This notice is, of course, in addition to the requirements of the law relating to the registration of births.

It seems Hunslet Union is a happy hunting-ground for poor people, and the Guardians treat them so well that their numbers are growing. This, however, is not a satisfactory sign, but there may be some explanation of the increase. All the local Unions returned decreases, and is singular that only Hunslet should show figures going in the other direction. It would be interesting to know the reason for Hunslet's exceptional position, and I daresay the people of Rothwell, Oulton-with-Woodlesford, and Middleton think they are entitled to some explanation.

It is remarkable how the large attendances at the Gilchrist lectures at Garforth have been maintained, and I must say the residents have surpassed themselves. "Lightning and lightning rods" is not a particularly inviting subject, however, interesting an expert may make it, yet the fine Council School hall was crowded by an audience who followed Prof. Cox's remarks with keen appreciation. It has been established that lightning is electricity in the atmosphere, but how is it caused—how the friction is set up—scientists have not yet discovered, although it is suggested that the sun has something to do with it. Prof. Cox, whose voice did not carry particularly well, dealt with the subject in a very interesting way, and his experiments were understood and appreciated. The next lecture will be given by Dr. W. J. Sollas, Professor of Geology and Palæontology in Oxford University, and I believe he was at one time resident in Leeds. He was, I understand, instrumental in starting the Yorkshire Geological Association.

Were it proposed to introduce prohibition in the district and completely wipe out the "houses of call" a howl of indignation would be raised, and no doubt something would be said about interference with the liberty of the subject. Nevertheless, there are parishes in the district without a pub, and this shows that the principle of prohibition is already in operation. Huddle-sum-cum-Lumby, with 222 inhabitants, and Little Fenton, with 75, enjoy the distinction of not possessing a single licensed house, and it is well-known that there is no bar in Micklefield, where the miners somehow manage to survive without it. The parish of Micklefield, has a population of 1,539, and there is only one licensed house—at Old Micklefield—and the parish has probably a larger number of persons to a single licence than any place in the whole district.

No one would have the temerity to assert that the residents of Sherburn are more thirsty than their Micklefield neighbours, but, if one were to judge by the number of licensed houses in the place, one without knowledge of the district might conclude they were a droughty lot. Whereas Micklefield has a single licence Sherburn has nine, giving one to every 193 inhabitants, but several of these licences are a survival of the coaching days, when Sherburn was a place of greater importance than it is now.

The new President of Tadcaster Chamber of Agriculture, is Mr C. H. Lamb, who is a Tadcaster magistrate, and I hope that his year of office will be marked by progress. For farmers, he believes that combination is desirable, for he stated:—

> The powers of such combination cannot be over-estimated, but it is essential that all farmers should join the Chamber and that they should work together for a common end. Agriculture is an industry which calls for combination even more than any other industry. With these sentiments every sensible person will agree. Farmers have much to gain from combination, and it is only by united action that they can made their influence felt. But Mr Lamb evidently does not desire combination for farm hands. Speaking of the old days, he said—
>
> We had not the difficulties then that farmers have nowadays to contend with, with agitators going about the country trying to make the men dissatisfied with their lot in life. Unless farmers are dissatisfied with the present state of things they will not combine, and I presume the man who arouses that dissatisfaction is doing them a good turn.

If, then, it is desirable that farmers should combine to improve and protect their interests, is it wrong for farm servants to follow their example? Mr Lamb rightly puts forward the value of combination for farmers, and all the so-called agitator does is to-place before the men the desirability of organizing themselves into a union in order to improve their working conditions. More than once farmers have quoted as an example the organization of the miners, to show what a power combination can be, but it is, like all other combinations, directed at helping the persons who join it. So men who advocate combination for one class should surely not condemn it when adopted by another.

It was a wonder there was not trouble at the last meeting of Garforth Urban Council owing to the Chairman allowing an amendment to be moved to the minutes of a special meeting of the Council. It was clearly illegal, and a certain section of the members felt they were being unfairly dealt with. The Chairman said, in regard to the special meeting, that, "I ruled it was a meeting of the Sanitary Committee," but he cannot go in face of a resolution passed by the Council, nor can he even rule that the Council "go into committee" on any question. It must be done by the vote of the Council. It may be pointed out that, under their own standing orders, the promoters of the amendment could have achieved their purpose by another plan, and it is unfortunate it was not adopted.

When both sides say that the present system does not yield the best results it is proof that some re-organization of the staff is necessary, and the Council must find some way out of the difficulty. In regard to the scavenging, etc., I am convinced, from the figures which have been placed before me, that money will be saved by the Garforth folks purchasing horses and carts and doing their own work. In April the Council will receive £209 from Tadcaster District Council, and the money will come in very handy, indeed, if it is intended to buy a couple of horses. This, of course, has no connection with the re-organization of the staff, and it is the business of the Council to consider the interests of the ratepayers and put all the departments on a satisfactory basis, instead of going to meeting after meeting and grumbling.

Evidently the Templenewsam Ratepayers' Association believe there is no case for a school at Whitkirk, otherwise they would not have again shelved the question. Five miles per day is a long distance for toddlers to walk, and if there is any hardship a conveyance might be provided, but I don't think the County Authority would bear the cost of running one four times a day. When a waggonette was chartered to carry the Schobs children to Barwick it only went with them in the mornings and fetched them home at eight.

The establishment of a minimum wage for farm hands would, Mr Rand Myers, of Bitbrough, thinks, be to the detriment of men advanced in years, but that, of course, is conjecture. Farmers could no doubt see, if they were paying a minimum wage, that they got the best labour available, and they would be looking after their own interests to do so, but much would depend on the market. In certain of the northern counties, it was recently stated, farm labour was very difficult to get, and the opening out of the great coalfield in South Yorkshire must (inevitably have an effect on the supply of labour for farmers. Not a few agriculturists in this district are at the present time paying the minimum wage demanded by the Workers' Union, and if they can afford it why are others unable to do so?

Comparatively few people in Crossgates have any conception of the enormous work that is being done by the Leeds Guardians, and the information given by Mr Arthur Lee to the Templenewsam Ratepayers' Association will come as a revelation to them. Although comparatively little interest is evinced by the ratepayers in the work—a very small percentage vote at election times—it is of the highest importance both to the poor and those who pay rates. It is evident that the Guardians are endeavouring to do their duty in a humane and business-like way, and the relief given to deserving poor will meet with general approval. Mr Lee incidentally referred to the effect of the Insurance and Old Age Pensions Acts on the operation of the Poor Law, and the ratepayers will note with satisfaction that the expenditure in connection with these two measures has been the means of reducing the cost of the poor to the rates.

A Barkston Ash worthy in the person of Mr Henry J. Clayton, of Wharfe Bank House, Ulleskelf, who was for 34 years head gardener at Grimston Park, has passed to the land of shadows. Mr Clayton, who was perhaps better known in the district than the family he served for so long, was a very intelligent and well-read man, and he contributed numerous articles on various subjects to the newspapers, including the "Courier.". He was one of the leading gardeners in Yorkshire, and his ability was recognised by the committees of the York Gala and Crossgates Show, where he acted as a judge of horticultural exhibits for many years. Mr Clayton, whom I knew well, was, I believe, largely instrumental in the formation of the North of England Horticultural Society, and he wrote numerous articles to the organization monthly. He was a fine type of man, and the district is poorer for his passing.

How the Templenewsam farmers noticed what the agriculturists of Sherburn have accomplished by means of co-operation? A correspondent, desirous of helping the good men of Halton and district, advocates their purchasing their own supplies direct, and if he can move them to action he will deserve congratulation. Farmers pride themselves on their shrewdness and their ability at making a good bargain, but they have not that capacity they credit themselves with, because whilst they are "making bargains," they are throwing away money which could be saved by the adoption of business methods. The farmers will, I suppose, say I do not know what I am writing about, but let me cite the case of Sherburn.

Two or three years ago the agriculturists in Sherburn-in-Elmet district, believing that they were not getting full value for their money, decided, like sensible men, to form a club for the purpose of co-operative buying, and the work has gone steadily on, until the turn-over is nearly £3,000. Not only do they get special terms when purchasing commodities, but they have an analyst, and this is a guarantee that the feeding stuffs, etc., which they buy are up to a recognised standard. Farmers in Templenewsam district have everything to gain and nothing to lose by following the Sherburn example, and if the local agent on the estate called a meeting to discuss the formation of a club he would be doing the farmers a good turn.

A remarkable feature of the Brewster Sessions is that the figures for all the district are about the same in proportion to population. Conversions in the Skyrack division are no more numerous than in Sherburn and Tadcaster districts when all is weighed up, but in the first-named area there are more Sunday licences than in either of the other two. That may, in a measure, be accounted for by the fact of the division's proximity to Leeds, but it is a very unsatisfactory feature, and the three-penny limit men are not altogether to blame for it. It will be noticed that the members of clubs in the Skyrack division almost equal in number the population of Garforth, and it is very desirable, as the magistrates stated, that all these institutions should be brought under police supervision. If a club is well conducted the members have nothing to fear from police inspection, and opposition to such a proposal gives people ground for suspicion that sometimes the ongoings at clubs are not all they should be. In the interests of the clubs themselves it is, therefore, desirable that supervision should be allowed.

AMUSEMENTS.

LEEDS EMPIRE PALACE

At the Empire Palace this week a smart sketch entitled "Other People's Money" is an entertaining turn. Gerald Griffin, the chief of the company, is admirable as the wealthy old father who finds to his chagrin that the young fellow whom he has advised to elope has actually gone off with his own daughter. Demokritos exhibits a "Wonder Lamp" that projects upon the screen reflections of non-transparent objects in their natural colours, among them a watch, a cigarette case, a bunch of fruit, and a couple of Japanese mice. Leonard Gautier's animated toy shop comprises some clever ponies and dogs; the Five Mongadors are skilful jugglers, particularly adept in the manipulation of Indian clubs; and other turns are Signor Torti (an Italian tenor), Austin Rudd, Maud'e Vera, and Maggie Benson. An outstanding item is given by Kenneth Casey, variously described as "The famous juvenile actor" and the "vitagraph boy." He is young and he is clever—clever beyond his years; in fact, the expression of his voice, his face, and his movements is what you might expect from a grown-up, experienced actor.

The appearance of the world-famous self-liberator, Houdini, at the Leeds Empire on Monday next will probably be the only opportunity patrons will have of seeing him for a long time to come. Known as the "Handcuff King," and the originator of the methods by which locks, handcuffs, chains, shackles, thumbscrews, and implements of restraint or torture can be defied by the human being, Houdini has made a reputation far beyond that of Jack Sheppard, the famous jail breaker. It is alleged that there is no a lock, bar, or bolt in existence in England that Houdini cannot release himself from. His marvellous ingenuity enables him to circumvent any restraint of a mechanical nature that can be applied to his power or to the locksmith's art. Next week he will present what he terms the greatest performance of his strenuous career. After being locked in a "water torture cell" of his own invention, the audience will see him liberate himself, but not before they have seen his ankles clamped and locked above in the centre of the massive cover so that his head is downwards. Houdini offers £200 to anyone who can prove that it is possible for him to obtain air in the upside-down position from which he releases himself from this water filled cell. In addition to the above, Houdini will present the "East Indian Needle Mystery," a remarkable trick which baffles everybody. "The Pink of Comic Smartness," Ernest Shand, will appear in a number of new character songs, and among other attractions are Hunt and Thomas, in a comedy skit, entitled "Father Time"; George Rae, Scottish comedian and dancer; Francis and Alfred, jugglers; the Rawsons, musical entertainers; Peter and Potts, comedians; and Alex. Keith and Co., in a new comedy skit, entitled "Chasing Chickweed."

LEEDS HIPPODROME

At the Hippodrome this week the great attraction is the clever sketch of "The Bailiff," presented by Fred Karno's Company. In the character of "Perkins in Possession," Albert Bruno has the audience shaking with laughter over his quaint comments and curious antics, in which he shows the qualities of a born comedian, and is well supported by the companion comedian who figures as "Meredith." On the burlesque side, too, is the turn of Karl and Eddie, who have some comic patter, while one of them gives a plausible caricature of extreme virtuosity at the pianoforte. By the way of contrast, there is a serious little playlet called "An Emperor's Sword," presented by Edward Marris, Napoleon figures as the dark-browed martinet passing stern sentence on a youthful officer for a momentary lapse, but revoking it in a spasm of humanity on discovering a real touch of pathos in the episode. Beth Tate, "the Californian girl," sings several original songs, wears artistic gowns, and is alternately coquettish and demure in her grimaces. Some funny tricks are performed by a number of dogs that come on in a circus act by Clown Barker and Miss Rosalka. The other turns include the dialect vocalist Aimee Roberts, Potter, the "American Scot," and Maningos, the equilibrists.

Next week at the Hippodrome the company will include the juvenile stars, "Beatie and Babs," in their clever and original scene "The Sagragette"; and Herbert Darnley, who will be supported by a company of first-class artistes in the comedy sketch "You Never Know." Others billed to appear are Gus Harris, the Leeds favourite; Harry Claff, who will be assisted by Miss Alice Tremayne, will present the operatic novelty "The White Knight"; Howard and Collinson Trio will figure in the pantomime sketch "Fun in a China Shop"; and contributions will be made by The Westwoods and Jack Walsh.

LEEDS QUEEN'S THEATRE.

At the Queen's Theatre Mrs F. G. Kimberley's play, "The Collier's Lass," is being played this week. The story of the collier's daughter, who, after enjoying a brief spell of high life, welcomes the opportunity of returning to her original and humble surroundings, is unfolded in the eleven scenes in entertaining fashion. The excitement reaches a high pitch in a scene representing the pithead at Chestfield Colliery, when the hero dramatically descends the mine, which is in a very dangerous condition. Miss Lyne Darlington is the ruling spirit on the comedy side, and she makes innumerable jokes in the Lancashire vernacular. Miss Edith Rutland, who plays in the title role, has a pleasant and convincing style. The part of Robert Copley, her father, is well played by Mr J. Court Harvard, while Mr Stanley Rodcliffe gives a good study of Tom Fielding, the collier of sterling qualities. Mr Milton C. Curtis makes a capital man about town, who has a suitable partner in Maud Fernley, a character in which Miss Ava Gori appears to advantage. The scenery and effects are good.

Next week at the Queen's Theatre William Watson's grand spectacular pantomime "Little Jack Horner" will be staged, and the company will include the Waldrons, Maimie Ellis, The Four Henriques, James Dixon, Elsie May, and Sisters Sinclair.

LEEDS CITY VARIETIES

The bill this week at the City Varieties is well above the average. In the leading position are the Six Buster Browns, who give a fine ragtime show. Mona and Doro Record make their first appearance in England here. They are great favourites on the Continent, and they should be in great demand on this side of the Channel. The Hinson Brothers are extremely amusing, and Dunn and Dixie give a pretty musical act. Gertie Martin is a well-known comedienne, and the Leonard Brothers present an expert hat-throwing turn.

Next week at the Varieties a first-rate programme will be submitted. Among those billed to appear are Hodgson and Lowther, in "Left Luggage"; Dix and Dox, musical comedy turn; Phil Kaufman, comedian, the Two Lillies, in song and dance, etc.

LEEDS THEATRE DE LUXE.

At the Theatre de Luxe there were some exciting "thrills" in "A Fight for a Fortune," a detective drama, shown during the first half of the week. An aeroplane and balloon played a prominent part in the production. The spectacle of a horse used in place of a balloon-car was quite novel. "His Wife's Picture" was a pleasing comedy, whilst "Bloomers in Short-reward Gold," and Pathe's Gazette is as interesting as usual.

On Friday and Saturday "Raised from the Ranks," a three-part production, will be shown.

ROTHWELL EMPIRE

Attractive pictures have been shown at the Rothwell Empire this week. On Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday a lengthy production, entitled "When the earth trembled," was the leading film and excited much comment. The story was a good one, and depicted scenes in the disaster at San Francisco a few years ago. "A glorious scar" was another interesting subject, while the comic pictures were of an excellent type. To-night and Saturday the special attraction will be "The bridge of terror," a sensational love affair, while other features will include "In convict's garb" (a two-reel melodrama), "The carpet trailer," and "The magic dice" (both comics). A novel turn has been provided by Mdlle. Nina and her representations of the sculptor's art, along with Hermyn's enchanted fountain.

The programme next week will be equally pleasing. During the first half the features to be screened are "The Indian Raid," a coloured picture giving a series of thrilling events in wild life on the prairies, and "In the grip of the eagle's claw." Other pictures of interest will be shown. On Thursday, Friday, and Saturday "The master crook" (a drama in three reels), and "Psyche" (a legend of ancient Greece) are the star films, while a ventriloquial turn will be given by Valvo, described as England's greatest military ventriloquist.

PROPERTY DISPUTE.—In the action of re Rurcroft Hall v. Rurcroft, which came before Mr Justice Astbury in the Chancery Division on Friday, the plaintiff, Mrs Margaret Hannah Hall, applied for the appointment of a receiver and manager of certain property and farming business at Hambleton, and elsewhere. Counsel stated that defendants were brother and sister of the plaintiff, and they had taken possession of the property and were not accounting for it. It comprised the estates of her father and mother, both deceased. His Lordship granted the appointment of a receiver and manager for three months. He refused an interim injunction.

THE LATE MR R. BURTON.—The interment of the remains of the late Mr Robert Burton, of Pannal, the proprietor of the Spacey House Auction Mart, took place at Kirkby Overblow on Sunday, when the service was conducted by the rector (Rev. R. L. Bellerby), the Rev. M. Rowntree (curate of Pannal), and the Rev. J. E. Woodham (rector of Great Houghton, Northampton). Whilst the body was reposing in the church the hymn "Christ will gather in His own" was sung, whilst the "Resurrection Morn" was rendered at the graveside. The mourners included Mrs Burton (widow), Masters Maurice, Gerald, and Kenneth Burton (sons), Mrs Gill (daughter), and Mr Gill, Mrs S. Hodgson (daughter) and Mr Hodgson, and Mr and Mrs Shephard (Bradford). Amongst others who attended were Mr M. Thomlinson (Easelyke), Messrs J. Bartle (Garforth), Parker Norfolk (Keswick), W. Rook (Beamham), N. Stead, J. G. Lang, J.P., C. H. Knowles, A. Hill, T. Myers, T. Skerrell, John Oddy, J. Greaves, W. Marrison (Spofforth), H. Bradley, W. Gaythorpe, J. T. Allen, W. Bake (Wetherby), etc.

OUR GARDENS.

A Weekly Article specially Written for

Amateur Gardeners, Allotment Holders, &c.

By ALBERT CLARKE, Birkenshaw.

THE FLOWER GARDEN

Hardy perennials, shrubs, and trees may be planted this month if the soil is in suitable condition for working upon. Take the earliest opportunity of rolling the lawn. As a rule, during February we have strong, drying winds, and after a few hours of this weather the turf is sufficiently dry for the roller to be passed over it.

RULES IN THE GARDEN

Snowdrops and crocuses are making their appearance, and it is necessary to keep a sharp look-out for mice. They do much damage to bulbs at this time of the year.

FLOWER BEDS

Examine spring-flowering plants after a frost and press back any that have been disturbed. Stir the surface soil with a small hoe or rake.

PERPETUAL FLOWERING CARNATIONS.

Beauty of form, wide range of delicately and delicately coloured bloom, lengthy foot-stalks, extraordinary lasting qualities, delicious perfume, and easy culture: Such a list of virtues would appear to be impossible in any one kind of flower. The popular perpetual flowering carnation, however, embodies all these and more. Now that their requirements are understood they may be had in bloom all the year round, and what to the average amateur is most important the cost of firing is extremely small. The whole of the space allocated to this article might easily be devoted to the description of this beautiful and interesting flower. Every year sees distinct improvements in form, size, and colouring, and it is safe to predict a long reign for it.

PROPAGATION

Propagation is effected by inserting cuttings in a compost of two parts fine sand to one part fine loam. Many growers prefer to root their cuttings in sand only. The advantage of adding loam is that the young roots obtain a firmer hold, and do not suffer when transferred to single pots. The short jointed, sturdy growths from the flowering stems make excellent cuttings. The tops of the main shoots are quite unsuitable for the purpose. Carnation stems are encased by the base of the leaves and the cuttings root much quicker if the sheath is removed. Use a sharp knife for the purpose and finish the operation by cutting through the stem just below a joint. Experiments have proved to us that cuttings treated in this manner root from ten days to a fortnight quicker than those that have not been so treated. Large pots may be converted into excellent propagaters. Place a few inches of crocks in the pot bottom, cover this with a layer of rough turf, and fill the pot to within six inches of the top with the sand and loam. Cover the pots over at all dry days should be well soaked before being used. The weight of the sand will cause the compost to settle firmly into the pot without much pressure being given. Dibble the cuttings in about 2 inches apart, and give a good watering to settle the compost around the base of the cuttings. Cover the pot with a sheet of glass and stand in a light position, where a temperature of about 60 degrees can be maintained. February, March, and April are the best months for propagating. Cuttings prepared as described above are usually ready for potting off in three weeks. As soon as they commence to grow, give a little air, and increase the amount daily until it is possible to remove the sheet of glass altogether.

FIRST POTTING

Carnations prefer a fibrous yellow loam. For the first potting this should be passed through a half-inch riddle, and should be mixed with sufficient sand to make it friable. A sprinkling of charcoal dust or wood ashes should also be added. By heating a few bricks and burying them in the heap of compost partial sterilisation is effected, and the potting should be proceeded with whilst the compost is warm. Into the cuttings carefully, preserving all the root possible, and pot into perfectly clean, small pots. An important point arises here: the plants, when potted off, should be no deeper than they were in the propagating pot. They should be given a light position, in a temperature of about 50, after being potted. Avoid draughts, and on bright days give a light spraying overhead.

Mr Thomas Law, the aged son, made the following statement to a Pressman recently:—

REPOTTING.

The small pots soon get full of roots and the plants must then be transferred to 3½ inch pots. To the compost recommended for the first potting add a little soot (5-inch pot full to the barrow load of soil), and some dried and powdered cow or sheep manure. One pot manure to 6 or 8 pots loam is sufficient. Return the plants to the same position, and a week or so later give them their first stopping. Gather the top leaves between the thumb and finger of the right hand, and give a sharp jerk upwards. This will usually bring the point of the growth away clean. It is advisable to hold the lower portion of the plant with the other hand when plucking out the lead. A break of several strong shoots quickly follows this operation. When the roots are running freely round the ball of soil repot into 5-inch pots, using a rougher and richer compost. Keep the ball of soil near the top of the pot and ram the soil firmly round it with a blunt stick. For this potting ample drainage should be provided. From mid-April no fire heat will be required and the plants may be stood in a cold frame. During the summer months the lights may be removed and need only be used during the heavy rainfalls or when fumigating is necessary. The final potting into 6, 7, or 8-inch pots is according to the size and growth of the plants should be possible from mid-June to mid-July. The compost for this potting may be much richer than before. Give ample drainage, pot firm, and once more avoid sinking the plants deeper in the pots.

STOPPING AND STAKING

The plants may be stopped whenever they show signs of running to flower until late in July. Staking is an important point and must be carefully attended to. There are numerous clever devices that have been invented with the object of obviating the necessity of constantly tying up the plants. A wire, fitted with an ingenious arrangement that causes the fastener to firmly grip the single stake used is most favoured here, and we have a tremendous number in use. They are very simple and quite satisfactory.

WATERING

Fairly watering is probably the most fertile cause of failure in carnation culture. A safe guide is "when in doubt, don't." The firm potting necessary for the production of good plumps leaves the soil close, and if too much water is given sourness will inevitably follow.

FEEDING

Fowl manure, soot, soot, horse, or sheep manure are all very acceptable to the carnation. Any or all of those may be used with advantage when the plants have been potted long enough for the roots to run around the pot sides. Place the manure in a coarse sack, and plunge it in a tub of water. A peck of manure will be sufficient for 30 gallons of water. Stir well, and allow it to soak for a day before using. There are also a number of excellent artificial manures, some specially prepared for carnations. Full directions for their use are given by the manufacturers.

PLANTING-OUT

A simple method of growing strong, sturdy plants is to bed them out in June and to lift and pot them again in August. If this system is adopted, the process of lifting must be carried out carefully. Give the plants a thorough watering a few hours beforehand, and in repotting preserve all the roots possible. We have known several amateurs raise excellent plants under this system after experiencing indifferent results with plants grown entirely in pots.

INSECT PESTS

Green fly, thrip, and red spider almost invariably attack carnations at some period of their growth. While the plants are under cover the best plan is to fumigate at intervals of about three weeks. Common salt is very destructive to red spider. A three inch pot full dissolved in a gallon of soft water is a suitable strength and may be sponged over the plants with a fine sprayer. This may be done once a month. Two or three days afterwards the plants should be thoroughly syringed with clear water. Common salt only should be used. House or table salt is practically useless for the purpose.

CARNATION RUST

The diseases of carnations are mostly caused by faulty treatment. If the plants occupy a cool, light, airy position, they will suffer very little from disease. Rust is the commonest form of disease. This may be recognised by the brown swellings which form on the leaves. Later on they burst, and exude a fine powder which in appearance closely resembles snuff. Methylated spirit (1 part to 100 parts of water) is recommended as a safe remedy. This may be used through a fine sprayer.

There are numerous varieties, but where only a limited number of plants can be grown the following list should prove useful. The varieties mentioned are good in every way, viz Alma Ward, Baroness de Brienen, Beltunnia, Cardea, Countess of Dunmore, Duchess of Devonshire, Enchantress, Mayday, Mrs H. Burnett, R. F. Felton, Rose Doree, Snowstorm, White Enchantress, Wivsor, White House, Aurora, Winsdor, Rose Pink, Enchantress, Empire Day, Lady Northcliffe and Mrs McKinnon.

CULTURE OF SHALLOTS

Any well-prepared, friable soil answers for this crop, but a deep, rich loam is, of course, to be preferred. Poor land must be assisted with liberal manuring during autumn or winter.

Tread the bed down and plant the bulbs as early in spring as possible, sufficiently deep to keep them firmly in place. Allow 6 inches apart to rows 12 inches asunder. It greatly facilitates complete ripening to gentle draw away the earth from the clusters as the season advances. Lift the crop in dry weather, when the leaves turn yellow, about July; dry in the sun for a few days; and store in any dry and well-ventilated shed or cellar, to complete the process of ripening in a dry state. Large bulbs are required, plant the cloves or divisions separately and supply liquid farmyard manure very liberally. Exhibition crops are grown on well-trenched ground in rows 15 inches apart, the plants being a foot asunder in the lines. Thorough ripening in the open or in shallow boxes under glass is important.

SELBY BOARD OF GUARDIANS

At a meeting of Selby Board of Guardians on Monday—Mr R. L. Weller (Chairman) presiding —a letter was received from G. H. Elder, porter at the workhouse, stating that he had secured a good position at Hull, and would be pleased if the Guardians would accept his resignation, as he was required to commence duty in a fortnight's time. He wrote that he was anxious to leave Poor Law work, and hoped that the Guardians would allow him to go as soon possible, as it was an excellent position that was offered him.

The Chairman said they had no alternative but to accept the resignation, and advertise for another porter.

The resignation was accepted.

The Rev. J. Dunforth moved that they do not entertain the application for the porter to go in a fortnight's time.

This, having been seconded, was carried.

The Clerk pointed out, with respect to advertising, that the present porter started at a salary of £60.

The Chairman did not wish to bias the minds of any member of the Board. If they advertised at the old rate they could not expect to keep a better lot.

It was decided to again advertise for a porter at a salary of £60 per annum.

A letter was read from the Local Government Board approving the proposals of the Guardians to increase the salaries of Mr and Mrs Gibson (master and matron) from £60 and £50 to £65 and £55 per annum respectively.

A letter was read from Mr Summerscales asking for a cheque of £225 7s. for the machinery installed in the new laundry a few months ago.

The Chairman said it seemed to him that the machinery was working all right, and they had had it quite a long time.

It was decided that the cheque be forwarded.

The Master reported that some of the inmates who had broken one of the roll windows, and been brought before the magistrates, had been sentenced to seven days' imprisonment.

PROFITABLE POULTRY CULTURE.

A SUCCESSFUL BREEDING SEASON.

[Readers are particularly requested to note that this series of articles commenced with the first issue in January. In order to obtain their full value, the earlier articles should be read in conjunction with the current one.]

SYSTEM OF FEEDING

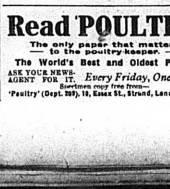
Birds are fed in order to produce certain results, therefore the desired object must first of all be considered in order to decide on the course to be adopted.

Young chicks are fed in order to promote growth, both in frame and feather; this topic will be fully discussed when we arrive at the care and attention of young stock. Other birds are fed in order to put on as table-birds; due consideration will be given to this later on. We have now selected our birds, provided them with comfortable quarters, and are desirous of obtaining eggs—strongly fertilised eggs—in order to enjoy a successful breeding season.

Keep this object in view. I am not going to write on how cheply poultry can be fed in order to exist, but to attempt to show how to feed to secure strongly fertilised eggs. The whole of these articles, however, may be compared to a chain; a single link is comparatively useless, the continuity must not be broken; and equal attention must be paid to the previous suggestions as well as to those that follow.

To quote from one of the Board of Agriculture and Fisheries leaflets: "In order to keep birds in the best possible state of health, so that they may not contract disease themselves, and also that they may produce young ones with no inherited tendencies towards disease, they must be fed on foods containing the correct amount of matter for the production of heat, flesh, fat, bone, muscle, and feather." This is the keynote to the situation.

The evening meal is quickly decided upon. There is no better grain for egg-production than sound wheat, after all, and a good deal more than a close second it is, in fact, even when you have plenty of the former, the latter can occasionally be substituted with advantage in order to stimulate the appetite. Indian corn, or as it is generally termed, maize, should only be used in the coldest weather, and then somewhat sparingly; it is apt to cause internal fat, in which condition the hens won't lay.



Regarding quantity, one handful per bird may be accepted as a rough guide, though on extra cold nights and during inclement weather it is as well to err on the side of liberality. Don't feed just before dark does not matter, I contend that the grain over as large an area as possible while there is quite an hour of daylight. This will necessitate the birds working for their supper, and activity is the keynote to health.

The breakfast ration demands more consideration. If you require the best in combination with the least trouble, and a slight—very slight —increase in cost does not matter, I cannot do other than recommend you to use Spratt's Layman. This mixture is scientifically compounded, and is the result of many years' experience. It is used successfully every village and town in the United Kingdom, in sealed bags at 1s., or direct from Spratt's Patent, Ltd., in hundredweight sacks for 15s. Some, however, will prefer their own meals, and I can confidently recommend the following formula. Take equal quantities, by weight, of course biscuit-meal, bran, Sussex ground oats, and middlings (the produce of wheat), and a half-quantity of granulated meat. Overnight the biscuit-meal and bran should be scalded, a stout sack being placed over it to retain the heat. In the morning the mixture is a dry state, the middlings and granulated meat, adding Colman's Poultry Mustard in the proportion of one teaspoonful for every six hens. Then thoroughly mix the whole until it is reduced to a crumbly consistency, adding a little warm water if too stiff, or a handful of bran if too sloppy. Of course, any household scraps should be utilised, they are an excellent egg food—but on a large plant they would only prove a drop in the ocean.

During the cold weather the breakfast should be given early, but not too hot, and as soon after daybreak as possible.

The meal should not be a heavy one, so that the birds could eat to repletion, then stagnate and mope like an over-fed man and cultivate liver troubles; it is a light feed only, but highly nutritious. Just a sufficiency is thrown on to their feed-boards, or into their troughs, that they will pick up eagerly and then go off scratching, looking for a worm or some other tit-bit.

(Any enquiries concerning poultry-keeping addressed to our expert, Ralph K. Allen, Sawbridgeworth, Herts, will be answered through these columns free, but those requiring a postal answer direct, or sending birds for post-mortem examination, must remit half-crown postal order).

BARKSTON ASH MEN AND THE LAND QUESTION.

DEMAND FOR A ROYAL COMMISSION.

LABOURERS' WAGES AND HOUSING.

The annual general meeting of the Yorkshire Branch of the Central Land Association was held at York on Thursday. The Earl of Harewood presided, and he was supported by the Hon. E. Wood, M.P., Ald. G. R. Lane Fox, M.P., Mr. G. C. H. Wheler, M.P., Colonel Goscoigne (Letherton), Ald. E. C. Brooksbank (hon. sec.), Mr. T. H. Prater (Aberford), Mr. J. Lasley (Kirkby Wharfe), Mr John Thompson, Mr G. P. Wright, etc.

The Hon. Secretary reported that the branch had a membership of 267, being a decrease of one on the year, and there was a balance in hand of £168 17s. 2d. Information as to wages and housing of farm labourers had been gathered, and the committee state:—They find that the rent of cottages is exceedingly low and can in no way be considered an economic rent, and that many cottages are unfit either to rent or at a mere nominal sum to aged people, while there are a good many let to officials of either the local authorities or as post offices, etc. There does not seem to be any uniform method of giving allowances in addition to cash wages; they vary a good deal, but are a considerable addition to the actual wages paid. The committee are willing to consider any scheme that may be brought forward for the betterment of the condition of agricultural labourers, and for giving greater security to tenant farmers for any improvements they make on their land, but cannot agree that the proposals for land courts and minimum wages will have this result.

The Earl of Harewood, who presided, President, and Ald. E. C. Brooksbank hon. sec. and treasurer and officers included Col. Goscoigne, Mr. T. H. Prater, Mr. J. Lasley, Mr. W. P. Nicholson, Mr. W. H. Welbourn, and Mr G. P. Wright.

Major Dent proposed:—"That this meeting convened by the Yorkshire branch of the Central Land Association desires to protest against hasty legislation affecting the present system of land tenure in England or the creation of land courts to control wages until the whole question has been thoroughly considered by persons who are fully qualified to express an opinion on the matter, and demands the appointment of a Royal Commission to hold such enquiry." He stated that, since the so-called land policy of the Government was based upon the result of an enquiry held by political partisans, it was most necessary that a fresh enquiry should immediately be held. It was difficult to ascertain what the real intentions of the Government in the matter were, since Ministers differed widely in their pronouncements as to the programme, some stating that it was proposed to burst up a whole effete system of land tenure; others it was merely intended to introduce a system of levelling up the bad parts to the good. Whatever the intentions of the Government might be there was no doubt that something very serious was being held over their heads. It might be said in reply to their demand for a fresh enquiry "Why hold a new enquiry when you admit that the evils exist; surely all that remains to be done is how to remove them?" Well, he for his part was not prepared to admit that the system contained any evils, and he was rather sorry to note that the Central Land Association was inclined to admit the existence of any. He thought that was the prevailing tone of the attitude of the Association. There might be evils but they were certainly not nearly so bad as the present would have them believe. Before any fresh enquiry was held he said he deplored the fact that not one atom of credit had been given to landowners and farmers for the vast sums that had been spent by them during recent years in improving the dwellings of farm labourers. With regard to wages, all who had experience of these matters knew that these varied very greatly in different localities. For instance, in Yorkshire farm servants received very good wages indeed. It was impossible to generalise on agricultural matters; there was no panacea for every alleged evil, and he was exact. In his opinion the need for reforms in these directions was no greater than it was six or seven years ago, and a delay of a few more months until a fair consideration had been made was unimportant, compared with the importance of obtaining reliable data. No measure could possibly be passed through Parliament during the coming session, or the session following it, so that there ought to be plenty of time. He had been recently stated on many public platforms that the whole system of land tenure was rotten and rotten to the core. He would like to remind these gentlemen that the agricultural industry was only just emerging from thirty years of the worst depression that any industry had suffered in the memory of man. At last they were experiencing better times, and he would point out that it was under the present system of land tenure that the storm had been weathered. Without the valuable help of any kind except the Agricultural Rating Act, which did not come into force until the worst of the depression was over. With regard to the land, he himself managed his own estates for the last 20 years, and it had been his experience that the Yorkshire farmer was perfectly capable of conducting his own affairs with the landlord and of making a remarkably hard bargain. (Laughter). If one thing more than another were needed to increase the prosperity of agriculture, it was that more capital might be laid out in the land, and this could only be made possible by decreasing rather than increasing the burden of taxation on the land, thus giving a greater sense of security both to landowners and farmers.

Mr John Thompson, in seconding the resolution, said that the land barsters would probably say that the present system should be utilised, because it had been dragged there that day by the hand of tyranny against their wishes. Instead of that being the case, they all knew that the only possible course to adopt was for landowners and tenants to throw in their lots together and fight their battles side by side. Since five-sixths of the population of England were dwellers in towns and only one-sixth rural matters, he felt that it was the duty of persons who had such knowledge to take every opportunity of enlightening those who had not. Speaking for the tenant farmers, he said they only asked for the slight cast by the Government upon their business capabilities; they were fully competent to manage their own affairs without the interference of Courts. The interests of landlords, tenants, and labourers were identical. If the present policy were persisted in, it would have the effect of driving from the land men with capital and experience and being in their place men who had neither.

Mr G. R. Lane Fox, M.P., in supporting the motion, said that, in his opinion, the main reason for demanding a full inquiry was that the only qualification for a land campaign lecturer was that he should have read the Secret Inquiry Report. When it was remembered that this report only contained a very small percentage of the information actually received, was drawn up by men who were admittedly prejudiced, it became obvious that some further inquiry was necessary. They all must insist that the whole of the replies received to the questions be published. It must, he said, be admitted that in some counties, such as Oxfordshire, wages were very low indeed, and no one present would wish to defend such a state of affairs. Lord Lucas had, however, on several occasions stated that conditions in the North of England were satisfactory, so that it was to be hoped that Yorkshiremen had not much to fear. In conclusion, he hoped that all who had it in their power would do everything they could to make the Royal Commission a success as soon as happy as possible so as to keep the best men on the land.

Mr G. C. H. Wheler, M.P., speaking of matters as he found them in the South of England, stated that no system of minimum wage, could possibly be successful there, since so much of the work there was done by the piece. He pointed out the necessity of using every means to obtain a speedy report on the true state of affairs.

After an interesting debate on the various questions raised, the Chairman put the resolution to the meeting, and it was carried unanimously.

A WONDERFUL TESTIMONIAL!

A unique and powerful illustration of Zam-Buk's curative powers has just come to light. Living under one roof at the old-world village of Little Chesterford, in Essex, are four generations of one family—Mrs Rebecca Law, now in her 100th year; her grey-headed son, Mr Thomas Law, aged 73; her grand-daughter, Mrs William Carter, aged 52; and her great grand-daughter, Miss Grace E. Carter, aged 18. To all four generations Zam-Buk has proved a great boon.

Centenarian's Sores Healed.

"Mrs Rebecca Law, my mother, has used Zam-Buk, and finds it a wonderful healer. Her hips got sore through lying in bed so much, and nothing soothes and eases the inflamed skin like Zam-Buk.

"One day my mother fell and scraped her right arm badly against a chair. My daughter at once used Zam-Buk—we always keep it handy —and this rare balm soothed and healed the sore arm with new skin."

Son's Piles and Wounds.

"I often use Zam-Buk myself. Whilst cutting trees with a chopper I took a piece clean out of my left forefinger. When I got home my daughter covered the wound with Zam-Buk. This soothed the pain and took away the inflammation. Regular dressings with Zam-Buk healed the finger splendidly.

"I used to be troubled a lot with bleeding piles. I used Zam-Buk and found it very soothing. It gave me great relief."

Grand-Daughter's Sores and Burns.

Next, the old lady's grand-daughter, Mrs William Carter, whose husband is the Parish Clerk at St. Mary's, Little Chesterford, said:—

"I have known and used Zam-Buk for a long time. I used to suffer from piles a good deal, but Zam-Buk completely cured me. Once I burnt my right wrist against the firebars. The skin blistered. Zam-Buk, however, soon relieved the pain and healed my arm.

"I suffer from sore hands, particularly after washing. Nothing does them so much good as Zam-Buk, which is really very soothing and healing."

Testimony from the fourth generation was given by Miss Grace E. Carter, great grand-daughter of Mrs Law, who said:—

"My hands, like my mother's, get chapped and sore. I never use anything for them but Zam-Buk."

Every Home Needs Zam-Buk.

This testimonial from four living generations constitutes unique proof of the supremacy of Zam-Buk. Never before has the world seen so remarkable a healer or so indispensable a household balm as this herbal Zam-Buk.

A box of Zam-Buk should be in every home, whether you have the fear of any eczema, ringworm, piles, or skin disease in your family or whether it is only the need of properly treating cuts, bruises, burns, scalds, sprains, and other trying mishaps.

For people with delicate and sensitive skins, or who are subject to eczema and similar complaints, Zam-Buk Medicinal Soap should be used in preference to ordinary toilet soaps. Sold in large shilling tablets.

SUDDEN DEATH AT TADCASTER.

THE INQUEST.

At the Primitive Methodist School-room, Tadcaster, on Friday, Mr A. Proctor, deputy coroner for the York district, held an inquest relative to the death of Chas. Lyons, motor engine driver in the employment of Messrs John Smith's Brewery Company, who died suddenly on the previous Wednesday evening.

Mrs Mary S. Lyons, wife of the deceased, said deceased was aged 57 years of age. He enjoyed pretty good health, but last Christmas he had a fit of dizziness, and fainting, cut his head, necessitating the attendance of a doctor. Deceased was off work for a fortnight as a result of the fainting fit, but he was not ailing in health, and left home at a quarter to five, in the morning. She did not see him again until about nine o'clock in the evening, when he was brought home. He was unconscious, and died about an hour later.

George Constable, who assisted deceased on the motor engine, said that on Wednesday morning they left Tadcaster at 7.45 with the motor waggon, and took a load of beer to Selby. About half-past one o'clock, when they were having dinner at Selby, deceased complained of a pain in his body, and had a little brandy to try to shift it. Deceased did not complain on the way home, and witness thought the pain had disappeared. When they arrived home the engine was put in a shed and preparations made for next morning's journey, but deceased said that if he did not feel better he did not think he would go. Witness left deceased at home, with deceased for seven years, and had never heard him complain of pain before. He had very little in the way of drink, and was usually a temperate man.

William Henry Smith, timekeeper at Messrs John Smith's, said that shortly after eight o'clock deceased went into the office, and complained of being very ill. Witness fetched some brandy, and Dr Scatchard was sent for, and he ordered the man's removal home. He was conveyed home in a cab.

After evidence by Dr Garland, a verdict of "Died naturally from heart failure following fatty degeneration of the heart" was returned.

On Saturday afternoon Whitkirk hockey players defeated Manningham by three goals to five.

THE LADIES' COLUMN

VALUABLE HINTS.

When cooking vegetables remember that all vegetables which grow above ground should be put into boiling water, and all which grow underground in cold water, with the exception of new potatoes.

To soften paint-brushes which have become dry and hard, heat as much vinegar as required to boiling point, immerse the brushes, and allow them to simmer for ten minutes, then wash in strong soapsuds.

A HINT TO MOTHERS.

If many of the housemothers who do their own work could take a fifteen-minutes rest in the midst of their work, learn not to worry about their work, and thoroughly relax when the first rush of work is over, there would be less need for anxiety about increasing wrinkles on weary faces. A break in the morning's work is often excellent rule for tired bodies and overwrought nerves, and nearly everyone can find opportunity for it if she makes up her mind to it. Try the plan, and doubtless the doorbell will go, baby will cry, or there will be some other disturbance, but take the rest in five-minute instalments if necessary; anyway, take it.

LIVE WITHIN YOUR MEANS.

The "best society" anywhere is made up of men and women who are honest before they are anything else, and who live within their means and despise display and finery. You and your family would be infinitely happier and richer if you would cease struggling to live in a position your means do not warrant. It is a false supposition to suppose that duty to your children requires any such sacrifices. On the contrary, your duty to them forbids your going deeply in debt and making your creditors wait for their just bills. Pay your debts promptly and live within your means, and you will find that there is a joy in such living as debt-burdened persons never know.

CONCENTRATION.

Concentration is one of the great secrets of success. Someone has said that if you will sit down to a task and apply yourself to it for half an hour without allowing one thought of what you are going to do next, one thought of what has been accomplished, one moment of dreaming of alien things, to creep into your mind, without permitting yourself one glance out of the window, one instant of toying with the things near at hand, you can be an average person's hour's work in that half hour.

THE UNRULY MEMBER.

Nearly every woman at some time has regretted the evening confidences which she has indiscreetly indulged in. There is no doubt that there is a witchery about the half-brushing hour that leads straight to indiscretion. It seems then as if all one's secrets rise to one's lips and cry to be told, and if one's own secrets are not sufficiently thrilling and exciting, the secrets of one's friends are inevitably poured forth. Girls should be trained to a nice discrimination about the things that they should tell. Within amusing absurdities, which have no touch of malice, are delicious when told, a bitter experience, which points a lesson to the person who sorely needs it, may be occasionally recounted with regret, but the dragging forth of ugly and unpleasant experiences, and the maudlin recounting of sentimental episodes, the rehashing and rebuilding, for the nth time, added to the telling, of misunderstandings between mutual friends, cannot be too strongly condemned.

HINTS ON SLEEP.

Nature's sweet restorer—sleep—is no a thing to be governed by any set of formal rules. The amount of sleep required by any person depends on the individual's age, constitution, and occupation. "Six hours' sleep for a man, seven for a woman, and eight for a fool," said the third George. But, as a matter of fact (says a writer) those whose brains are in active exercise, whose nervous systems are delicate and excitable, need as much sleep as they can possibly get. Every woman must discover for herself whether or not a late supper suits her, for what suits some may be decidedly harmful to others. Mental work up to the very last moment, before going to bed is not good. It may banish sleep, or at least disturb it. Before retiring, a short interval may be advantageously spent in reading a soothing and cheering book which demands no intellectual strain.

GILCHRIST LECTURES AT GARFORTH.

CONCERNING LIGHTNING.

On Friday evening at the Council School, Garforth, the third of the series of Gilchrist lectures was delivered by Professor John Cox, M.A., LL.D., whose subject was "Lightning and lightning rods." There was a large audience, and Mr J. B. Breed (Chairman of Garforth Urban Council) presided (in the unavoidable absence of County Councillor Dwelly), who has not completely recovered from a serious illness).

Professor Cox stated that the first person to prove that lightning was electricity was Benjamin Franklin, and he related the well-known story of how he made the discovery by flying a kite. Franklin thereafter laid down certain principles for protection against lightning, and so sound were they that they had not been improved upon. Throwing upon the screen a view of a ship in a storm, the lecturer's depiction of lightning called forth from the lecturer the remark that he must have been a post impressionist artist, and he proceeded to show what electricity was by means of a machine, the experiment creating the liveliest interest. He exhibited various ways of lightning and uttered a warning to people not to repeat Franklin's experiment, which was dangerous, but he advised amateur photographers to try during a storm, to photograph lightning, explaining the simple means to be adopted for this purpose. Lightning flashes were not straight and others were crooked, but not zig-zag as shown by the artist alluded to. The idea that electricity was attracted by metals was a mistaken one; in doing the path of the flash altered. Frictional electricity was discovered 2,000 years ago, but the precise origin of atmospheric electricity was doubtful, although it must arise from friction. One suggestion was that the Sun discharged what he styled "electrons," and these got to the earth's atmosphere pretty quickly. Great damage was sometimes done by lightning, and they would naturally conclude that there must have been a large quantity of electricity to do it. The quantity, however, might be small, but the pressure was enormous. How could pressure be accounted for? He gave a capital illustration of this. By means of a jar and tubes he forced water to full on the ground, and on holding an electrified stick of sealing wax near, the water fell more heavily. The explanation was that the electricity made the drops run together and made bigger drops, which becoming electrified, caused enormous pressure.

Dealing with lightning conductors, he said that they should have points at the top and they must have a good connection with the earth. Damp earth was better than dry. In cases of buildings which were protected in this way damage was done, and an International Commission of scientific experts was appointed in 1888 to investigate the question. They, however, had nothing to add to Franklin's directions. A bequest was left by Mr Silvanus Thompson to the Society of Arts in connection with this question, and they invited Sir Oliver Lodge to give three lectures In preparing these lectures he soon discovered that something was wrong somewhere. He then described oscillatory flashes of lightning, and by means of experiments he showed the difference between these and oscillatory flashes. He then dealt with various kinds of protection against oscillatory flashes, which were also illustrated by means of views thrown on the screen.

Mr Sykes Chairman, in proposing a vote of thanks to the lecturer, said that they were proud to have such lectures in Garforth, and they were privileged to have such men as the lecturer to come and speak to them on subjects they knew little about

The resolution was passed, and the lecturer expressed his appreciation of the manner in which the audience had so closely followed his remarks and experiments.

On the motion of Mr Watson a vote of thanks was passed to the Chairman.

A BILBROUGH FARMER AND LABOURERS' WAGES.

SAYS MINIMUM WOULD TEND TO DECREASED WORK.

Mr Frank Myers, farmer, of Bilbrough, who is a member of Tadcaster District Council, was one of the speakers at a meeting of Knaresborough agriculturists on Tuesday. He said that he thought it was the biggest mistake they could ever make to in any way try to divide the landlord and the tenant and the labourer. (Hear, hear). Speaking for himself he had always been on the best terms with his labourers, and as far as his landlord was concerned, well, he was a good landlord, but his position was as good as if the land were his own. He thought if all landlords were like that there would not be much to grumble at.

He had been asked to attend a meeting of the Central Land Association in York last week, when a resolution was proposed that the land question should be investigated. He would have been very pleased to support that providing it was done by practical men who knew the position and the requirements of those on the land. (Applause). If they remembered Mr Lloyd George appointed a committee to consider suitable lines for reform; and three of that committee were lawyers and one a journalist. Could they as farmers expect a true report from gentlemen whom, they imagined, knew nothing of the duties and burden that were on the land?

Is they allowed the Chancellor of the Exchequer's proposals to be carried he was afraid the only effect would be loss of capital, to some farmers a rise in rent, and to small landholders additional insecurity. If Mr Lloyd George's intention was to improve the material position for doing so was in the hands of the Government, when the inquiry committee was appointed. But it (Mr Myers) rather thought that what agriculture wanted was not just what Mr Lloyd George wanted. If this mishandling of agriculture was allowed to continue, if farmers did not wake up, he felt sure the result would prove disastrous to every class directly interested.

One of the most serious questions confronting agriculture to-day was the minimum wage for agricultural labourers. Farmers who were likely to be saddled with the whole cost, must face the question and think what it would mean to them. The tendency would undoubtedly be to decrease employment, and to do away with the employment of men who were not in the prime of life. The Government had said that they were doing something to benefit agriculture, but still the taxation remained the same. Unless they could do something in the way of helping themselves he saw certain they could make little of the matter. They must organise themselves. Just to give them one instance, if they had been organised when the Insurance Act was brought forward, so that they could have pressed forward their claims, they would have been much more favourably treated under that measure. (Applause)

On Saturday afternoon a hockey match was played between Roundhay and York, and the latter won by five goals to four.

AN EAST KESWICK MERCHANT'S ACTION

WETHERBY RURAL COUNCIL AS DEFENDANTS

On Tuesday at York County Court the Wetherby Rural District Council were the defendants in an action in which George Henry Moon, grocer and provision merchant, East Keswick, sought to recover the sum of £50 os. 6d., said to be the balance of sums payable for drainage the under an agreement and in return for an easement which the District Council acquired over his land.

Mr H. T. Waddy, of London (instructed by Messrs Peckover, Scriven, and Co., Leeds), appeared for plaintiff, and Mr Harold Newall, of Bradford (instructed by Mr E. Coates, Clerk to Wetherby R.D.C.) represented the Council.

The dispute arose over the construction put upon an agreement drawn up following upon a notice sent by plaintiff to defendants, claiming for damage done in the draining. In that notice defendant claimed £165 damage in respect to the whole of his property. The Council entered into an agreement with defendant whereby he was to undertake the work of connecting with the sewer his property at East Keswick, the Council to bear the cost as estimated by an independent contractor. The words in the agreement were that the sewer should be "connected with all and each of the houses and other premises constituting the whole" of his property. The claim was in respect of the private house of plaintiff, The Laurels, defendants having refused to pay for the connecting of the sewer with the house.

Mr Waddy submitted that the agreement referred to The Laurels, which was a part of plaintiff's property, and he was entitled to the money being refunded him.

Mr Newall said that the clause in the agreement quoted by Mr Waddy was ambiguous. The Laurels was not included in the original plan for the sewerage, which was the one used in the estimate obtained from Mr Danby. It was too yards away from the manhole, and the main point of the agreement was that plaintiff should be paid damages for easement obtained under two fields and a back lane, which were some distance away from the house. The Council had not undertaken to connect up The Laurels.

His Honour held that the real meaning of the agreement was obvious, that it referred to all and each of the houses. He entered judgment for plaintiff with costs on C. Scale.

PRESENTATION TO MR SYKES, C.C., TADCASTER.

MAN WHO STARTED AT THE BOTTOM OF THE LADDER.

At the installation of Mr John Scholes, the president, the members of the Leeds Licensed Victuallers' Protection and Benevolent Association were entertained at dinner on the Society's Tuesday night. An agreeable interlude was occupied with a presentation to Mr William Sykes, the chairman and managing director of Messrs John Smith's, Tadcaster Brewery Co. (Limited), in recognition of the honour conferred upon him as chairman at the 50th annual banquet of the Association, held in January. Mr Sykes was unable to be present, but he was supported, in addition to Mr Sykes, by Alderman W. H. Clarke, Alderman A. Willey, Mr H. P. Clinch, Mr W. Riley Smith, Mr F. D. Briggs, Messrs. Directors of Messrs Smith, Mr A. Ellamarson, and Mr H. E. Harwood (secretary of the Association).

A very handsome silver waiter, which bore a suitable inscription, was handed to Mr William Sykes by the Chairman. Mr Scholes said that Mr Sykes had started towards the bottom of the ladder, and it was due to the ability and courtesy which were displayed at the present time that he now held his high position. (Hear, hear). With the gift, which he had the utmost pleasure in presenting, there were accompanied the hearty wishes of the Committee and members of the Association (Applause).

In acknowledging the gift, Mr Sykes, after a sincere expression of thanks, said that there was a great need in the trade for loyalty. They were an oppressed trade—(hear, hear)—and had not, perhaps, the goodwill and kindly feeling of everybody. He would always be prepared, however, to challenge the statement that those in other businesses were superior in honesty and straightforwardness. He believed that they, as a trade, were as square as any one else, but, unfortunately, there was a number of people who did not think so. Therefore, it was necessary that the wholesale and retail trade, although they must of necessity be in separate camps, should be united among it. It was necessary to tackle the financial or other parts of their trade which was about to be unfairly or unreasonably attacked. (Applause).

Mr George Wood proposed "The Visitors," to which Mr W. Riley-Smith and Mr H. P. Clinch replied, and the health of the President was drunk, at the instance of Alderman A. Willey. Mr Scholes responding, after a hearty reception.

SARKSTON ASH CONSERVATISM.

ADDRESS BY MR LANE FOX, M.P.

Under the auspices of the Drax Conservative Association, an enthusiastic gathering was held in the Grammar School Room on Friday night, the chair being taken by Mr H. Pulleine. Mr G. R. Lane Fox, M.P., was present, and delivered an address, and the attendance included Mr Eustace A. How, Mr R. L. Walker, Mr W. H. Dyson, Mr P. Thompson, Mr J. Ellis, Mr R. S. Parkin, Mr A. Vause, Mr John Winters, Mr Jos. Winters, and Mr R. Lodge (Conservative agent).

The Chairman said he felt certain that the Conservatives in the Drax portion of Barkston Ash Division would, when the time arrived, do all they could to return Mr Lane Fox at the head of the poll. (Applause).

Mr Lane Fox, M.P., who was received with cheers, said the Government had given very little time for discussion, and hurried legislation had been the result. He instanced the Insurance Act as a case in point. At present the Liberal party were not talking about the thing they were going to do in the forthcoming Session. Their speeches were about the land, which they said they were going to deal with two years hence, but they avoided the questions of Ireland and the Welsh Church.

Speaking of Home Rule, Mr Lane Fox said that the people of Ulster were proving that they were in earnest. If something was not done there was bound to be civil war in Ireland. An appeal should be made to the country before a measure like the Home Rule Bill became law (Applause).

Touching upon the land programme, he said the Government averred that they wanted to improve the labourers' position, but they said this after having turned a deaf ear to all the amendments proposed to the National Insurance Act which would have given the agricultural labourers fair treatment, and placed them in a different position from those in the towns. (Hear, hear).

Mr Lloyd George had said that the friendly societies would get 9d. for 4d., but from statistics available at the present time it could be seen that the societies were far from being in a flourishing position. With regard to rural housing, when proposals were brought forward from the Unionist side, no assistance to pass them into Law was given in any way by the Government.

An enjoyable musical programme was given by Mr and Mrs Rockett, Miss Thompson, Mr G. Alcock, and Mr B. Farley.

A TADCASTER MAN'S APPOINTMENT.

P.G.M. OF YORK DISTRICT, M.U.O.

Mr James Strothard, Tadcaster, has been elected Provincial Grand Master of the York District of the Manchester Unity of Oddfellows. Mr Strothard, who is a native of Tadcaster, is 46 years of age, and has been employed as a master cooper by the Tadcaster Tower Brewery Co., Ltd., York, for the last 22 years.

He was initiated in the Order in 1886, as a member of the Arrowgil Lodge, No. 655, and he was at that time Chaplain of the Tadcaster district. He soon became an interested and active member, and in turn filled all the Lodge offices with credit to himself and to the entire satisfaction of his brethren, gaining both their esteem and confidence, and on frequent occasions he represented his Lodge as a delegate at the district meetings.

There came troublous times for his district and measures of reform had to be taken which resulted in the Lodge being affiliated to the York district. Mr Strothard was, with a few other, mainly instrumental in this step, which has since proved to have been the right direction. When they formed the York district in 1907, the Archangel Lodge had a membership of 112, on an average age of 48 years, and a capital of £500; now the membership is 210, with an average age of 34 years, and the capital has risen to £850.

In everything that tends to promote the interest of Oddfellowship, Mr Strothard is deeply and actively interested. With an eye to the future one of his ambitions has been realised in the formation of a Juvenile Association, which has already flourished beyond expectations, there being a membership of over 30, with every prospect of that number increasing. Last year Mr Strothard was president of this association.

TEMPLENEWSAM RATEPAYERS' ASSOCIATION.

WHITKIRK RESIDENTS AND A SCHOOL.

The monthly meeting of Templenewsam Ratepayers' Association, was held at the Bowen Cow Inn, Whitkirk, on Friday evening—Mr J. Armstead (President) in the chair

In regard to introducing a supply of water at the cemetery at Whitkirk, Mr Atkinson stated that the trustees of the Nonconformist part of the ground had not had a meeting, and the matter was left over.

It was recently suggested that a lamp should be erected in Primrose Lane, Halton, near Mr Walbank's house, and the District Council were written to on the subject. Mr Pindar (the Clerk), in reply, wrote stating that there was no gas main at the place, and the Council could not erect a lamp.

The suggested provision of school accommodation at Whitkirk was thereafter discussed, and figures got out to November, 1912, were submitted as follows:—Children in the district from 6 months of age, upwards, 166; children of school age, 109; attending private schools or going to Leeds, 65; attending Mansion, Colton, or Halton Schools, 44. It was stated that 8 children walked one mile, 31 one-and-a-quarter miles, and 5 one-and-a-half miles four times each day—an average of 4.93 miles per day. Twenty of these children were from 5 to 8 years of age, five being 5 years, two 6 years, seven 7 years, and six 8 years. The accommodation at Halton and Colton Infants' School was given as follows:—Halton—accommodation, 112; on the register, 128; and average attendance, 105. Colton—accommodation, 160; on the register, 114; and average attendance, 58.

The President said that, in his opinion, the distance—nearly five miles per day—was too great for the children to walk to school.

Mr Young proposed that no further steps be taken in the matter. He pointed out that the number of children on whom any hardship was imposed was small, and in regard to those between three and five years it might be possible to get a conveyance. The accommodation in the existing schools was at present sufficient, and there was no need for further provision.

Mr Martin seconded, and this was adopted.

GARFORTH GOLF CLUB DINNER.

THE CLUB'S PROSPECTS.

The first annual dinner of Garforth Golf Club was held on Friday night at the Queen's Hotel, Leeds. Mr H. S. Childe, one of the vice-presidents, took the chair, and there was a large attendance, including Mr C. E. Cass (chairman of the Committee), Mr H. F. Smithson (captain), Mr Henry Oliver (hon. secretary of the Yorkshire Union of Golf Clubs), Mr H. Sandy (hon. secretary of the club), and other officers and members.

The principal toast of the evening, "Success to the Garforth Golf Club," was proposed by the Chairman, who commented on the soundness of the balance-sheet just placed before the members. He thought that the club had been established on a firm basis, and was bound to prosper under its auspices. It had been well managed during a difficult time, and if the present policy were continued he had no fear of the future.

Mr Charles Cass, in response, said the Garforth Golf Club had become a serious proposition, and was now an accomplished fact. The club had only been in existence about 15 months, and the present members on their fortune in doing so 220, and applications were coming in even at this time of the year in numbers. At the January meeting 16 new members were elected, and on the following Saturday week will be held next week there was a further batch of 19 new applications. There were many pitfalls for the committee of any golf club in the first stage of construction perhaps not appreciated by the average member outside the committee, but he thought he could safely say that the mistakes at Garforth were few and far between. Indeed, they had been congratulated by those experienced in such matters that, generally speaking, their errors had not been of a serious nature up to now. Mr Cass proceeded to read a letter from Dr Mackenzie, the architect of the course, in the course of which the letter said:—"It would have given me very great pleasure to have congratulated your members on their fortune in doing a ground so rich in really fine existing hazards and in turf which will ultimately be as good, or even superior, to anything within 30 miles of Leeds." That was the best thing contained Mr Cass, that they had done in connection with the club had been in securing the services and advice of Dr Mackenzie, who was acknowledged the finest golf course architect of to-day, and he had from the very beginning taken an exceptional interest in the club, and was very keen indeed in making it successful. If all the members would pull together there was not a shadow of doubt that the Garforth Golf Club would in time be, not only something to be proud of, but would rank as one of the finest, not only in Leeds district, but in the whole of Yorkshire. (Hear, hear)

The toast of "The Yorkshire Union of Golf Clubs" was proposed by Mr G. G. Baker, and responded to by Mr H. Oliver. The latter stated that in the Yorkshire Union at present there were 80 affiliated clubs with a total membership of about 20,000. He urged the members of the Garforth Club to participate as much as possible in the meetings of the Yorkshire Union, and wished them every success in the county competitions.

The concluding toast was "The Chairman," proposed by Mr Smithson, and accorded musical honours. An excellent musical programme was sandwiched between the speeches.

ALLEGED ARSON AT BURN.

A YOUNG MAN'S CONFESSION.

WELL-KNOWN FARMER'S SERIOUS LOSS

John Davis, a respectable-looking, well-dressed young man, who gave his age as 20, of no fixed abode, was charged at Selby on Monday, with maliciously setting fire to a wheat stack belonging to Mr William Boothroyd, farmer, of Burnholme Farm, Burn, doing damage to the extent of £120.

William Thomas Dalton, farm foreman in the employ of Mr William Boothroyd, Chapel Haddlesey, stated that at 1.15 on the afternoon of February 6th he was working in a field belonging to the prisoner. There were two wheat stacks and one oat-stack in the field, and they were then all right. About 2 o'clock in the afternoon, from something that was said to him, witness looked in the direction of the stacks, and noticed that the middle one of the three was on fire, blazing from the bottom to the top, and about half-way round. Witness at once went for a stack cover to put over the remaining wheat stack, which was about seven yards away. With some water obtained from a ditch the adjoining stack was kept secure. Witness saw no one in the vicinity at the time he passed the stack five minutes prior to the outbreak. The cover and the water saved the second wheat stack from destruction.

William Boothroyd, farmer, of Burnholme Farm, Burn, said he was the owner of a farm at Chapel Haddlesey, on which he had a wheat stack in a field on the Selby road. He had also an oat stack and another wheat stack in the same field. The wheat stack was about seven yards, and the oat stack 37 yards from the stack that was on fire. About 2.15 on the afternoon of the day in question witness was at Selby. When informed of what had happened witness at once went to the field off the Selby road, in Chapel Haddlesey, in which the three stacks were situated. One of the wheat stacks was on fire, and he assisted in extinguishing the flames until the arrival of the Selby fire brigade. About 4.15 p.m. witness was in company with Sergeant Hirst in the field when he noticed a man's head in the next field. There was no footpath or highway within 200 yards of this particular place. The man, he had been informed to run down the hedge side of the field. Witness went in pursuit of the man, whilst the sergeant went in another direction. Accused was stopped, when it was found that his clothing was very dirty, as though he had been lying on the ground. The contents of the stack which was burned would weigh 16 or 17 tons, and by Budget, owing to the reckless extravagance of the Government, for the stupendous sum of something like 200 million pounds. He was getting on for 80 years of age, but he could tell you that he heard so much in 1909, would not benefit the Chancellor or the country very much, for in four years' working these taxes, which were to bring about the millennium, had only realised £223,000, and had only realised £1,356,000 to collect. ("Shame.") One of the worst features of the whole business had been the creation of officials in order to placate supporters of the Government. It would scarcely be credited that while the present Government had been in power they had appointed 7,000 Government officials, with salaries ranging from £100 to £1,200 a year, and between 3,000 and 4,000 of these men had been appointed without any sort of examination. The degradation of the House of Commons and of Parliament was greatly due to the fact that at the head of affairs was a Prime Minister whose sense of honour was so low. While there was a clear Liberal majority in the House of Commons there was no question of the Home Rule Bill being passed into law. While there was a clear majority he made the infamous bargain with the Nationalists in order to get their support for the Budget. Moreover, Mr Asquith's failure to fulfil the duty of honour, which brooked no delay in reforming the House of Lords subsequent to the Parliament Act, clearly showed that the word "honour" did not convey much to him; and if another general election took place was his act's acquiescence in the disgraceful Marconi slanders, by appointing one of the chief offenders to the Lord Chief Justiceship of England.

For his own part, he considered one of the Government's most disgraceful acts was the introduction of the Bill for disestablishing and disendowing the Church in Wales. (Applause). This was robbery pure and simple, indulged in for the purpose of placating Welsh Radicals, and it struck at the very root of Christianity itself. (Hear, hear). The Plural Voting Bill was another electioneering dodge, which refused to accompany the principle of "One man one vote" by that of "One vote one value," because the conjunction would not benefit the Radical party. The Home Rule Bill was a great black cloud, and nobody knew when it would burst. It seemed incredible that the Government could so pooh-pooh and belittle the subject, and that only the other day Mr Birrell, though Chief Secretary for Ireland, should have indulged in public in ill-timed pleasantries and vapid humilities was to be discussed it. Let Mr Birrell remember that the day Home Rule became law, the Ulster Provisional Government would come into active existence, and we should be face to face with civil war. A single shot or creet act by the Government, or any local disturbance in Ulster might precipitate the calamity. The exclusion of Ulster, about which so much had been said, was impossible, for Mr Redmond would not allow it. Consequently the only alternative to civil war, was to force Mr Asquith to appeal to the country. (Applause). They had not been consulted on the question, and the Government had received no mandate from them on the course which they had taken. The attempt to force Ulster out of the Union, and to put it under a Dublin Parliament, was an amazing action for which in no country in the world was there a parallel. Dealing with the question of the national deficiency, Mr Lister-Kaye said the attempt of the Little Navyites to cut down the estimates could not be too strongly deprecated. The Government had themselves declared that a sixty per cent. standard in capital ships above the Navy of the next greatest Power was absolutely necessary for the safety of these shores, and it was imperative that the minimum should be maintained. (Hear, hear). Mr Winston Churchill would, he was sure, receive the whole-hearted support of the Unionist party in the House of Commons when he presented his supplementary naval estimates. (Applause). He hoped the first act of a Unionist Government on attaining power would be to repeal the Parliament Act. (Hear, hear). An election might come quickly, and he appealed to the party workers to be prepared. He was not one of those who regarded a fight in Normanton as hopeless for the Unionist cause—(applause)—and if he were asked to stand he should do so looking forward to the victory which he felt sure would come (Applause).

Mr Lister-Kaye then left the room, and in his absence a representative of each of the districts in the division spoke of him in the warmest terms and of his strong qualifications as a candidate.

Mr T. Simpson proposed a resolution endorsing the Executive committee's recommendation to adopt Mr Lister-Kaye.

Major Wilson, in seconding, said a politician who refused to fight for nothing he was sure of winning was a poor patriot. If the Unionists of Normanton did their duty they could give their opponents a very hot time.

The resolution was carried with great enthusiasm. After Mr Lister-Kaye expressed his thanks for the honour conferred upon him, and said he should work with all his might to secure success for his party.

OPPOSITION FOR MR F. HALL, M.P.

POLITICS IN ROTHWELL DISTRICT.

UNIONISTS TO GIVE THEIR OPPONENTS A "HOT TIME."

On Friday night at the Conservative Club, Wakefield, a special meeting of the executives of the Normanton Divisional Conservative Association, was held under the chairmanship of Mr T. P. Tew, to adopt Mr Cecil Lister-Kaye as the prospective Unionist candidate for the Division. There was a good attendance, and among those present were Major G. Bolton, Mr H. Beaumont, Mr Gerald Beaumont, Mr J. V. H. Walton, Mr J. Horsfall Turner, Mr C. B. Wray, Mr F. H. Wright, Mr T. H. Woodsworth, Mr James Muirhead, Mr John Cumberbirch, and Mr Charles Garrett (secretary and agent).

Mr Percy Tew, expressing his pleasure at the prospect of the Unionist cause in the Division being championed by a man of Mr Lister-Kaye's high personal character, and close association with the Division by residence and ancient family history," said the Executive Committee had long felt that it was time there was a contest in Normanton. The Unionists of Normanton had not yet been represented by a man holding their views, but he honestly believed that if they went into the fight not with the idea that they would lose, but with the intention of making a serious impression on the other side, they would do it. (Applause).

Mr Lister-Kaye, who was received very heartily, said he regretted that a younger man had not been found, but he was grateful for the chance of showing that he was a Unionist not only in words, but in deed. (Applause). He felt so strongly the gravity of the political situation, that he viewed with concern the seeming apathy of the Unionist party, for it was impossible to disguise the fact that if the Government persisted in their utterly outrageous course of forcing Home Rule upon Ireland, we should be face to face with civil war. Discussing the past actions of the Government, Mr Lister-Kaye said one might leave to the rank and file of the Radical party the consumption of that rare and refreshing fruit which the Chancellor provided for them in the "People's" Budget and in the Insurance Act. If the consumption of their dainties proved a little bitter in the swallowing, he hoped it would be a lesson for that party in future to accept with more generous and discriminating taste which Mr Lloyd George was so eager to proffer them with such honeyed words. In a very short time we shall have another specimen of his astonishing prowess, and presently he would have in his Budget, owing to the reckless extravagance of the Government, for the stupendous sum of something like 200 million pounds. He was getting on for 80 years of age, but he could tell you that he heard so much in 1909, would not benefit the Chancellor or the country very much, for in four years' working these taxes, which were to bring about the millennium, had only realised £223,000, and had only realised £1,356,000 to collect. HOUSING ACCOMMODATION AT ADEL.

COMMITTEES APPOINTED

At a meeting of Wharfedale Rural District Council on Friday Mr A. B. Boswell (Denton) moved that two Committees, one for the northern district and one for the southern, be appointed to consider the question of housing accommodation in the Council's area.—The resolution was one simply with the object of providing the Council with full information on the housing conditions in the area for which they were responsible, and did not pledge the Council to any building at all. The Local Government Board meant business, and had recently dealt peremptorily with certain Councils. Under the Housing and Town-Planning Act, any four householders might petition the Local Government Board, and an inquiry must be held. That inquiry would cover not only any alleged scarcity of cottages, but also the sanitary conditions and general desirability of the residences. So far as Wharfedale was concerned, he did not think it would be found necessary to build cottages more than a few places outside the exception of Adel. But the Council needed to make investigations in order to be able to give good reasons as to why they had not found it necessary or desirable to build in any particular township. They would also be able to show that they had been alive to their duties, and did not deserve the sneer which was so common at the moment that Rural District Councils, as at present composed chiefly of farmers, were stagnant, moribund bodies, and had no business capacities, intelligence, or energy to deal with matters.

Mr A. Clarkson (Esholt) seconded.

Mr F. H. Fawkes (Farnley Hall) said the suggested inquiry would give the Council an understanding of the needs of their area. He felt that a very small proportion would be found in the rural area, though at Adel there was a shortage owing to the proximity of Leeds and the suburban residences. In the purely rural areas he knew of many cases in some of the villages would fill all requirements.

The Chairman (Mr Hornsby-Jackson, the retiring Chairman) said he was very much in favour of the resolution. Adel as to whether the whole of the existing cottages were sanitary or otherwise, and as to how others which required to be made more tenantable, would stand with regard to the increased demand for cottages. There were several cottages at the present time unoccupied, but it was not for him to say why they were not occupied.

Mr Boswell's motion was carried.

Nr. Leeds, 16th July, 1913.

Mr. Crosswaite,
Dear Sir,—

I beg to write you a line to express our thankfulness for the splendid cure you have made of our son of

We had almost given up in despair the idea that his face would ever be right again, but thanks to your treatment during the time he has been under your care, we could see week by week a gradual improvement, and now the wounds have completely disappeared.

I am sure we are more than satisfied and our only regret is that we did not come to you twelve months sooner.

I shall always feel proud to recommend any similar case to you.

Yours truly,
WM. D. HOLROYD.

Ison's Eye & Ear Dispensary
LIMITED.
71, GREAT GEORGE ST., LEEDS
MR. THOS. ISON,
OCULIST and AURIST.
THIS INSTITUTION was ESTABLISHED in 1871. The system of working is the provident one, each patient paying a small periodical fee whilst under treatment, and they may, therefore, justly expect to receive the prompt care and attention which in many instances in charitable institutions is too often omitted. The fees are moderate and safe character, without operation or the use of Ear Drums, Ear Cornets or other mechanical or painful appliances. Another advantage appertaining to this dispensary is its system of treatment by correspondence, by which sufferers at long distances, and in fact from all parts of the kingdom have the advantage of MR. ISON'S advice and remedies forwarded through the post. No case is undertaken unless there be a reasonable hope of cure, or benefit to the patient.
Attendance at Leeds every Tuesday, from 10 to 7 on Alternate Saturdays, Feb. 21st and Mar. 7th.
Hours 10 to 7. Other days by appointment.
TREATMENT WITHOUT OPERATION, ARTIFICIAL EYES and EYELIDS fitted from 15s. SPECTACLES and EYE PRESERVERS, 3/6 to 10/6. Gold Frames from 20s.
SPECIAL NOTICE.—There are many cases of failing eyesight which can be speedily remedied by mild local treatment, thus dispensing with the use of glasses.

PROPOSED ABOLITION OF RURAL COUNCILS.

The sweeping condemnation of local administration in rural England is calculated to arouse feelings of indignation among progressive authorities, but in judging a system it is apparently difficult to differentiate, and the efficient suffer with the inefficient. Prior to the establishment of Rural Councils sanitary administration was in the hands of what were known as sanitary authorities, consisting of members of Boards of Guardians in rural areas, and the maintenance and repair of roads were carried out by the highway surveyors, who were appointed by the vestries, but the work was not always well done, and with the creation of new administrative bodies it was expected that a progress era would dawn in rural England. The progress made, however, does not appear to have satisfied expert opinion, and the "Sanitary Record" states:—

"There are, we fear, good grounds for concluding that Rural District Councils are not a success. Composed, as the majority of them are, of a majority of farmers, conservative in ideas, ignorant of the elements of sanitary knowledge, hide-bound in customs and traditions, obsessed with the importance of protecting themselves against an increase of rates, they are, generally impossible administrators.

Can it be considered that Rural District Councils justify their existence?

Nevertheless, it is mischievous to convey the notion that failure is writ large over the work of all rural bodies. No doubt there are Councils who could not justify their existence, but in Yorkshire, at any rate, the majority of the authorities would be able to give a satisfactory account of their work. When the Leeds Corporation brought forward their last annexation scheme they did not urge as one reason in favour of it the maladministration of the adjoining areas, nor did they even suggest that there was inefficiency in any department, and, as a matter of fact, in the places incorporated no improvement in the administration has been introduced. A district must be judged by its general work, and since the Act establishing Rural Councils was passed great progress has been made in Yorkshire. In the Hunslet, Tadcaster, Wetherby, and Selby rural districts huge sums of money have been spent in providing sewerage and sewage systems, and water supplies, scavenging has been instituted in practically every large village, and a close supervision over living conditions, so far as housing and sanitary surroundings are concerned, has been exercised. Whilst ungrudgingly admitting all this, it must be confessed that the system has it weaknesses. Too often necessary reforms are retarded owing to a reluctance to meet the cost, and in the case of water supplies an unenterprising attitude sometimes results in a loss of human life, as could be demonstrated by the case of one village in the district. Occasionally, when the experts suggest a water supply for a place—they would not do so were it not necessary—the rural administrators, hostile to any increase in rating burdens, at once display antagonism, and, as an argument against the expenditure, cite the value of shallow wells—frequently polluted. Table is the polluted—as evidenced by the number of old residents existing in the place. Moreover, farmers have a decided objection to providing water schemes in villages by which they themselves will not benefit. Public spirit is often lacking, and not until pressure has been brought to bear by the Local Government Board or the County Council is action taken. Still, the general sanitary work is well done, and this has been an immense benefit to this community.

Expert opinion having written down the District Councils as not being a success, it was impossible to stop there, and their abolition is coolly suggested, as follows:—

And should they not, as was the case with School Boards, be deemed to be failures, dissolved, and their duties transferred to County Councils? We believe if such were done, the inhabitants of rural districts would be the gainers, and that the remissness in protecting them against preventable disease, polluted water supplies, bad drainage, and bad housing would ere long disappear.

The system, it must be admitted, could easily be improved, and it is possible to indicate the lines along which this could be done. First of all, too little consideration is given to important questions affecting parishes, and the representative or representatives of the township are too frequently allowed to dictate the policy to be pursued. The other Councillors assume the role of spectators, and, in sanitary matters, which are a charge on the parish, they evince little interest in what does not concern themselves. When the Councils were formed it was probably thought that the creation of a body of independent opinion would ensure fairplay and efficiency, but, instead of that, the parochial view is allowed to prevail, sometimes with disastrous financial results, because after wasting money tinkering with a job, they are eventually compelled to spend large sums in having the work done properly. If the Councils as would exhibit as much interest in the affairs of the district as they show in the work of their own parishes the system would meet with a greater measure of success. In regard to water supplies, too, there is an absence of co-operation and combination that is lamentable, and schemes which could be carried out by such means are thrown on the scrap heap owing to distrust. While acknowledging the weaknesses of the system, we cannot admit that a case has been made out for its abolition. Greater supervision might be exercised from headquarters, but to centralize the whole of the administrative machinery would simply put an end to all local self-government, and the interest of people in their own affairs would soon vanish. Moreover, the County Councils are already over-burdened with work, which is, to a very large extent, in the hands of officials, and they could only do it through District Committees, who would be subject to local influences. Were such a proposal brought forward it would be bitterly resisted, and the ratepayers, no less than the Councils themselves, would be hostile to any scheme which would deprive them of the powers and privileges they now enjoy. At the same time, the suggestion should be a warning to District Councils, because it shows "how the wind blows."

ROTHWELL & DISTRICT NEWS.

ROTHWELL.

The workpeople of Messrs. Charlesworth, Newmarket Silkstone Colliery, have sent £27 15s. 6d. to Leeds Infirmary.

LEEDS WEST RIDING PETTY SESSIONS.—At Leeds West Riding Petty Sessions on Tuesday the magistrates were Mr J. W. Morkill (in the chair), Mr R. D. Kitson, Mr E. H. Foster, Mr F. M. Lupton, and Mr E. Parkin.

PROPERTY SALES.—On Wednesday night, at Rothwell Haigh, Whitham and Sons sold two freehold dwelling-houses in Newfield Road, Rothwell Haigh, for £422 10s., and two through dwelling-houses, known as Victoria Cottages, Wakefield Road, for £390.

SERVICE OF SONG.—At the Wesleyan Chapel on Sunday afternoon a service of song entitled "The three little wanderers," was rendered by the Ouzlewell Green choir. Mr C. H. Thompson presided, and a collection was taken up on behalf of the house fund.

SUCCESSES.—The three pupils of Miss Castle (Rothwell High School), who entered for the College of Preceptors' examinations at Christmas, were successful, and will receive certificates as follows:—Phyllis Foord, Dorothy Wormald (preliminary), and Eleanor M. Elliott (lower form).

BILLIARDS.—The senior team of the Mechanics' Institute are running strong in the Oulton and District Billiard League, and at present they are at the head of affairs. In the two last matches played they defeated Kippax by 144 points, while over Rothwell Working Man's Club they had a victory of 178 points.

PICKWICKIANS.—The weekly meeting of the Pickwickian Society was presided over on Thursday night by Mr J. H. Rawling. Mr G. W. Nodding, in addition to reading the chapter of Pickwick Papers recording "A touching act of delicate feeling," gave a reading by W. W. Jacob, entitled "A case of dissection." Mr P. Remsbell contributed "In mid-Atlantic" (W. W. Jacob), and a Yorkshire reading by John Hartley was given by Mr W. Sidebottom.

P.S.A.—There was a moderate attendance at the P.S.A. service held on Sunday afternoon at the Primitive Methodist Chapel. The speaker was to have been Mr Holcroft, but he caused some disappointment by his absence. However, the difficulty was surmounted by Mr Eli Ward, who gave an interesting address. Madame Holroyd (Rothwell Haigh) was the soloist, and her singing was greatly enjoyed. Mr J. C. Harrison acted both as organist and accompanist.

ROTHWELL W.M. LODGE.—Playing in the Senior section of the Oulton and District Billiard League, the Rothwell Mechanics' Institute defeated Rothwell Working Man's Club by 178 points. Details (Mechanics' names first):—S Ellwards 100 v. J. Hargreaves 44, J. Hainsworth 100 v. G. Pickersgill 76, E. Beckwith 100 v. H. Ely 56, W. Armstead 100 v. O. Banks 81, H. Banks 100 v. R. Dickens 80, and W. Watson 100 v. L. Thurwell 85. Mr W. Armstead made a break of 34.

ROTHWELL M.I. DEFEATED.—In the first round of the charity competition at Hixon and Sons' Showrooms, Park Street, Leeds, on Tuesday night, Harehills Liberal Club defeated Rothwell Mechanics' Institute by 56 points on the aggregate totals, winning three of the five games. The scores were 447 and 391. Details (Harehills names first):—A. Hixon 100 v. O. Pawson 25, R. Horsley 49 v. S. Edwards 100, J. Hepworth 98 v. J. Hainsworth 100, A. Wainwright 100 v. W. Armistead 72, and F. Hogarth 100 v. E. Beckwith 94.

FOOTBALL.—Leeds Tradesmen replayed their second round tie with Rothwell Wednesday at Robin Hood on Wednesday. The first half was keen and even, and there was no scoring until close upon the interval, when S. Heaton netted for Rothwell. The visitors resumed a man short, Copley having retired hurt. Both teams did their share of attacking, but the Tradesmen could not score, and Ellis placed Rothwell further ahead. Umpleby (Rothwell) was sent off. Result:—Rothwell Wednesday 2 goals, Leeds Tradesmen none.

ALLERTON BYWATER

SURFACE WORKERS.—A meeting of the Council of the Yorkshire Miners' Association was held at Barnsley on Saturday—Mr H. Smith presiding. Amongst the matters mentioned as to the close Mr Smith reported with satisfaction that the question of dealing with the surface workers in West Yorkshire had been settled, and that they were only now waiting the signing of the agreement with the conciliators.

DEATH OF A SOLICITOR.—Mr Harold B. Kemp, a well-known Castleford solicitor, died after a short illness at his residence, Ferrybridge Road, on Monday morning. Mr Kemp, who was 34 years of age, was the second son of Dr Kemp, of Horbury, and was educated at Wakefield Grammar School. After serving his articles with Mr Claude Kemp, deceased began to practise in Castleford in 1904, and, being a fluent speaker, was much in evidence at the local and district police courts, where he speedily made a reputation by his powers of cross-examination. A Conservative in politics, his untimely death will be much regretted by a wide circle of friends.

CARLTON

MEMORIAL SERVICE.—A memorial service was held at the Carlton Temperance Hall on Sunday night for the late Mr Charles Thompson, who had been a member of the Society for about eighteen years. He had also been a member of the Carlton Temperance Band. The service, which was conducted by Mr T. Wilcock, drew a large gathering of Carlton folk.

BILLIARDS.—Playing in the junior section of the Oulton and District Billiard League Carlton Temperance Hall were defeated at Rothwell by Rothwell Mechanics' Institute by 107 points. Details (Rothwell names first):—J. Hall 100 v. W. Turpin 70. H. Priestley 89 v. J. Brown 100. W. Watson 100 v. Ed. Brown 77, R. Priestley 100 v. R. Beeton 59. H. Taylor 100 v. G. Priestley 93, and F. Crowther 87 v. T. Wrigglesworth 100.

CROSSGATES

Crossgates Recreation Club has a membership of 147.

A substantial profit on Crossgates Golf Club for the past year is reported. The annual meeting takes place to-night.

At the meeting of the Crossgates Literary Society on Monday evening, a lecture on "Mexico" will be delivered by Mr A. Gilfgan, B.Sc., F.G.S., and it is sure to be of great interest. For particulars see advert.

Mr E. Hawkesworth, of Crossgates, who is chairman of branch, was one of the speakers at the dinner of the United Kingdom Commercial Travellers' Association in Leeds on Saturday night, proposing "Our guests."

PUBLIC DEBATE.—On Tuesday evening in the Lecture Hall of the Baptist Church Mr E. H. Foster, J.P., C.C. (prospective Liberal) candidate for Barkston Ash Division), will move the King's Speech, and Mr J. J. Mocking, Mr Hamerton, will propose an amendment.—See advert.

B.W.T.A.—A very enjoyable time was spent in the Lecture Hall of the Crossgates Wesleyan Church on Monday evening, when the Crossgates and District Branch of the British Women's Temperance Association entertained about 45 members of the Little White Ribboners, along with their mothers. After tea games were engaged in, and Mr J. E. Broadbent, of Whitkirk, gave a short entertainment, which was very greatly appreciated.

THE LATE MR W. A. WOOD.—It is with deep regret that we record the death of Mr W. A. Wood, of Austhorpe Road, Crossgates, one of the best known tradesmen in the district. Deceased, who had suffered from an ailment for about two years, became seriously ill last week, and his death came somewhat unexpectedly on Friday about noon. Mr Wood, who has been a master plumber, and, being of a quiet and unassuming disposition, he was held in the highest respect by all classes. He was prominently identified with the Friendly Society movement at Crossgates, and was one of the charter members of Court Crossgates, I.O.F. For four years he discharged the duties of financial secretary with much acceptance, and during the whole of that time he did not absent himself from a meeting; in fact, it is stated that he missed only one meeting since the Court was formed. He is the first member the Court has lost by death in Crossgates. Mr Wood leaves a wife and two children, as well as his parents, to mourn his loss, and for them much sympathy is felt. On Monday afternoon the remains were interred in the churchyard at Manston, and the funeral was largely attended. Mrs Wood, Miss Nellie Wood (daughter), and Mr and Mrs Wood (parents) were the principal mourners, and shortly forty members of Court Crossgates, I.O.F., were present to pay a last tribute of respect to a brother who was greatly esteemed, while Crossgates Bowling Club was represented. The service in the church and at the graveside was conducted by the Vicar (Rev. H. H. Malleson), and thereafter the Foresters' impressive funeral service was gone through, the chaplain (Rev. J. Miller Hamilton) officiating. Many beautiful wreaths were placed on the grave, including floral tributes from the members of the family and friends, Court Crossgates, and Crossgates Bowling Club.

SEX TEACHING IN SCHOOLS.—In the daily newspapers a controversy is going on at present the Dronfield case (referred to in our last issue) and sex teaching in schools, and Mrs Malleson, of Manston Vicarage, writes to the "Post" as follows:—Though one may doubt the wisdom of Miss Outram's course of action, one cannot but be grateful for the line she has taken up and for the discussion that has been raised. As a wife and a mother, and above all a vicar's wife, I write to strongly support the necessity of sex hygiene and knowledge being imparted to the rising generation. There may be various opinions as to the earliest age for this teaching, but what is the good of locking the stable door when the steed is stolen. I know of cases of information given by girls of 10 to children of 8; of course this conversation ended with "Don't tell your mother." It seems to me that for the sake of the race, to give only one worthy motive, it is every Christian thinking mother's duty to graduate the impart such knowledge as may keep her children both healthy and pure, and in the case of boys the father should co-operate with her. But every leader and every follower of the widely spreading education movement is appalled by the apathy of the average parent in any and every class of life. Clergy, parish workers, and Mothers' Union members find themselves up against a stone wall of indifference. Progress in education, comfort, etc., is welcomed, but the necessity for progress in these, matters is strenuously denied. In dealing with young people when they have reached the age for Confirmation, it is only too evident that parental indifference has left these things to chance. I think I may safely say that any clergyman, minister, or churchworker of experience would be only too willing to help any parents by suggesting books or pamphlets on these subjects recommended by such leaders as the Archbishops of Canterbury, the head master of Eton, the Hon. Mrs. E. S. Talbot, etc.

LIBERALISM.—At a Liberal demonstration at Otley on Saturday Mr J. H. Duncan, M.P., said that though in Otley they did not fear a general election, they had Barkston Ash and Ripon to win back to Liberalism. They did not feel the cold breezes of Toryism blowing from these quarters, because they had warmth enough at Otley, but they wanted a united Yorkshire for Liberalism.

GARFORTH

BENEFIT.—Mr J. R. Busfield, hon. sec. of the Gasping Goose Angling Club, writes stating that they desire to thank the residents of Garforth who so generously contributed on Saturday to the fund being raised on behalf of Mr T. Chadwick, who has been ill in bed for some time, and they also thank the Garforth Band for their kindness in giving their services free for the same object. The collection amounted to £7.

DRINK.—At the Leeds West Riding Petty Sessions on Tuesday Albert Kitchen, miner, of Garforth, was summoned for having been drunk and disorderly at Garforth on Sunday, February 1st. P.C. Jackson stated that about 9.10 p.m. on the day in question, he was on duty in Main Street, Garforth, where he saw the defendant in a drunken condition, and he made use of obscene language. Witness spoke to him and told him he would be reported. Kitchen was fined 10s. and costs.

INJURED AT GARFORTH.—At Pontefract County Court on Wednesday Judge Benson increased the amount of compensation proposed to be paid to a Leeds carter named Charles Mounsey (31), employed by Messrs W. M. Moore and Sons, hay and straw dealers. While in charge of one of their drays at Garforth, the man severely injured his knees, and the firm, after paying him 12s. per week for some time, agreed to pay a lump sum on settlement, but when this was placed before the Registrar three weeks ago to be recorded he refused to accept it on the ground that the amount was inadequate. His employer agreed to amend the sum to £60, and entered judgment for this amount with costs.

ENTERTAINMENT.—On Saturday night the children of the United Methodist Sunday School gave an interesting entertainment in the schoolroom, and there was a good attendance. The children, who had been trained by Misses L. and N. Thompson, acquitted themselves well, the programme being:—Song, "A song of the flowers," action song, "The monkey on a stick," children; song, "The tramp," A. Roberts; sketch, "Clothes mangled here," scholars; song, "The Chinaman," boys; song, "Kazoo band"; song, "The tall top hat," boys; operetta, "The doll's house family," girls; sketch, "The enquiry office," older boys; song, "Good-night," A. Roberts and children. Mr Harry Taylor discharged the duties of accompanist. The proceeds were in aid of the Sunday School Fund.

PICTURE HOUSE.—The popular Picture House, providing excellent fare week by week, continues to draw large and appreciative audiences, and the management's enterprise has had its reward. The principal pictures in the early part of the week were "A business repair" and "Heart of an artist," and they were excellent. For to-night and Saturday a dramatic story of shipwreck "Wheels of fate" will make a stirring appeal, and "The death sentence" will describe how a condemned man is miraculously saved from a criminal's death by his child. Pictures of refined humour and interest complete the programme. Next week attractive programmes will be submitted. On the first three nights of the week the principal films will include "Fortune hunter," a stirring two-part story of adventure and excitement; "Raiders of L. L. ranch," a rousing western story; "Through the flames," in which a child makes a wonderful escape from a burning house; and "Cupid's mechanics. For the last three days of the week "Saved by fire," a strong two-part drama (exclusive), has been secured; and "Black Beauty" an interesting story about a sagacious horse. "Charms of Laguna" (scenery), "Chip of the old block," "Red Hicks defies the world" (a ludicious boxing match), etc., are also in the programme. For times and prices see advert.

THREATENED STRIKE.—A strike over one man is threatened at the Garforth collieries, but it is hoped, although a serious situation threatens, that a little sweet reasonableness will prevail so that the dispute may be carried to the point of a stoppage of work. The trouble in this instance dates back to 1909, summer. One of the miners employed at the No. 1 pit brought a claim for compensation against the company for nystagmus, a disease of the eye, which occurs among miners, and is occasioned by working in dim lamplight under the peculiar conditions. The County Court Judge at Pontefract decided in this case against the man. The company, for reasons of their own, have refused to have the man back in their employ, despite frequent applications by the men's officials, and the Yorkshire Miners' Association, after thoroughly considering the case, recently gave permission to their members associated with No. 1 Branch of the Garforth Collieries to ballot on the question of striking on the matter. The vote has resulted in a large majority in favour of tendering the notices to stop work unless the man referred to, whoop they allege is being victimised, is reinstated. There is also talk of Garforth No. 1 Branch withdrawing its support of supporting No. 1 Branch, if necessary, by a sympathetic strike. Should all the pits cease work, about 1,400 men would be rendered idle, but it is believed that every compromise may be effected without resort to the strike weapon. Formerly one of the "black" spots, from the point of view of the Miners' Association, Garforth has now a pretty big percentage of union members, and any action taken will be united.

BAZAAR.—The members of the Primitive Methodist Church at Garforth are engaged in an effort to raise a sum of £200 in order to reduce the debt on the church premises, the debt being £787, and a bazaar was held in the schoolroom on Thursday at the opening ceremony Mr Hollis, of Kippax, presided, and he was supported by the Rev. J. P. Osborne, Rev. S. S. Hanson, Rev. E. Rees (Wesleyan minister), Mr J. Best (Garforth), and Mr George Wilkinson (Kippax). Mr Wilkinson declared the bazaar open, and he and Mr Hollis were cordially thanked for their services. At the opening on Saturday afternoon there was a large attendance, and a number of children, who had been specially trained by Miss Hancock and Miss Goodall, gave a nice rendering of a little play, entitled "The fairy ring." The little ones, who were prettily dressed to suit their parts, sang sweetly and danced gracefully, and the dialogue was well delivered. The performers were:—Misses C. Barsley, G. Hebden, E. Hebden, C. Browning, A. Dickerson, J. Bailey, M. Hebden, N. Sherry, E. Lorriman, D. Clapham, A. Wellock, H. Hemsworth, H. Browning, D. Nicholson, and E. Hemsworth. Masters H. Hancock, W. Taylor, F. and R. Richardson, F. Cooper, A. Robinson, F. Clapham, D. Brownridge, B. Hebden, and F. W. Cooper. The Rev. J. P. Osborne proposed a vote of thanks to the children and Misses Hebden and Goodall, and complimented them on their success.—Mr F. Richardson seconded, and Mr W. G. Smithson (Crossgates) supported, and said the children had done exceedingly well. The resolution was cordially passed, and Mr Osborne stated that the children had contributed 50s. to the fund. Thereafter business was proceeded with. In the evening entertainments were given.

HALTON

INN SOLD.—Messrs Oliver, Appleton, and Kitchen on Tuesday sold the "Dog and Gun" estate, York Road, comprising the inn known as the "Dog and Gun," and about 44 acres of building and agricultural land. The property realised £73,350. A freehold plot of building land adjoining the above, with an area of 8 acres, fetched £1,625, and a further plot of gross and arable land at the rear, with an area of 20 acres, over 27 acres, realised £1,200.

"H.M.S. PINAFORE"—On Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday evenings the members of the Whitkirk Amateur Operatic Society will play Gilbert and Sullivan's popular opera "H.M.S. Pinafore," this being their most ambitious performance. The membership of the Society has been strengthened, and several well-known local singers will appear in the cast. Everything has been done to make the performance of the opera a success, and the people of the district expect a treat. For particulars see advert.

BILLIARDS.—In the Leeds Non-Political Billiard League Halton Institute first team played Far Headingley at Halton on Monday, and the result was a win for the homesters by 104 points. Mr J. Thompson played splendid billiards, and won his game by 91 points. Mr O. Bell also was in brilliant form, beating his opponents by 102 points. The second team journeyed to Far Headingley on Tuesday and were defeated by 75 points. In the first match the scores were 981 and 877. Details (Halton names first):—J. Thompson 150 v. F. Whitmell 89, E. Green 150 v. R. Merry 145, G. Butterill 150 v. C. J. Ellis 108, G.O. Bell 150 v. H. Drake 48, J. F. Lowday 131 v. G. Hartley 150, and V. Schofield 150 v. J. Jackson 117. Halton had two start, and their opponents 220. In the second match Halton (80 start) scored 805 and their opponents (100 start) made 880. Details (Halton names first):—R. Lucas 97 v. C. Hague 100, W. A. Taylor 75 v. H. Morris 100, J. Hunt 66 v. H. Steele 100, C. Sunter 100 v. R. Steele 99, A. Morton 90 v. R. Robinson 100, H. Schofield 100 v. E. Heyworth 61, W. Kenny 97 v. J. Barker 100, and C. Harrison 100 v. J. Ratcliffe 60.

KIPPAX

In our report of the Education Committee meeting it was stated that Mr W. L. Dickenson had resigned his position on the Committee. He, however, is not secretary of Goldsmith's Charity.

PARISH CHURCH.—A women's service was held in the Church on Sunday afternoon, when an address was given by the Vicar on "Life's sequel." The soloist was Master V. Beeston. There was a good congregation.

UNITED METHODIST CHURCH.—The distribution of prize books to the Sunday School scholars took place on Sunday afternoon. Full marks were received by many of the children, and the books were a choice selection. Mr J. T. Elliott, of Whitkirk, presented the prizes, and preached at the morning and evening services.

DRINK.—At the Leeds West Riding Petty Sessions on Tuesday Richard Perry, miner, of Kippax, was charged with having been drunk and disorderly at Kippax on Saturday. P.C. Gough stated that owing to his (prisoner's) conduct he had to take him into custody. When in the cell he commenced to struggle and endeavoured to trip up the officer with a stick which he carried. Perry was ordered to pay a fine of 20s. and costs.

BILLIARDS.—Playing in the senior section of the Oulton and District Billiard League Kippax Church Institute were defeated by Rothwell Mechanics' Institute by 144 points. The scores (Rothwell names first):—E. Beckwith 100 v. E. Tiffany 31, H. Bank 100 v. T. Edwards 38, J. Hemsworth 100 v. E. Turnpenny 66, S. Edward 86 v. J. Brook 100, and W. Watson 100 v. C. Eastwood 44, and W. Armistead 57 v. E. Wheatley 100. H. Banks made a break of 40.

PRIMITIVE METHODIST CHURCH.—In connection with this church the home and foreign missionary meeting was held on Saturday evening, and addresses were given by the Rev. J. Burkitt, of Scunthorpe, the Rev. E. H. Pittwood, and the Rev. B. B. Farlow. The meeting was well attended, and was presided over by Mr Wordsworth Firth. On Sunday the Rev. J. Burkitt was the preacher, and he also gave an address to the children in the afternoon on his work in West Africa.

AMBULANCE BRIGADE.—The members of this brigade are endeavouring by means of a series of efforts to raise money for the purchasing of an ambulance vehicle for the use of the village. In aid of this worthy object, the Alhambra Picture Palace Company gave a benefit performance on Wednesday evening. The members of the brigade, who were dressed in their serious cases of illness or accident take place quick means of getting the patient to the infirmary are not available under present conditions, and they are anxious to provide better facilities for dealing with such cases. Dr S. Infield addressed the large audience on behalf of the brigade, and explained the object to which the proceeds were to be devoted.

CHOIR SUPPER.—The choir in connection with the Parish Church had their annual supper on Wednesday evening at the Commercial Hotel, Rothwell, and a most jolly time was gone through, and the following gentlemen spoke on behalf of the vicar, the choir, and the church:—Mr Veitch and Mr J. Bycombe (sidesmen), Mr Kendall, Mr J. Gregory, the Rev. E. B. Smith, and Mr Hartley. A social was afterwards held in the Parish Church Schoolroom, and songs were sung by Mr P. Gummerson, Mr H. Wright, and Mr H. Varley, and a duet by Miss Smith and the Rev. J. Gregory. Part songs were rendered by the choir, and a song was contributed by the Vicar. The pianoforte accompaniments were played by Mrs Gill and Mr Keeble.

LEDSHAM

Ledsham, with a population of 362, has two licensed houses, Ledston has one for 250, and Fairburn 3 for 712 population.

LOFTHOUSE

On Saturday Lofthouse Gateforfield hockey team played Leeds Y.M.C.A., and the match was drawn—two goals each.

AVIATION.—Mr Harold Blackburn, the aviator, left Lofthouse Park at noon on Monday in his monoplane for Bradford. He had as passengers Miss Pauline Clough, sister of the Lady Mayoress of Leeds, and the trip was made for the purpose of conveying a letter from the Lord Mayoress of Leeds (Mrs J. Ratcliffe) to the Lady Mayoress of Bradford (Mrs J Arnold). The trip should have been made on Saturday, but owing to the adverse weather conditions it had to be abandoned.

MOORTOWN

MOORTOWN GOLF CLUB.—The annual general meeting of the members of the Moortown Golf Club (Limited) was held on Saturday evening at the Hotel Metropole, Leeds, Mr S. R. Rush presiding over a good attendance. The hon. treasurer (Mr J. Preston), referring to an item in the balance-sheet of £305 for capital expenditure during the year on the course construction account, explained that in future the Committee intended to pay for every bit of work on the course out of revenue account. The Chairman said one of the most satisfactory features of the accounts was that they spent something over £300 on turfing the moor, all but about £60 of which came out of the revenue for the year. In ordinary circumstances, therefore, they would have had a very distinct surplus on the year's working. The following officers were elected for the ensuing years:—President, the Hon. Rupert E. Beckett; vice-presidents, Mr J. Lawson Brown, Mr W. T. Lipscomb, Mr F. W. Greenwood, Mr Lewis Moore, Mr F. J. Furness, Dr. A. Mackenzie; captain, Mr R. Pepper; hon. secretary, Mr J. F. White; hon. treas., Mr J. Preston.

METHLEY

BEQUESTS.—Miss Emily Matilda Easton, of Nest House, Fulling, Durham, and Layton Manor, near Darlington, left estate of the gross value of £1,079,780, the net personalty being £986,863. One of the executors is Mr H. C. Embleton, of Methley, Miss Easton left her shares in the Bedlington and Wallsend Coal Companies to Mr H. C. and T. W. Embleton, nephews. There are numerous other bequests, and the residue is left to H. C. and T. W. Embleton, nephews, and Emily Mary Embleton and Louisa G. Embleton, nieces, equally.

MIDDLETON

The surfacemen at the New Pit, Middleton Colliery, have sent £2 4s. to the Leeds Infirmary.

Woodhouse Hill Liberal Club, Hunslet, has a membership of 200, and East Hunslet Liberal Club 315.

OULTON

WHIST DRIVE AND DANCE.—An enjoyable evening was spent by the Sunday School teachers of Oulton St. John's Church, in the Herrod Hall on Wednesday night, when a whist drive and dance were held. There were over 100 present. The winners of the whist were:—Ladies—1, Miss Rider; 2, Miss Dimmock. Gentlemen—1, Dr Nightingale (Leeds); 2, Mr Dolphin. Mr J. Tuchey acted as M.C. for dancing, the music being supplied by Messrs W. Poole and W. Marginson.

FIRE.—Oulton residents were alarmed late on Saturday night by a fire which broke out at and did considerable damage to the premises occupied by Mr Mew, as a butcher, on the Aberford Road. The fire occurred shortly after 10.30, and was not extinguished until about 1.15 on Sunday morning when all that was left were the outer walls. The premises, which consists of a lock-up shop and an adjoining room, were left secure and apparently safe about 10.30 by a niece of Mr Mew, who had been in charge. A few minutes later an occupant of one of the houses opposite saw from his bedroom window a light within the shop. Knowing the place to be locked up, he immediately sent round to Mr Mew, who quickly came and found that a fire had broken out. Messengers were despatched for the officials of the Council, and after some delay the door of the premises where a hose pipe is kept was obtained. A difficulty arose owing to the short length of the hose, which was burst in several places, with the result that much water was wasted. The hose would, when at its full length, only reach to the front of the burning shop from the nearest hydrant. However, despite this disadvantage, a band of helpers, including Mr P. C. Higgins and Mr Metcalf (Hunslet Rural Council officials), and P.C.'s Hutchinson and Bennett, set to work with a will. There was a keen wind blowing, and the fire was burnt furiously. Fortunately the premises are isolated, standing in front of the quarry, and there was no danger of the flames spreading. It was not, however, until 1.15 on Sunday morning that the fire was got out, and the workers departed. Shortly afterwards there was a fresh outbreak, but the fire was soon stopped.

ROBIN HOOD

The workpeople of Messrs. Charlesworth, Robin Hood Colliery, have given £42 to per Mr S. R. Chadwick, to Leeds Infirmary.

ANNIVERSARY.—The chapel anniversary was celebrated at the United Methodist Chapel on Sunday, when special services were held. In the morning and evening sermons were preached by Mr Joseph Ogden, of the West Hunslet General Mission. In the afternoon the Lofthouse Wesleyan choir rendered the service of song "The Promise of Jesus." Mr G. Lunn was the organist, and the singing was conducted by Mr T. Hampson.

ROUNDHAY

Oakwood Recreation Club, Roundhay, has a membership of 62, and Roundhay Golf Club 396.

A kerosse match between Lanesshire and Yorkshire was played at Roundhay on Saturday, and the former won by fourteen goals to five.

SEACROFT

Officials for Seacroft and Crossgates Cycling Club for the year have been elected. Mr Alf. Goodall is again chairman; Messrs W. Parker, S. O. Fawcett, and H. Smith; captain, J. H. Parker; and J. Thompson, hon. sec.

SHADWELL

Shadwell lads have been drawn to meet Hunslet Carr in the fourth round of the Schools Football Cup Competition on the 28th inst. The match will be played at Hunslet Carr.

STOURTON

PRIMITIVE METHODISM.—The address at the P.S.A. on Sunday afternoon was given by Mr W. Thurwell, of Rothwell, and proved of an interesting character. Mr J. Collinson presided, and Mr Waterton was the organist.

SOUTH LEEDS GOLF CLUB.—Monthly medal—First Division—W. R. Bryce, 85 v. 87, 79; J. Clark, 91, 10, 81; J. Prince, 97, 15, 82; G. Green, 99, 15, 84; S. Groves, 99, 15, 84. Second Division—T. Hargreaves, 106, 22; B. Wood, 105, 22, 83; P. Evered, 102, 18, 84; C. E. Fox, 105, 20, 85.

SWILLINGTON

LET OFF.—At the Leeds West Riding Petty Sessions on Tuesday Joseph Patrick Hardy, of no fixed abode, was charged with begging at Swillington. Evidence was given by P.C. Easton, who said prisoner had been to Waterloo Manor. Prisoner, when asked if he had anything to say, said he only went to the groom, who was charitable and gave him three half-pence. He added that he had been in the Scarborough Infirmary waiting for an operation, but the infirmary authorities had turned him out to Selby on finding that he came from that place. Asked where his wife was, prisoner said she had left him two months ago. She had some grown up children, but he could not more about them than about him. The Chairman: If we discharge you will you go to Selby? Prisoner: I will go straight, away. The Chairman: Then set off at once.

WOODLESFORD

On Saturday afternoon in the Church Football League Whitkirk C.M. defeated Woodlesford All Saints' by three goals to nil.

A VILLAGE FUNERAL.—The remains of the late Mrs Hewitt, an old Woodlesford resident, were interred in the Oulton Churchyard on Monday. A short service was held in All Saints' Church, after which the cortege proceeded along the Aberford Road to Oulton. Preceding the coffin were a number of women, who walked in orderly fashion, and the service was conducted by the Rev. A. J. Irwin, of Woodlesford.

CORRESPONDENCE.

KIPPAX AND A RECREATION GROUND

To the Editor.

SIR,—The letter, written by S.R.S., which appeared in your last week's issue, on Kippax and a recreation field, emphasises the fact that this village is badly in need of a playing-field, when the young men have to go away from it in order to play the games of cricket and football. Kippax is evidently more off in this respect than it used to be, for we used to possess a fairly good cricket field. He had a field near Waddington Row, not very central or convenient, I admit, and it was narrow and bounded by hits were numerous, but the young men had somewhere to play cricket—a privilege which is not available to-day. To play the national game of football was possible here a few years since. The field is still with us, but the privilege of playing football in it has departed.

Kippax, I am persuaded, locally much better progress when we get away from that attitude usually adopted by timorous mortals, resolving to go forward one day, and shrinking the next. Decision of character we don't possess, we have likes and dislikes, and we air them occasionally. We need to petition the ratepayers in regard to a recreation ground, but will it come off? I doubt it.—Yours, etc.,

OBSERVER.

SIR,—Being a lover of cricket, I should very much like to support the letter of S.R.S. in your last week's issue in regard to a recreation ground for Kippax. The time is not far distant when the cricket and football will be undergo some alteration, as it is falling, and at the time of rain it will become submerged and make it unplayable. If, for one, cannot understand why the old football field should be withheld from those interested in football, as it has been used for upwards of 30 years for that purpose, and it cannot now be got for either love or money.

At election times you can hear the wants of the people voiced in capital letters from the political platform, yet Kippax wants a recreation ground, but it is not within the reach of it. There is need for one, and a big need, where all games could be worked in on one ground.

Recreation is necessary for the rising generation, and it should be put within the reach of them. City people can have their parks and grounds for various amusements. Why not Kippax, when land is close at hand? It would also reduce the risk of driving up the village street, because the children would have somewhere to play, but now they are forced to play in the streets.—Yours, etc.,

LONG SET.

THREE-CORNERED CONTESTS.

To the Editor.

SIR,—How long has this child's play to continue? We are going on for a general and a general elections established. If it is wrong at general elections, why right at bye-elections?

Granting the (doubtful) justice of ownership votes at bye-elections, can there be any modicum of justice in any one being returned to represent the minority, if it is a sound principle that the majority must rule? Put up a third candidate in all the constituencies, and, except in odd instances, the Parliament would be representative of one-third the nation every time!

Seeing that most progressive countries have the second ballot or alternative vote, it is really past belief that we go on playing our like this, and no attempt made, even in the Plural Voting Bill, to remedy the anomaly. It is, of course, too late now for this Parliament, as the Speaker's dictum on "fundamentals" as on Women's Suffrage would again operate.

Another thing which the average Liberal cannot understand is why nearly all the officials at elections, presiding officers, poll clerks, etc., are Conservatives. Is it because Liberals are incompetent, or because they are too modest in their applications, their spoon being far too short, or what?—Yours, etc.,

W. G. SMITHSON.

SEACROFT'S PRETTY GIRLS.
FLETCHERS
AN AMUSING ARTICLE.
On Thursday the London "Daily News" published the following:—
Seacroft, a charming little old-world village five miles from the centre of Leeds, has earned an unenviable reputation on a place where girls do not marry. For ten years past, according to statistics published by the vicar in the Parish Magazine, the average number of weddings per annum has only been 5.5. Last year there was none at all, and yet Seacroft is a parish of nearly 1,000 souls.
Several men were married during the year but in every case the bride was chosen from outside the village. Nobody can say the Seacroft girls are not pretty. Their cheeks are rosy, their eyes are bright, they are skilled in the domestic arts, and, in fact, are as marriageable a lot of maidens as you would find in a day's march. Why nobody marries them it is difficult to understand—and Seacroft itself is reluctant to explain.
The village, in point of fact, is vastly indignant at the attention which the vicar's statistics have attracted. A "Daily News" representative was told at the vicarage that the affairs of Seacroft were the business of nobody outside Seacroft. The village girls could probably get husbands if they wanted them, but in any case the subject was one for the consideration of the world at large. It would be better for them to remain single than to make improvident marriages.
There was too much interference with other people's business nowadays. State education, State pensions, State insurance, State everything. Did the State propose to interfere with Seacroft? Was this the latest move? In any case, the more important questions about Seacroft's affairs would be answered at the vicarage.
Other people in the village were similarly uncommunicative. The comely lady who presides at the little inn overlooking the green said Seacroft girls were pretty as others and prettier than a good many. "But it's not always the prettiest that matters most," she added darkly, and with this cryptic observation declined to say more.
A village greybeard, leaning over a gate on the York highway, was the only one who ventured an explanation of the phenomenon. "If you asks me why the girls don't get married I can tell you," he said. "It's because the chaps in our village are a bit too fly for 'em." The ancient chuckled deeply at his little joke "Take my advice, young man," he resumed. "If you want a wife this village yourself before one of 'em nabs you."
The old man meandered into a history of his own married life. For thousand-forty years he was wedded to the best of partners, and she had lain in the churchyard this many a year. They were very happy, but were his time to come over again he would not take the risk again. "I wouldn't mind marrying one of 'em if she had some brass, uncle," put in a red-faced young labourer who had joined us. "You," said the old man with biting scorn, "you're a fool, that's what you are."

The annual parish meeting for Tadcaster West is fixed for March 24th.

NARROW ESCAPE.—A youth had a narrow escape at Tadcaster railway station on Friday. He was observed on the crossing at the east end of the station in front of an approaching engine, but fortunately he managed to get across safely and jumped along the near platform and into the town.

SACRED CONCERT.—The Selby Vocal Union gave a sacred concert before a large audience at the Museum Hall on Sunday night. Mr T. Foster conducted. Mrs Smallpage, the soloist, sang "Nearer, my God, to Thee," and "Sun of my soul." The hymns and choruses, with orchestral accompaniment, were all rendered successfully.

AN OLD WELL DISCOVERED.—While digging the foundations for the new Hippodrome, near Alma Terrace, in Millgate Street, Selby, workmen discovered an old well, fifteen feet deep, and containing about seven feet of water. It is supposed to have been used by the inhabitants sixty years ago before the first water scheme was inaugurated.

WEDDING.—The parish church, Cawood, was on Wednesday the scene of a very pretty wedding, as which there was a large attendance. The contracting parties were Mr Frank Taylor Hind, Moss Hagg Farm, Cawood, and Alice, eldest daughter of Mr and Mrs Fred Lund, Station Farm, Cawood. Both the bride and bridegroom have lived all their lives at Cawood, and their popularity was testified by the number who evinced a keen interest in the ceremony. Mr George Garbutt acted as best man, the bride being given away by her father. The bridesmaids were Miss Emily Lund (sister of the bride) and Miss Elsie Dobson. The bride's gown was of Duchess satin, piped, with brown hat trimmed with Saxe blue lance plume. The bridesmaids' dresses were of cream velvet, with pink hats trimmed with roses. After the ceremony the party adjourned to the house of the bride's father, where, with a number of friends, and well-wishers, the rest of the day was spent. The Rev. J. Brookes, vicar of Cawood, was the officiating minister.

CROSSGATES GUARDIAN AND THE POOR LAW.

EFFECT OF INSURANCE AND OLD AGE PENSIONS.

HOW THE NEEDS OF THE POOR ARE MET.

On Friday evening at a meeting of Temple-newsam Ratepayers' Association at Whitkirk—Mr J. Armistead presiding—a paper on "The Infirm of the Poor Law" was read by Mr Arthur Lee, of Crossgates, who is a member of Leeds Board of Guardians. He stated that the Union Infirmary at Beckett Street, Leeds, had accommodation for 1,037 beds, but in addition to these eighty beds which were not certified by the Local Government Board could be put up in times of stress. The institution was a very large one, being twice the size of Leeds General Infirmary. The Guardians have under consideration the erection of a block specially for children, as well as an open-air block for consumptives of 20 beds. In 1880 the staff at the Workhouse infirmary was 15 and the inmates 400, and last year the figures were 182 and 955, and the salaries paid amounted to about £5,200 per annum. The cost of maintenance, including clothing and drugs, ranged from 4s. 4½d. per inmate in 1880 to about 5s. 7d. last year. He mentioned that in 1880 a sum of £159 7s. was spent on stimulants, but last year not a penny was expended on drink. The number of persons admitted in 1880 was 1,500 and in 1913 it was 3,800, and the cost of maintenance for the respective years was £5,058 and £13,401. He stated that 171 of the persons dealt with were lunatics, 35 were tuberculous children, and 106 men and 40 women suffering from pulmonary tuberculosis.

The Insurance Act, he said, was thought by many to have reduced the number of people chargeable to the rates, and that was no doubt true, to some extent, on the workhouse side, which was much to be thankful for, but on the other hand, it threw a great deal more work on the hospitals, both voluntary and public, because as soon as a panel doctor found that a patient required an operation he promptly sent that person to the infirmary. This had been most marked at the General Infirmary, and they had an increase on last year of 371.

After an appreciative reference to the valuable work done by the Beaconsfield Society among the inmates, he said there were certain fundamental principles which governed the administration of relief. Money should not be given where it encouraged idleness, immorality, drunkenness, insanitary arrangements, etc., and whilst being sufficient for the needs of the case, it must not be excessive. In 1910 the Guardians appointed a superintendent relieving officer and introduced a system of records showing the history of each case, from the time it became chargeable on the rates. It was soon discovered that persons had been "sponging" on the rates for years, and the new system resulted in a substantial decrease in pauperism. In 1910 the number was 3,119, and the cost £16,268; 1911, 3,521 and £17,090; 1912, 2,417 and £13,330. Last year the number of persons chargeable was 2,140, but he indicated that the improved trade might have had some influence on the figures. About 330 of the reduction was due to the operation of the Old Age Pensions Act, and in 1911 and 1912 the reduction in cost due to this Act was £804 and £3,218 respectively.

While the Guardians had got rid of the undeserving cases they had increased the amount given in deserving cases. The average weekly cost in 1903 was 3s. 7½d., in 1908 it was 4s. 0½d., and in 1913 5s. 6d. Since 1911 the relief scale allowed 5s. per week to aged people, and 9s. per week to aged couples, while the figures for families were: Man 4s., woman 4s., children 2s. Under the old scale all income was taken into consideration when reckoning the relief, but under the 1911 scale the first worker was allowed to earn 5s. before any deduction was made in the relief and such other sum for additional workers as might be reasonable. Thus, a woman with four children would have received 9s. 6d. under the old scale and 12s. under the new scale, and the woman would be allowed to earn up to 5s., making a total for five persons of 17s. By encouraging the applicants and their families to earn a little the spirit of independence was, to some extent, fostered, but should the woman not be able to work, owing to sickness or having to remain at home to look after young children, the relief was often increased to an amount which would bring the income up to that of a family with a worker. On the other hand, if it was thought that the applicants and her family were not making every effort to do something for themselves the relief might be reduced. In addition, the recipients had free medical attendance, drugs, etc., for the sick, and articles supplied have been bedding, artificial limbs, false teeth, fire-guards, etc.

When relief could be legally given it was invariably adequate for the requirements of the case, although it did not always take the form desired by the applicant. In order to ensure that the money was wisely spent and that the children were receiving proper attention, the Guardians had appointed a lady visitor, and she had to furnish a report as to whether the relief was adequate, and if any sick children were not being well looked after at home they were removed to the infirmary. The result was that the children of parents in receipt of relief would compare very favourably with the other children in the same neighbourhood, and, indeed, the N.S.P.C.C. stated that it was very seldom that a complaint was received in regard to Poor Law children.

Mr Young proposed a vote of thanks to Mr Lee for his excellent paper. Mr Marsden seconded, and others who spoke in support of the resolution were, Messrs Cox, Atkinson, and Chadwick. The resolution was cordially passed.

SKYRACK BREWSTER SESSIONS.

CONCERNING A KIPPAX HOUSE.

MAGISTRATES' VIEWS ON CLUBS.

The annual licensing meeting of the Skyrack division of the West Riding was held in the West Riding Court, at the Leeds Town Hall on Tuesday morning. The magistrates were Mr J. W. Metcalfe (in the chair), Mr F. M. Lupton, Mr E. H. Foster, Mr R. D. Kitson, and Mr E. Parkin.

Supt. Symonds presented his report which showed that there are within the division 110 licensed premises where intoxicating liquors may be obtained. These are classified as follows:—57 fully licensed inns, 20 beerhouses, 16 beer-off premises, 17 beer, wines and spirits off premises. The population of the division according to the census of 1911 is 47,440. There is, therefore, an average of 431 persons to each licence. During the year the licences of 6 inns, 1 beerhouse, and 3 shops have been transferred, as against 8 inns, 2 beerhouses, and 2 shops in the preceding year. The licensed houses in the division have been well-conducted during the year. There are 19 registered clubs in the division where intoxicating liquors may be obtained, with a total membership of 3,655. They have been generally well conducted during the year.

Under the licensing laws in 1911 the number of persons proceeded against was 249, and of these 242 were convicted and seven dismissed. In 1912, 184 persons were proceeded against, 180 being convicted and four dismissed. Last year the figures were 200 proceeded against, 197 convicted and three dismissed. Of the 200 persons proceeded against last year 61 were non-residents of the district, and 57 of the offences were committed on Sundays. There were no applications for new licences.

There was only one thing to add, said Supt. Symonds, and that was in regard to the White Swan at Kippax. He had visited the house, which belonged to Bentley's Yorkshire Brewery, and which had evidently been extended some time ago. There were four cottages adjoining and these were through cottages, the backyard of which had only one outlet. The passage ran through the licensed premises, and he understood the ashpits had to be emptied through this passage.

Mr Mockill (the Chairman) said such a condition of affairs was undesirable, and probably Supt. Symonds would draw the attention of Messrs Bentley's to it and ask them to put the place in order.

Referring to the report generally, the Chairman said there was very little to comment upon. The number of persons brought before the Court, and convicted showed that the cases were quite proper to bring up, and that the police had showed discretion in their duties. They were glad to see that the clubs in the division had been well conducted. They would, however, like to express the opinion that all clubs—both rich men's and poor men's clubs—should be placed under police supervision just the same as public-houses.

There was also another matter arising out of a letter which had been sent from the Home Office regarding the keeping of accounts by all licence-holders.

Mr A. Willey, who happened to be in Court, said he represented about 1,000 licence-holders in Leeds, and was glad to hear that the magistrates were pleased with the manner in which the licensed houses had been conducted. Apart from that, he would like to say that those connected with the "trade" resented and objected to the documents calling upon them to keep accounts which had been sent broadcast. The "trade" looked upon it as something foreign to licensing laws.

CIVIL WAR VETERAN DIES AT WETHERBY.

IN BUSINESS AT TADCASTER.

The death has taken place at Wetherby of Mr Samuel Wells Catmull, who, had he lived until the 26th November next, would have been 94 years of age.

Mr Catmull, who was a veteran of the American Civil War, was born at Graveley, Cambridgeshire. In 1851 he emigrated to America, and five years later became a naturalised citizen of that country. He stood well over 6ft., and joined the Home Guards.

In the war between the North and South, deceased fought in the battle of Bole's Run, and the action before Washington, which commencing early in the morning continued until 6 p.m., and when it was estimated that 150,000 men had been either killed or wounded. He also took part in the action in which General Jackson, a Southern general and a Yorkshireman, was shot by one of his own men.

At the besieging of Petersburgh in 1864, Mr Catmull was wounded in the head and foot. Mr Catmull left America in August, 1865, returning to England.

He commenced business as a tailor at Tadcaster, and in 1893 a coloured man went into his shop for the purpose of having a garment repaired. Talking about America, and learning that Mr Catmull had served in the Federal Army during the revolution, the stranger asked Mr Catmull if he had a pension for military service. That was the first Mr Catmull had heard of the pension, and after eight years of correspondence not only did he get the pension, but also the back pay.

In 1907 the pensions of all the men, as they got past work, were increased, but Mr Catmull did not hear of this until two years later. The American Consul at Leeds was instrumental in securing the increase for Mr Catmull.

On Saturday afternoon Rothwell Haigh footballers were defeated by Holbeck Bethel by two goals to nothing.

BRAMHAM MOOR HUNT.

A RIDER'S ADVENTURE

Although there was much fog about on Friday, the country was clear Wetherby way, and, the Bramham Moor Hunt met at Deighton Bar. The first order given was for Smiler's Gorse, but on the way some footpeople set up a fox, which hounds slowly ran towards Kirk Deighton village, and he was given up. Armitage Plantation, the Doctor's Plantation, Oates Wood, and Goose Moor were blank. They found in Hesslock Field Rash, going out at the Bessy Wood side. Swinging to the right they ran to Lingcroft, through the Willow Garth and Oates Wood, and he got to ground near to Cowthorpe. Ingmanthorpe Big Wood was blank, but they found in the Doctor's Plantation, and there was a better scent. They crossed the York Rond, and ran all the length of Champagne Whin, by Sykes House, but the plough near to Spring Wood brought them to their noses. Then they ran on nearly to Burnett's Wood, but did not cross the railway, turning to the right instead, over the steeplechase course, past where the previous fox went to ground, and to Bessy Wood. Here they probably changed foxes. They went away with a fight coloured fox into Minster Hagg, and after a turn round the cover he came back into Bessy Wood, and into Minster Hagg, where they lost him.

A gentleman had a very nasty fall near to Ingmanthorpe, through his horse bolting. He managed to throw himself off just before the horse jumped at an iron gate, which it cleared, except for hitting the top bar. It cut itself very badly, and had to be left at Wetherby.

MEET AT GATEFORTH

On Saturday the Bramham Moor Hunt met at Gateforth, but scent was bad, and the ploughs as dry and powdery as in April. For so distant a fixture the field was quite a large one, many people being present from the Badsworth. From the Long Plantation near the Gateforth Common Wood a fox was taken very slowly, with many and frequent checks, throughout the length of the Gateforth Green Coverts, through and out at the end of Laund Wood, and forward some little distance towards Brayton.

Doubling back here, the fox was hunted by Hambleton Hough, through the grounds of the Gateforth Sanatorium and back to Hambleton Hough over Norton Bog nearly to Brayton Barff, where he, again doubling back, was abandoned at Hambleton Hall, after a very slow hunt of an hour and twenty-five minutes. Brayton Barff was now drawn, but though there was a stale fing no fox was seen, which was not remarkable, as the earths were unstopped.

Gateforth Common Wood, Birkin Springs, and Birkin Willows were in succession drawn blank. Byram Park held several foxes, and hounds were busy with the other of them for an hour before marking one to ground. Mr Ludoll's terrier soon bolted him, and, after being hustled about for another quarter of an hour, he was killed.

MEET AT HAREWOOD HOUSE.

Not for forty years has Harewood Park presented such a scene as was witnessed on Monday morning, when the Bramham Moor Hounds met there for the day's sport. The hounds had been brought across country from Bramham, and on their arrival a large gathering were there ready to follow them.

The Earl and Countess of Harewood had entertained a house party, which included Prince and Princess Arthur of Connaught, the Master of the Hunt (Mr George Lane Fox, M.P.), and Mrs. Lane Fox, Lady Constance Milnes Gaskell, Capt. Bonham (the Prince's aide-de-camp), Mrs A. Meysey-Thompson, and Captain Grisham, Lord and Lady Boyne (Lord Harewood's son-in-law and daughter), Lord Lascelles, and the Hon. Edward Lascelles.

Splendid weather favoured the meet, and the "pink" of the hunting men and women on display, with the stately front of Harewood House as a background.

The Earl and Countess received the Lord Mayor and Lady Mayoress (Mr and Mrs. E. Beachcroft) and Mrs Charles Ratcliffe), and many other members of the Hunt, in the portico of the house.

The Princess, who does not ride to hounds, followed the Hunt, with the Countess, in a dog-cart. Prominent amongst the riders were Prince Arthur, the Earl of Harewood, Lord Lascelles, and the Hon. Edward Lascelles, etc. Many regular members of the Hunt were present, including Major Dent, Mr and Mrs Edward Lane Fox, Mr Greaves, Mr Harold Nickols, jun., and Mrs Nickols, Miss Pickergill, Tom Smith, (the former huntsman), Mr Malise Graham, and Mr Sydney Kitson.

Hounds trotted by way of Harewood Bridge to Rougement, which was blank. Next was Weston New Gorse. Finding at once at Swindon Wood, the pack pointed for the Punch Bowls, but the fox being headed on the Kirkby Overblow Road, turned up the hill to Walton Head. Without delay he crossed the Leeds and Harrogate Road, and was taken through Horn Bank and Thirsell's Whin, and very slowly hustled towards Rigton Moor. Coming to a standstill hounds were held towards Tatefield Hall, but failed to hit off the line of their fox. Finding next on Stainburn Moor the pack coursed their fox in view, passed Belsay Bigg, to the Otley and Bedewithshaw Road, and along it for some distance, before bending right-handed and heading for Lindley Wood. Short of it, by the fields, the fox broke afore a herd of 15 minutes.

Ingham's Gorse was next drawn, and the fox found there crossed sharply to Cocked Hat Whin, and returning to Ingham's Gorse did not dwell there, but ran through Parkin Wood, and with Leesfield's Gorse on the left reached the Brickworks on the Scarcroft Lane. Here hounds checked and hunted slowly to the covert on the top of the Crimple Tunnel, and crossing the railway reached Follifoot village. They again were at fault, but hitting off the line crossed again over the Tunnel, and went over the valley to Fulwith Brow, and hunting alongside the beck reached the foot of Humphrey Bank and marked the fox to ground after a run of an hour and a half.

BARKSTON ASH FOOTBALL ASSOCIATION.

DRAW FOR THE CUP COMPETITION

GARFORTH AND SOUTH MILFORD TROUBLES

On Tuesday a meeting of the Executive of the Barkston Ash Football Association was held at the Station Hotel, Crossgates—Mr J. R. Batty (President) in the chair. The other members present were, Messrs A. Johnson (South Milford), A. Deighton (Church Fenton), H. Metcalfe (Tadcaster), F. Inman (Aberford), T. S. Slater (Garforth), P. C. Binns (Crossgates), and W. A. Osborne (hon. sec.).

G. Palfreyman (Sherburn) and Dawson (Wetherby Cor.), who had been injured on the football field, were allowed half-a-guinea each from the Templenewsam Charity Fund, and a similar grant will be made to Thorpe (Aberford) when the hon. sec. receives a formal application from the Aberford club.

The Hon. Sec. stated that A. Dickinson (Garforth W.R.) had been transferred to Barwick, and the date given was December 19th, but it transpired that he applied for his transfer a week earlier, and it was decided to date it from then in order that he should be eligible to play in the Barkston Ash Cup Competition.

The draw for the next round of the Challenge Cup Competition on February 21st was made as follows:—

Holmes Mills (Selby) v. Selby Olympia.
Cawood United v. Wetherby.
Garforth W.R. v. Barwick United.
Aberford v. Tadcaster.

A long discussion ensued regarding the transfer of H. Chilton and E. Atkinson from Monk Fryston to South Milford.

Mr Osborne said that at last meeting the transfers were discussed, and Mr Johnson said he had applied for them, and he was told that if the men had been transferred on the date mentioned by him they would not be eligible to play for the Barkston Ash Cup. He was asked to put himself into communication with Monk Fryston club.

Mr Slater: We said it was out of order.

Mr Osborne said he wrote to Mr Hester, the hon. sec. of Monk Fryston, and asked if any applications for transfers had been made, and he was told he received an application on Dec. 31st, the applications being dated the 29th. He told Mr Hester they could not refuse an amateur a transfer, and he explained that the reason they were not given was that they had had no meeting of the committee. He had no power to refuse a transfer.

Mr Slater: Has he power to give transfers?

Mr Osborne said he must have, if he had no power to refuse them. Afterwards Monk Fryston decided to allow Chilton and Atkinson to go to Milford.

Mr Slater: No transfer has been granted by this Executive.

Mr Deighton: The Executive cannot prevent an amateur getting his transfer.

Mr Slater continued to protest that it was entirely out of order.

Mr Johnson: Why?

Mr Slater: Because they have not notified our secretary of the fact.

Mr Osborne said that he had confirmed the transfers as from the date on which applications were made, December 29th.

After further talk the hon. sec.'s action was confirmed.

Arising out of this Garforth White Rose lodged an objection against the result of their match with South Milford on the ground that Chilton, who took part in the game, was not eligible to play.

Mr Barker proposed that the objection be dismissed as frivolous.

Mr Metcalfe seconded, and this was agreed to.

Mr Binns then proposed that the deposit be forfeited, and Mr Metcalfe seconded it. Mr Deighton proposed that the deposit be returned seeing that Mr Slater had misunderstood what had taken place at last meeting.

The President said that Mr Slater was under a misapprehension as to what was discussed at last meeting. It was stated that if the application for the transfer was made on December 29th Chilton would not be able to play for the cup, but they were now bringing it on to the League.

Mr Inman, who seconded, said that Mr Slater had misunderstood the discussion.

The proposal to forfeit the deposit was carried by three votes to two.

Harewood made a complaint about Boston Spa dressing room being dirty, no chairs to sit on, no hooks for clothes, etc., but no action was taken in the matter.

A complaint was made by Wetherby Cor. anent their match with Boston Spa, and they asked that it should be replayed. The letter was allowed to lie on the table.

Mr Slater raised the question as to why Milford had not been fined for failing to fulfil an engagement at Garforth at the end of last season. It showed, he declared, that one club could do as it liked and another suffer. He considered that Milford should be fined.

Mr Johnson: Why did we not go?

Mr Slater: You refused to go.

Mr Osborne said that Mr Slater had not sent any written application for him to bring the matter forward.

Mr Slater said the Executive themselves ought to have taken the matter up.

Mr Johnson said they did not go because they were threatened.

The Hon. Sec. said that they would have to fine nearly every club in the Division. Only this season Garforth W.R. and Barwick arranged to play a match, and he confirmed it, and then Garforth would not fulfil the engagement.

Mr Slater contended that that was not a proper fixture, and his committee gave no authority for its arrangement.

After further discussion the matter dropped.

NEW WORKS AT BARLOW—The fact that a large aerodrome is to be built this spring on the site acquired by Sir W. G. Armstrong, Whitworth, and Company, at Barlow, indicates the nature of the work to be taken in hand. It is stated that two semi-rigid airships, of the Italian Forlanini type, are to be built at the works. Particulars as to the general dimensions of these craft show that they will have a length of 240 feet, with a diameter of 60 feet, and that the engines will be of 180 h.p.

FOOTBALL JOTTINGS

DEIGHTON SHIELD COMPETITION.

On Saturday afternoon Barwick United will be at home to Garforth W.R., who are fighting hard for the leadership of their division, and the homesters will make them go all the way for the points. Aberford should account for Monk Fryston, but Whitkirk will have to show an improvement if they are to beat South Milford, who have first position in their division. Wetherby, at home, have not a stiff task against Tadcaster, but Wetherby Cor. will not find Harewood so easy to overcome.

Two matches were played on Saturday afternoon. Garforth W.R. were at South Milford, and they had to be content with a drawn game —one goal each. Harewood defeated Boston Spa by two goals to one.

The game at South Milford was splendidly contested, but the high pace lowered greatly with play. In the first half Garforth had the pull, and Howson netted, but subsequently Milford scored, the match being drawn. Neither club has been beaten, and there is every prospect of a fine tussle for the leadership of the division.

WEST RIDING CUP—WETHERBY

Wetherby were this only representatives of Barkston Ash in this tournament on Saturday afternoon, having had an easy passage owing to South Milford and New Wortley Gas Works failing to fulfil engagements at the old town. Their opponents on Saturday afternoon were Clarence Ironworks, who preferred to play the match at Wetherby instead of in Leeds, and no doubt they enjoyed the outing. Garforth W.R. were defeated by the Ironworks, but the White Rose proved themselves the smarter team, and in view of that Wetherby thought they had a chance. The visitors, however, did all the scoring, and Wetherby retired beaten by three goals to nil.

ALLERTON BYWATER GO UNDER.

In the same Competition Allerton Bywater played Fryston Colliery at Fryston, and the game was well-contested. Fryston, having the advantage of a strong wind and slope, attacked persistently, Allerton occasionally breaking away. After clever passing between Biggins and Gedney. A good goal was netted by Stone. Fryston had numerous corners which were unproductive, the wind being a spoil sport. Burt missed a glorious opportunity from Stone's pass. The Allerton defence was very good, the centre-halves working well from Biggins. Fryston were leading by a goal to nil at the interval. In the second moiety Allerton, with the assistance of the wind, kept up a vigorous attack, Simpson being prominent on several occasions, but Stead kept his goal intact. A run by Dyer put Fryston in their opponents' quarters, and he sent in a fine centre and Burt shot, but the wind lifted the ball just over. A corner to Fryston caused excitement for a few minutes, but nothing resulted. Both sides afterwards scored, and Fryston won by two goals to one.

BOWERS ALLERTON DEFEATED AT ROTHWELL.

Bowers Allerton and Rothwell White Rose having played a drawn game in the Rothwell Charity Cup Competition, the teams met again on Saturday, the venue being Rothwell. The visitors won the toss and played with a strong wind. Parfitt started for Rothwell, and gave to Appleby, who passed out to Abrams, only to see Bowers kick down the field. Ripley, however, intercepted and Holmes getting possession, gave to Wrigley, who made good headway. He passed to Hughes on the left, who put in a good centre, but the custodian had no difficulty in clearing. A high kick put Rothwell on the defensive, but they had no difficulty in holding the visiting forwards, although Masham and Harrison, did well for their side. The interval came with no score.

The visitors started well, but soon found a difficulty in playing against the wind. Then Rothwell attacked. Parfitt secured and went down the centre and passed to Abrams, but the forwards were unable to score, the wind being a difficulty. The half-backs tried long shots, but could not drive one straight. Once Appleby got through on his own, and there seemed to be a possibility of a goal, but he was brought down outside the penalty area. The free-kick was without result. Bowers Allerton defended manfully, but Parfitt eventually netted. After this Rothwell seemed to have all the play, except for one or two bursts which Bowers made, but Ripley and Dawson seemed to have no trouble in checking them. The home team put on the pressure shot but they could not add to their score, the Bowers Allerton custodian playing a fine game. Rothwell won by a goal to nil.

LEEDS SENIOR LEAGUE.

On Saturday afternoon Great Preston White Rose, at home, overcame East Hunslet by three goals to two, and Rothwell P.C. defeated Waterloo Main (Templenewsam) by four goals to nil. Methley Per. were beaten by Benson Lane R.R. by two goals to one.

Rothwell Parish Church and Waterloo Main Colliery met at Rothwell. The first half of the game was uneventful, the play being of an even nature. Norris should, however, have scored for the homesters, missing an open goal. The interval came without either side having scored. In the second half Rothwell had the advantage of the wind, and the visitors, although they broke away several times, were beaten. The scoring was opened by Lunn, who obtained a beauty from a corner-kick, but the best of the four goals was got by Kale, who registered the second. The last two were scored within the last five minutes. The third was the result of a "head in" by Hurst from a corner-kick. Lunn scored the fourth.

RUGBY NOTES

METHLEY V. ROTHWELL.

In the draw for the Leeds and District Cup Methley will meet Stanningley on the ground of the latter, and the winners will play Normanton in the next round. Rothwell will have as opponents Outwood Church, the match being at Outwood.

HALTON C.S. V. BURLEY LAWN.

In the second round of the Wynne Trophy Competition these teams met on the Headingley St. Michael's ground. Halton kicked-off up the slope and immediately set up an attack. Todd made a fine run, but was grassed just short of the line, and Sharp brought relief with a good kick. From the ensuing scrimmage Harrison rooted the ball by for Burley. After this Burley line, and Kenney securing, passed to Speight, who brushed aside all opposition, and scooped home. Eadon side had it all at the interval. On the restart the Halton forwards seemed irresistible, and Speight scored in a forward rush. This seemed to put the Lawners on their mettle, for they went away with a rush and seemed likely to score, but Kenney made a fine save. A, Killerby and Speight took the ball at their toes from their own 25, and dribbled down the field, Killerby being finely assisted by Speight, who also added the extra points. Halton were by 1 goal 3 tries (11 points) to 1 goal 1 try (5 points).

HALTON C.S. V. BEESTON HILL.

In the Leeds Schools' Rugby League this match was played at Halton on Saturday afternoon before a moderate crowd. Halton, who had played a cup-tie in the morning, were not expected to put up a big fight, but they surprised everybody. Halton kicked-off against a strong breeze, and Speight opened Halton's account with a nice try, and A. Killerby, Burnan, and Jackson each scored a try for the homesters, the last of which Speight converted. At half-time Halton were leading by 1 goal 4 tries (14 points) to nil. After the interval A. Killerby scored a try, and added the extra points. Speight scored two minutes, but nothing resulted. Both sides afterwards scored, and Fryston won by two goals to one.

ROTHWELL WHITE ROSE V. BEESTON HILL.

The second game in the Wynne Trophy Competition these teams met on the Headingley St. Michael's ground. Halton kicked-off up the slope and immediately set up an attack. Todd made a fine run, but was grassed just short of the line, and Sharp brought relief with a good kick. From the ensuing scrimmage Harrison rooted the ball by for Burley. After this Burley line, and Kenney securing, passed to Speight, who brushed aside all opposition, and scooped home. Eadon side had it all at the interval. BOWERS ALLERTON DEFEATED AT ROTHWELL.

Bowers Allerton and Rothwell White Rose having played a drawn game in the Rothwell Charity Cup Competition, the teams met again on Saturday, the venue being Rothwell. The visitors won the toss and played with a strong wind. Parfitt started for Rothwell, and gave to Appleby, who passed out to Abrams, only to see Bowers kick down the field. Ripley, however, intercepted and Holmes getting possession, gave to Wrigley, who made good headway. He passed to Hughes on the left, who put in a good centre, but the custodian had no difficulty in clearing. A high kick put Rothwell on the defensive, but they had no difficulty in holding the visiting forwards, although Masham and Harrison, did well for their side. The interval came with no score.

The visitors started well, but soon found a difficulty in playing against the wind. Then Rothwell attacked. Parfitt secured and went down the centre and passed to Abrams, but the forwards were unable to score, the wind being a difficulty. The half-backs tried long shots, but could not drive one straight. Once Appleby got through on his own, and there seemed to be a possibility of a goal, but he was brought down outside the penalty area. The free-kick was without result. Bowers Allerton defended manfully, but Parfitt eventually netted. After this Rothwell seemed to have all the play, except for one or two bursts which Bowers made, but Ripley and Dawson seemed to have no trouble in checking them. The home team put on the pressure shot but they could not add to their score, the Bowers Allerton custodian playing a fine game. Rothwell won by a goal to nil.

LEEDS SENIOR LEAGUE.

On Saturday afternoon Great Preston White Rose, at home, overcame East Hunslet by three goals to two, and Rothwell P.C. defeated Waterloo Main (Templenewsam) by four goals to nil. Methley Per. were beaten by Benson Lane R.R. by two goals to one.

THE GOLDEN HOPE

By J. S. FLETCHER

Author of "The Threshing Floor," "Daniel Quayne," "The Harvest Moon," "When Charles the First was King," &c.

PRINCIPAL CHARACTERS:

LAURENCE WORKMAN, the inventor of a new motor for aeroplanes.

SIR JOHN BEDFORD, a partner in the Armadale engineering firm.

L'ABBE BREMOND, a close friend of Sir John's.

LILIAN DELOMOSNE, ward of Sir Herbert Armadale.

CHARITY WRAYE, a typist in Sir John Bedford's office.

CHAPTER XXIII.

When people who are strangers to each other chance to meet in the rooms of a mutual friend who does not happen to be there to perform any ceremonies of introduction, there are apt to commence a series of speculations as to each other's identity and precise relationship to the absent one. Some such process immediately began in the mind of Miss Delomosne as soon as Charity and Dickie Wraye entered Laurence's room, though she was quite unaware as to who they were. That they must be intimate friends she felt sure, seeing that they had entered unannounced. She took in the healthy charm of Charity's personality with quick feminine subtlety, and she felt an involuntary and irrepressible pang of something not far removed, she cared not to analyse it, from jealousy. Who was this very good-looking young woman who came so freely into Laurence Workman's parlour? A sudden intuition flashed upon her. Could this be the girl he had mentioned at Canterbury —the girl whom he had wished to bring to lunch, and who he had pleaded a headache? Something told her that her surmise was correct—and the feeling that was half-curiosity, half-jealousy, deepened.

As for Charity, she had recognised Miss Delomosne at once—not as Miss Delomosne, but as the lady with whom she had seen Laurence walking in the old Cathedral City some weeks earlier. Quietly and unobtrusively as Miss Delomosne was dressed on this occasion, she was handsomer than ever. Her recent conversation with Laurence had brought colour to her cheek and light to her eye, and Charity recognised her for a beautiful woman and a woman of culture and power; and just as Miss Delomosne wondered what she was doing there, so she wondered why Miss Delomosne should be discovered in Laurence's sitting-room. She saw the two tea-cups on the table; she had evidently been having tea together, then? Well, why not? And yet, bravely as Charity always strove to repress any feeling of envy when she did not approve, she could not help a sense of something which she would not have dared to put into words for a king's ransom.

As for Dickie, he stared at Miss Delomosne with all his eyes. Charity, having advanced a step or two into the room and seen that it was occupied, was for beating a retreat, but Dickie held his ground and gazed at the occupant.

"He isn't here, Charity," he said. "He must be somewhere."

Miss Delomosne transferred her attention from Charity to Dickie. "Mr. Workman has gone round to a telegraph-office," she said. "He said that he would only be a few minutes. Won't you sit down?"

To Charity this simple invitation seemed to imply some sort of proprietorship in Laurence and his belongings. She felt as if she could not sit down in Miss Delomosne's presence that seemed to go through one.

"Thank you," she said, "but my brother and I have some news for Mr. Workman which we must give him at once. I know where the nearest telegraph-office is; we will go and send him."

She made a formal inclination of her head, and drew Dickie out of the room after her.

"Who is Charity?" asked Dickie, as they descended the stairs.

"I don't know, Dickie," she answered, "but I believe it is Sir Herbert's ward, Miss Delomosne."

"Very likely come to hear how Groot is," said Dickie. "She—here's Mr. Workman."

Laurence at that moment came bursting through the door. Having been as far as the corner of the square another idea had struck him, and he had darted back to discuss it with Miss Delomosne. At sight of the sister and brother he bounded up the stairs. Charity noticed his obvious excitement.

"You have come to see me?" he exclaimed. "Yes—and you have some news? I see it—come upstairs again. I am sorry I was out. I see you have news of something."

"Yes," said Charity. "But," she went on, hesitatingly, "you—there is a lady in your sitting-room."

Laurence impatiently motioned them upstairs. "Yes—yes!" he said. "But it is only Miss Delomosne. Come upstairs—you can tell me what it is there—she will not mind."

Then, to Charity's mind, argued more proprietorship on Miss Delomosne's part. Instead of going back to the sitting-room she remained where she was.

"You do not know what it is that Dickie and I have to tell you," she said. "We wish to speak to you privately about Sir John Bedford."

Laurence again motioned them to ascend the stairs. "Yes—yes, of course!" he exclaimed. "That's just what I expected, claimed. "That's just what I expected. That's just what Miss Delomosne came to tell me about. Let us go upstairs—I should like her to hear what you have to say. Go up—go up!"

This time there was no denying Laurence's impelling persistence—he literally forced the sister and brother up before him and shepherded them into his room.

"Miss Delomosne," he said, "these are two very dear friends of mine—Charity and Dickie Wraye. They have come to tell me something about this man Bedford, just as you came. Have no fear, my friends, speak out—you can scarcely tell me anything worse than I know or will surprise me more than what I have already heard."

"Tell Mr. Workman what you saw this afternoon, Dickie," said Charity.

Dickie told his story briefly and clearly. Charity corroborated it with her account of what she had seen from the clink-room window. Laurence, either biting his lips or pulling fiercely at his moustache, listened to both in silence, occasionally exchanging a significant glance with Miss Delomosne.

"But the keys—the keys!" he exclaimed at last. "No one had the keys but myself."

Charity told him then of what she had seen on Sir John Bedford's desk that morning. Laurence listened to her with eyes full of amazement. And suddenly his face became illumined with the realisation of a truth—bitter pill though it was, but a truth.

"Good Heavens!" he burst out, striking the fist of one hand into the palm of the other. "That's Groot! I left the keye with him for one night—the night I dined with that villain at the Carlton. Groot! The very man I trusted above everybody—the man who'd worked at my side for nearly three years—the man who knew nearly everything about my work—everything but the supreme secret! Groot! I wouldn't have believed it if I hadn't been forced to—forced to!"

He stamped up and down the room for some minutes with such anger depicted in every movement that none of them dared to speak to him. Suddenly he began to laugh.

"And here I've been all the afternoon expending any amount of sorrows and regrets and sympathies over a man who tried to rob me!" he exclaimed, bitterly. "I didn't tell Miss Delomosne, that Groot met with a very serious accident to-day, and that he is lying unconscious at the hospital. Some people could say it was a judgment on him!"

"I am sorry to hear it," said Miss Delomosne. "It might have been very useful to you at this juncture."

"Useful!"

"Certainly. Because, since Groot is the only mechanic you have ever employed regularly, Groot must have sold his knowledge of what you were doing in the first place," she answered.

"I remember that Groot was given to me by Francis Armadale," said Laurence, slowly, "I had asked Francis Armadale for such a man, and he strongly recommended him—himself and his fellow-conspirators," he said. "Now, Mr. Workman, what are you going to do?"

Laurence again began pacing up and down the room.

"What I'm afraid of," he said at last—"what I'm really afraid of is Sabatier's skill. I have, of course, heard a tremendous lot of him, and I know a little of his personal history. If Sabatier has fathomed my secret from what he knows of my papers I do not know what I shall do, because he will in all probability have immediately communicated his intelligence, provisionally, to the government to which he wishes to sell it."

"I do not think so," said Miss Delomosne. "As I said this evening, I don't think Sabatier has succeeded, up to now, because if he and Sir John wouldn't have wanted to buy you."

"Ah, yes!" said Laurence. "But, you see, I don't trust Sabatier! If he'll join in a plot to rob me, he'll rob his fellow-conspirators. Sabatier holds the key of the situation—they can do nothing without him. They know nothing—none of them, unless it's Bremond—and you say he's a mere financier. His Sabatier—doubtless that I'm afraid of!"

"Mr. Workman, sir," said Dickie, "why can't you get your machine finished first? I think I could do what Groot's done, sir."

Laurence gave the boy an affectionate pat on the shoulder. "I know you would do your best, Dickie," he said. "But even if Groot had not met with an accident, or if he and I Bedford for being concerned in the theft of my papers, but how am I going to prove it? I haven't a shred of evidence except your word, Miss Delomosne, and you never saw the papers."

"No," she said, "I never saw them, and he would deny that he had ever mentioned them to me."

"And still there's Sabatier!" exclaimed Laurence. "Ah! if only——"

At that moment the landlady came upstairs with a telegram, which Laurence at once opened. He read the message and threw the flimsy paper aside.

"Groot's dead," he said. "Died without recovering consciousness. I can't feel sorry just now. He worked well for me, though, and I must attend to his funeral. And to-night I can't think of anything—I'm weary." Charity rose and motioned to her brother. "Dickie," she said. "We must go."

"And I, too," said Miss Delomosne.

Laurence went downstairs with them and said good-night to all three in such an absent-minded fashion that they saw he was thinking earnestly about something else. He asked Dickie to meet him in the morning at the usual time, and then, without another word, turned into his lodgings again, quite forgetting to ask Miss Delomosne if he could get her a cab. The brother and sister went in one direction; she went in another after receiving some instructions from Charity. And as she moved out of the square a man emerged from the shadow of the trees which stood in its centre and followed her at a little distance.

CHAPTER XXIV.

Before Miss Delomosne had reached that end of the square which she must pass through in order to reach one of the main roads that transect that part of London she suddenly turned, and began to retrace her steps. Not until she was now followed-ing her some ten or twelve yards behind was obliged to dodge into a convenient side-passage in order to avoid meeting her face to face beneath a gas lamp. She increased her pace as she went back by the way she had come; and the man, emerging from his temporary retreat, had to hurry in order to keep her in sight. Presently she began to run, and, passing the house from which she had just emerged, she ran on until, at the further side of the square, she caught sight of Charity and Dickie Wraye. When within a few yards of them she called "Miss Wraye!" and the brother and sister turned, and, recognising her, came slowly back. Seeing them meet, the man in pursuit stopped, looked about him as if he were seeking some particular house, and finally turned round and sauntered back a little way. When he turned round again the two girls and the crippled boy were walking slowly away in the opposite direction. Then the man followed once more, watching them.

Charity and Dickie were round-eyed with surprise to see Miss Delomosne running after them. They looked their astonishment.

"I—I want to speak to you both," she said, getting her breath. "An idea has occurred to me—I am sure you can help. Couldn't we go somewhere where we can talk?"

"We will go up to our rooms," said Charity, who felt that this woman had something important to propose, and was both anxious and curious to hear what it was. "They are close by, Miss Delomosne, but you will have to climb some stairs."

Dickie hastened forward to light the lamp, but arrived in the hall drawn the blinds and made the sitting-room what he considered properly prepared for guests, by placing the two easy-chairs one on each side of the hearth. He invited Miss Delomosne to occupy one of these with a polite bow.

"Thank you," said Miss Delomosne, giving him one of her brilliant smiles. "Now you will wonder what I have come back. But I felt that you are both deeply interested in Mr. Workman and his success, and that you have some influence over him."

Charity shook her head. "I don't think that we have any right to say that, Miss Delomosne," she said. "Mr. Workman is very kind to my brother, but——"

"You know, Charity," said Dickie, bluntly, "Mr. Workman always listens to anything you have to say."

"Well, this is what I feel," said Miss Delomosne, charitably avoiding any notice of Dickie's last remark. "Whatever may think, Mr. Workman and his success are in danger—great danger—so long as he remains working in that place at Armadale's. He would be foolish to leave it—at once."

"But there's the—the machine, ma'am!" exclaimed Dickie.

"Cannot remove it," said Miss Delomosne. "I gather you have seen it. Is it something very massive?"

"No, ma'am—it's something very light," answered Dickie. "It's—but, then, I ought not to speak of it."

"Nor need you, except in general terms. Could it be moved on, say, an ordinary dray or trolley?" asked Miss Delomosne.

"Oh, yes, ma'am—it's nothing but a framework of light wood, thin steel, and silk," replied Dickie. "I—why, I believe I could lift it!"

"Well, then, Mr. Workman can easily get it away—at once," said Miss Delomosne. "To tell you the truth, Miss Wraye, now that Sir John Bedford has keys of that workshop, whatever is in it is not safe. Now, I gather that you know this district—can't you think of somewhere, where or with whom Mr. Workman would be safe until he can complete his work?"

But Charity shook her head. Although she had lived thereabouts for some years she knew little more of the district than the way to Armadale's and back. Whenever she had a holiday, she and Dickie escaped from their immediate surroundings and went elsewhere—even if it were for only an hour or two into Greenwich Park. And she confessed her inability to think of any place where Laurence and his machine could find a harbour of refuge.

Suddenly Dickie, who had been stumping up and down the room, cracking the joints of his fingers, running his fingers through his hair, and indulging in other exercises indicative and illustrative of intense thought, uttered a loud exclamation expressive of great glee.

"Hooray!" he cried. "Hooray! I know, Charity, I know, ma'am, where Mr. Work-can go with his machine and be as safe—as safe as anything! Hooray!"

"Where, Dickie, where? How can you know?" asked his sister.

"I do know," he asserted. "And so will you when I tell you. Captain—Uncle Waple's barn!"

Charity nodded her head with a smile of understanding. "That's clever of you, Dickie," she said. "Yes, he would have plenty of room and quiet there, and if Uncle Waple knew what was going on he would take care that no one came within fifty yards of the barn while Mr. Workman was there."

Miss Delomosne looked from one to the other. "But where—is this—what are you talking about?" she asked.

"My brother is speaking of a large barn which stands in the yard at Canterbury," replied Charity, who used to play in it when we were children—it has been empty for years now. Our uncle, Mr. Waple, knows Mr. Workman—it was in his house that Mr. Workman's papers were stolen. I was there at the time."

Ah, then she is the Canterbury young lady! thought Miss Delomosne to herself. Aloud she said: "Come, both of you—we will go to Mr. Workman at once; he must be persuaded—no, made to take his machine to your uncle's this very night!"

She must have a wonderful power of persuasion over him! thought Charity, who was not quite so certain as Miss Delomosne seemed to be. But she at once rose to carry out her visitor's suggestion, further urged thereto by Dickie, who was impatient to be with Laurence again. All three left the flat and hurried away once more to Laurence's lodgings. Arrived there, they wasted no time in sending the landlady upstairs to announce their arrival, and then, headed by Dickie, and walked into the sitting-room without ceremony.

The inventor sat at his table, a picture of utter dejectedness. His elbows were propped on the table; his cheek was sunk in his hands; his eyes were angry. He glared at them as if they were enemies.

"Now, Mr. Workman," said Miss Delomosne, advancing upon him with decision, "while you—positively for the first time in your life, I should think!—have been sitting here, you have been doing, which is very bad for you, we three have been holding a committee meeting to decide upon your best plan of action for the discomfiture of your enemies, and——"

Laurence made an impatient gesture. "I am not afraid of enemies!" he exclaimed. "It is if that man Sabatier has——"

"We've met Monsieur Sabatier and all his cleverness," said Miss Delomosne. "What you have got to do is to finish your work, and we have thought of a plan by which you can do it in safety."

Laurence sat up and stared at all three of them in turn.

"A magnificent plan. Mr. Workman!" said Dickie, who was nearly dancing with excitement.

"Listen to—what Miss Delomosne proposes," urged Charity.

Laurence, his hands through his hair and stood erect. "You're all very good to me," he said, humbly. "I confess that the mere mention of Sabatier knocked me over. You see, Sabatier——"

"We're tornin you to mention Sabatier until you have heard what we have to say!" commanded Miss Delomosne. "Sit down, Miss Wraye; sit down, Mr. Dickie, for I am going to sit down myself. Now, Mr. Workman, we want you to be both frank and explicit. So please to answer these questions. First: Supposing you can work in a place of perfect safety—and you must really recognise that you are no longer safe at Armadale's now that Sir John Bedford is desperate and has duplicate keys—how soon can you finish your work?"

"Well, by working very hard, and with Dickie to help me, in perhaps a week," answered Laurence.

"Then, next—and you must trust us in this—is your engine ready when your machine is ready, and can it be fitted quickly?"

"Yes," he replied, "it is ready. It's been ready a fortnight; but, of course, nobody but myself knows where it is. As a matter of fact, it's close by here—at least, it's in London. And it can be fitted in an hour."

"In an hour? Then there's really only an hour's really serious work?"

Laurence smiled. "To tell you the real truth," he said, "the machine and the engine don't matter a bit—at least, only relatively. The machine is simply a biplane; the engine is a motor. The secret lies in the power which drives the motor. It's a chemical secret. That's what I'm afraid of Sabatier having discovered."

"Once more, never mind Sabatier. Now, then, when the whole is ready to whom is it to be offered?"

"Why, to the British Government, of course!" answered Laurence. "What's what I came over for. I'm an Englishman."

"Have you had any negotiations?"

"Yes, I have," replied Laurence. "Nobody knows that I have, but I have. As soon as I am ready two officials will test the truth of my theory."

"Capital!" said Miss Delomosne. "All that is wanted now is speed and decision—and instant action. Mr. Workman, you must get your machine away from Armadale's to-night."

"To-night!"

"To-night—this very night. I judge you have the right of entry to the works at any time, night or day!"

"I have, certainly."

"Very well. I understand from Mr. Dickie here that your machine is very light, and can be carried on a light drag or waggon!"

"Yes, Dickie is quite right," he replied.

"Would it go on a large waggonette!"

"Oh, yes—easily."

"Very well. Now, listen. You must go round to the nearest livery-stables and order a two-horsed waggonette to be at the gates of Armadale's at, say, midnight. It's only half-past ten, so you have plenty of time. You must have it driven into your workshop, and you and Mr. Dickie and the driver must pack the machine and whatever you want on it. Then you must drive with it to Mr. Waple's, at Canterbury."

Laurence uttered an exclamation of astonishment, not unmixed with admiration. He was about to speak, but Miss Delomosne went on.

"Mr. Waple, it seems, has a barn—now empty—in which you can complete your labours," she said. "And, as for security, Miss Wraye tells me that if her uncle is taken into your confidence he will see that no one ever comes within fifty yards of his barn while you are working there."

Laurence leaped to his feet and smote his hands together. "Splendid! Grand!" he almost shouted. "Ah! the cool head of Mr. Waple—a regiment of Bedfords would not get past him if he stood before them! It is finished—we will do it. It is—it is!" And he looked hard at Charity.

"No—it was Dickie's," said Charity.

"I remembered the barn," said Dickie, modestly. "It is a big barn."

"And you are a big man for thinking of it," laughed Laurence, to whom all his old cheerfulness seemed to have come back. "Come, we will get to work at once. Dickie, you're round to the livery-stables and make my arrangements—we will not wait until twelve o'clock for a start. And, Miss Delomosne, my stout horsee, a good tarpaulin sheet—that is all we want."

"If Dickie is to go," said Charity, "he will want a coat and a rug—he should also have some supper. You—you must see to Dickie," she went on, seeing signs of impatience on her brother's part. "Unless you are taken care of you will run down, Mr. Workman when you get there!"

"Your sister is right," said Miss Delomosne. "Dickie, you should consult your landlady provide some hot supper for Mr. Dickie while you are arranging about the waggonette! Then he will be all the better fitted to be of assistance."

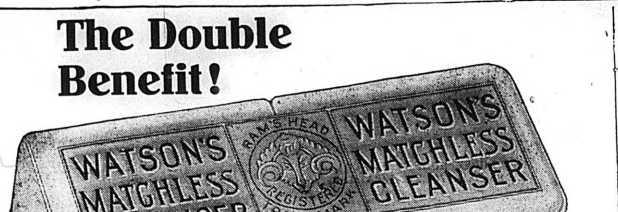
"Yes, yes!" answered Laurence, who was already bustling about collecting papers, notebooks, and instruments, and thrusting them into a bag. "I will ring for her and give her orders. Eat, Dickie, and then come round to the works. I shall leave the proper instructions for your admittance."

Charity stopped him as he was about to ring the bell. "No, please," she said. "Dickie and I will go home, and as soon as he has had some supper he and I will come round. We won't trouble you, Laurence, as I know best how to look after him. Come, Dickie, do as I tell you."

With that she swept Dickie who protested volubly that he would soon be down at the works) away, leaving Laurence and Miss Delomosne alone.

As she watched him bustling about a sudden resolution filled her. "I go with you to the works and help you," she said.

He turned and gazed at her in amazement. "You?" he exclaimed.



"Why not? I am young and strong—much stronger than that poor boy with his big, faithful eyes," she answered. "I have plenty of intelligence to do whatever you tell me to do. No one will know me. I have only been inside the works once in my life. I shall have a heavy veil."

Laurence snapped the catch of his bag. "Very well!" he said. "Come along, then."

Leaving the house together they walked sharply away to the end of the square. And the man who had watched Miss Delomosne since she first left Laurence's lodgings came once more out of the shadows and cautiously followed them.

DISTRICT BREVITIES.

The Skyrack magistrates are not busy just now. A good sign, eh?

• • •

It is stated that a colliery is to be established in the Newthorpe district.

• • •

Barkston, which has a population of 239, has two ale-houses, and Biggin, with 127 inhabitants, has one.

• • •

Several of the Templenewsam allotment-holders are like a clock that loses time. They are behind with their rent.

• • •

Good advice! "If the farmer is to be successful," says Mr Thomlinson, of Tadcaster, "he must depend on himself."

• • •

"I have neither horse nor habitation so I leave myself in your care," said a prisoner, charged with begging, to the Skyrack magistrates on Tuesday.

• • •

A fine record! Mr H. Eggleshaw, headmaster of Selby Abbey Church National Schools, has completed 40 years' service in that capacity. He is conductor of the Abbey Church choir.

• • •

Not yet! In Kippax and Allerton there is much speculation as to a labour candidate for Osgoldcross, but the Miners' Association have not come to any decision on the question.

• • •

Lady Dorothy Wood, sister of the Earl of Onslow, and wife of the Hon. E. F. Wood, M.P., son and heir of Viscount Halifax, was the recipient of birthday congratulations on Saturday.

• • •

The Conservatives in Rothwell district are plucky. Despite the large majorities Mr Fred Mallett, M.P., has obtained, they are to put a candidate forward for the Normanton Division again.

• • •

Why do not the members take advantage of it? The purchasing branch of Tadcaster Chamber of Agriculture lass year did not do a large trade. Tadcaster has evidently something to learn from Sherburn.

• • •

It was reported at Hunslet Guardians' meeting that a man who had been removed to an asylum had invested in shares in a Leeds picture house, bought a watch for a nurse, and purchased a typewriter.

• • •

Sherburn farmers are on the right tack. Their co-operative purchases have increased from £1,700 to £3,300 in a year. A number of farmers in the district, however, are not members of the club. How's that?

"It was an unfortunate meeting," said Mr A. Wilkey, who appeared for a defendant at the Skyrack Court on Tuesday, summoned for riding a motor cycle on the footpath. While doing so the defendant encountered a man in blue.

Forty years have sped since the Bramham Moor Hunt had a meet at Harewood Park, the occasion being when the late Mr George Lane Fox (grandfather of the present Master) received a presentation of plate from the hands of the present Earl of Harewood's father.

• • •

A youngster's view of the fever hospital! Two little girls were overheard in a certain street in Rothwell the other night discussing their experiences while in the fever hospital. "It was all right," said one, "but it was different from being at home. You can only have one helping at meal times."

• • •

At the hunting meet on Monday at Harewood House, where Prince and Princess Arthur of Connaught were guests at the week-end, the Prince, smiling and debonair, was a conspicuous figure in the house group, but for a long time the gentle little lady by his side so modestly dressed in pale blue cloth, was not recognised as his bride, the Princess. Her Royal Highness takes her sport in a dog-cart; so far, to the disappointment of Yorkshire hunting folk, she has only been out to hounds on wheels.

• • •

At Harewood Park, we are told, the hunting men and women to the manner born are a host of fifty or sixty headed by the full warpaint of their hunting kit—men in scarlet and buckskin, with the inevitable top-boots and tall hats, and the ladies in the latest habit habits. The less dared hunting wear, by the by, the long flowing skirt appears to have been discarded in favour of a more workmanlike gathered-up skirt, which, when the rider is unmounted, falls to the full length of top-boots. Most of the ladies, one also noted, wore the low wide-brimmed bowler which is now "de rigeur."

• • •

Anglers have reored the waters at Roundhay for 22 years, and have always kept them well stocked with fish. Only this season they have spent well on to £100 in restocking with dace, roach, chub, and perch. The use of these is restricted to their members, but is open to the public, and the splendid sport obtained has helped to make the park a most popular resort. In all the 22 years of their tenancy there has not been a single complaint against any of their members for unsportsmanlike behaviour, and there is little fear that anything unseemly will occur in the future to spoil so good a record. It is proposed that the park fishing should be open on Sundays from sunrise to 12.30 o'clock.

Church Fenton has a population of 581, and it has four pubs.

Garforth and Rothwell folks must be getting ready. The Urban Council elections are on Saturday, April 4th.

• • •

The prosecution of boys by the N.E.R. Co. for trespassing on the line at Micklefield should be a warning to others.

• • •

It is stated in Shadwell there are only nine houses rented at under 10s. a week to let, and in Roundhay only one.

• • •

Need for houses! Seacroft, it is said, has only one house rented at less than 10s. a week to let, and Osmondthorpe has none.

• • •

Three townships—Little Fenton (population 75), Lead (40), and Huddlestone-cum-Lumby (222) —at Sherburn division have no licensed house.

• • •

Saxton, with a population of 202, has three licensed houses, an average of one to 97 inhabitants. This is the lowest figure in Sherburn division.

• • •

Hear, hear? The Chairman of the Skyrack Bench says that clubs should be placed under police supervision. And why not have an hour for closing?

• • •

A debt of £787 on the premises is a heavy handicap for the Primitive Methodists of Garforth. The church is a nice one, but it is too large for the congregation.

Mr C. B. Lamb, the new President of Tadcaster Chamber of Agriculture, is a local magistrate, and Mr. M. Thomlinson, the new vice-president, is the well-known auctioneer.

What has Mr Lane Fox, M.P., to say? Speaking at Tadcaster Chamber of Agriculture Mr Midgley said: "A Member of Parliament was very little more than an automatic machine."

• • •

Barkston Ash Liberals' loss! By the death at Grange-over-Sands, on Saturday, of Mrs Dale, wife of the Rev. John Dale, Unitarian minister of Selby, the Liberals have lost an energetic and enthusiastic worker.

• • •

Sherburn's figures are quite as good as those of Tadcaster. In the former, with a population of 9,000, the convictions were 42, and in Tadcaster district, with a population of over 6,000, 32 persons were proceeded against under the Liquor Laws last year.

• • •

A Hunslet Guardian, in proposing that the wages of the superintendent nurse be increased, said if they could raise the salary of the shoemaker, who only looked after the feet, surely they ought to act similarly to one who looked after the body. Needless to say the proposition was carried.

• • •

The mendicant, arrested at Selby, told the magistrates he had only resorted for a "drink of water." Supt. Stafford said he was a genuine "Weary Willie." "When did you work last," asked the magistrate, "Oh, a long time ago," said the truthful tramp. He is now doing a month's "hard."

Cookers needed! Mrs Hartley, who has been post mistress at Marston for eight years, has just resigned office. For between forty and fifty years her father, John Horner, was sub-postmaster at Long Marston, and was assisted in the work by his daughter for some eight years before the appointment was given to her. HUNSLET RURAL DISTRICT COUNCIL

HALTON SEWAGE WORKS

TRAM TO HALTON—CORPORATION CLIMB DOWN.

OUTBREAK OF FIRE AT OULTON.

COMPLAINTS FROM OULTON AND WOODLESFORD

The monthly meeting of the Hunslet Rural District Council was held at the Council Offices, Lock Street, Hunslet, on Thursday afternoon. Mr. I. Thomas (Chairman) presiding. The other members present were Mr P. S. Marsden (vice-chairman), Mr G. Armitage, Mr W. Verity, and Mr D. Hargreaves, with the Clerk (Mr W. B. Pindar), the medical officer (Dr Buck), the sanitary inspectors (Mr P. C. Higgins and Mr W. Whitehead), and the surveyor (Mr Nuttall).

Dr Buck presented his report which showed that during the past four weeks there had been 10 births in the district and eight deaths. During the same period there cases of infectious disease had been notified, those being two of scarlet fever and one of erysipelas. The scarlet fever cases had occurred in Templenewsam and Middleton. Since the last meeting of the Council, said the medical officer, there had not been one case of scarlet fever from Oulton and Woodlesford. In addition to the above cases, five cases of tuberculosis had been notified.

The report was considered satisfactory.

The lease of the land at Halton sewage works was ordered to be sealed, and in connection with the proposed extension the Clerk read a letter from the Local Government Board stating that with regard to the application made by the Council for sanction to borrow £3,000 to carry out the scheme the Board considered it desirable that a small deputation of the Council should meet the Local Government Board for the purpose of discussing the matter with the Board's engineering advisers. It was decided to comply with the request.

A letter was read from the Town Clerk of Leeds, stating that the Council were now prepared to give the undertaking asked for in the Council's letter of January 19th with regard to the proposed extension of the tramway to Halton, and that it would be completed in two years from the date of the passing of the Bill.

The letter asked for the Council's formal consent.

A resolution was passed giving the necessary consent.

Mr W. Whitehead presented his report, and the complaint made by the Oulton-with-Woodlesford Parish Council about the irregular cleaning out of ashpits in the district was discussed.

Mr Whitehead, said the Clerk, reported that the ashpits had been cleaned out at least every month, and dates were read which proved the statement of the inspector.

The Chairman remarked that he did not think they had any cause for complaint.

Mr Whitehead said that owing to the district being a mining one there was an accumulation of ashes in the ashpits, and in some cases the accumulation was greater than in others. However, the pits were regularly cleared out.

Dr Buck agreed, and said he had nothing to complain of.

The matter then dropped.

In making his report to the Council, Mr P. C. Higgins referred to the fire at Oulton, which gutted the premises of Mr Moss, pork butcher, on the Aberford Road, on Saturday night. The fire, his report said, occurred about 10.40 p.m. and he was brought out, he being in bed at the time, and, in his hurry, he "jumped" into his evening clothes, which were ruined by the fire and water. Owing to the lack of appliances and no provision having been made for any outbreak of fire they were unable to do anything effective, and the place was gutted. The report also stated that there was no organization for dealing with fires, the pipes were in an unsatisfactory state, the only pipe available being one used for flushing the sewers. Mr Higgins recommended that proper appliances be obtained.

Dr Buck said his premises were in danger of catching fire, and owing to the inability to get the key of the Parish Council's premises, they were unable to get to work for about three-quarters of an hour.

Mr Armitage explained that a messenger went to Mr Steele's house for the key, but as Mr Steele was away from home, Mrs Steele would not give the key to anyone but an official of the Parish Council. They were unable to find an official that night.

The Clerk said they ought to have a brigade like the one at Templenewsam. It had attended three fires in about five years, and in each case they had got the fire out before the Leeds brigade came upon the scene. He pointed out that in some cases a small brigade might not be able to do anything effective, yet it was like first aid—they could perform a service until something better came along.

It was finally decided that the Clerk should ascertain what was required and submit the cost to the next meeting of the Council.

The Clerk raised the question of Mr Higgins' special suit, and it was decided to write the insurance company on the matter.

Mr Armitage raised a point about the use of call offices. Mr Moss, whose shop was on fire, he said, was going to get into communication with the Leeds brigade, and went to the Midland Hotel, which is a public call office, but owing to it being past ten o'clock the licensee dare not open the door.

Mr Hargreaves said all call offices, as a rule, closed at eight o'clock.

Mr Nuttall also presented his report, and the complaint from the Oulton-with-Woodlesford Parish Council about the dangerous condition of Flet Lane, Oulton, owing to a number of flagstones being left on the footpath was considered.

Mr Hargreaves said the road in Fleet Lane was as bad as the path.

The Clerk: It is not the condition of the road complained of, but the flagstones left about by the Rothwell Gas Co.

Mr Nuttall suggested that the Council do the work and charge it to the Gas Company, as the manager had been approached and nothing had so far been done.

This course is to be adopted by the Council.

The complaint of the Oulton Parish Council about the moving of a lamp in Rhodes Lane, Oulton, was not upheld, it being considered not necessary to remove the lamp.

On Wednesday evening a public meeting and concert will be held in Aberford National Schools, and an address will be delivered by Mr E. H. Foster, prospective Liberal candidate for the Division. See advert.

SUPPER.—On Thursday evening (by the invitation of the Rev. W. M. C. and Mrs Clarke), the senior members of the Monk Fryston Church choir were entertained to supper at the vicarage. Afterwards the evening was spent in a convivial manner.

A BOSTON SPA ACTION.

WELL-KNOWN RESIDENT SUED AT TADCASTER

At the Tadcaster County Court on Wednesday—before his Honour Judge Templer—Jas. Burns, motor and agricultural engineer, of Clifford, Boston Spa, sued Colonel N. T. Nickalls, of Boston Hall, Boston Spa, for £6 9s. in respect of repairs to a motor car, use of a driver, and hire of a car. The items included hire of a car from Boston Hall to Carlton Towers (£2 6s.) and man driving car to York and back from 9.30 p.m. on February 8th to 2.30 a.m. (10s.).

There was a counter-claim in respect of the last item, Colonel Nickalls claiming £2 9s. for damage to a tyre through the negligence of the plaintiff's servant.

Mr E. F. Hirt, solicitor, Boston Spa, appeared for Mr Burns.

Colonel Nickalls conducted his case in person, and told his Honour that he disputed the account because he thought two of the items—those relating to the journeys to Carlton Towers and York—were excessive.

His Honour: How much do you think would be fair for the journey to York and back.

Colonel Nickalls: I think 7s. 6d. should be enough for the man driving it. It was my car, Mr Burns said the journey was at night, and he charged 2s. an hour after 8 p.m.

His Honour: What about the £2 6s.? Where is Carlton Towers?

The Registrar: It is near Selby, and a little over twenty miles.

Mr Burns said he justified the charge of 1s. per mile on the outward journey, sixpence per mile on the return, and 3s. an hour for waiting. The Colonel paid the same price for the journey a year ago.

Colonel Nickalls: I think 3s. an hour for waiting is excessive.

His Honour: The only thing is that he does not get a chance of taking another fare.

Colonel Nickalls: He would have been very lucky to make 3s. an hour. The car was driven into York by Burns' man, and about 3½ miles from York the tyre burst.

His Honour: My tyres are always bursting. How do you think it was negligence?

Colonel Nickalls: The man was taking a party. He could have got on to York and got the car seen to, so as not to damage the tyre, which was a good one. He could have got a Stepney. Colonel Nickalls added that he had paid £4 into Court. The tyre, which was a back one, had only been run 1,000 miles out of a possible 5,000. He gave £6 or £7 for it.

Mr Burns said there were no spanners on the car, and it was about 10 o'clock on the Saturday night. His man took out the tube so as not to damage it, and drove to York on the flat tyre.

His Honour: Colonel Nickalls does not object to that, but he says it was driven back home without being repaired.

Mr Burns: After the tyre was burst it was scrap—it could not have been repaired.

Colonel Nickalls: I am running on the same car a tyre that I burst, and I ran carefully five miles into Wakefield after it burst. I then had it mended and I am running on it still. The tube was the only thing I needed to mend.

His Honour: I should think it would have been better for the man to leave it at York.

Mr Burns: The man did the best he could.

Mr Hart (for Mr Burns): Is it not an ordinary proceeding to carry a Stepney on every car?

Colonel Nickalls: I very often run without one.

Is it not a usual thing?—I think it is.

Was there a Stepney on your car?—No.

Was there anybody on the car to give instructions to the driver?—No.

He was left to his own resources?—Yes. I think the reasonable thing would have been to have hired a taxi at York to come back in rather than spoil a good tyre.

But you see it arises through having no Stepney?—I say he ruined the tyre instead of either coming back in a taxi, or getting a new tyre from Wasling's, in York, where he knew I dealt.

After all, he would have been responsible for that and you might have repudiated responsibility.

Fred Gittings, the man who drove the car, gave evidence that this was not the first time he had driven it. He had been a driver for seven or eight years. He took the tube out and ran steadily to York.

His Honour: Was the tyre injured?—Yes, it was.

It was a good tyre?—Yes, until it burst.

I went to Watling's garage.

Wasn't it open?—Yes

Why didn't he repair it —I wanted to hire a Stepney, and he said he had not got one. I did not consider the tyre worth repair when it was burst.

Is that all you did? Didn't you go elsewhere?—I came back over Lendal Bridge, but Wales' garage was closed, and I came steadily home on that tyre.

How far was it?—Thirteen or fourteen miles.

I should think that was very injudicious. I do not think anybody could justify your coming home on a flat tyre.

His Honour said he would allow Colonel Nickalls £2 for the tyre, as he did not consider the man had taken complete steps to get the damage attended to.

Mr Hirt: Your Honour recognises that no Stepney was being carried?

His Honour: Yes, he is not a novice. I think his master is responsible. I give judgment for the plaintiff for the full amount of the claim, with costs, and award £2 on the counter-claim.

FUNERAL OF MRS DALE.—The funeral of the late Mrs Dale, wife of the Rev. John Dale, Unitarian minister, Selby, took place at Selby on Wednesday. Deceased passed away suddenly from heart failure at Grange-over-Sands. She had often spoken at her meetings and lectures, and was interested in the Selby Women's Liberal Association, several members of which were present at the funeral. The service was conducted by the Rev. W. Shanks, Leeds.

MR ROBT. ALLISON, OF SELBY.—Mr Robert Allison, farmer of Boodgate, Selby, died suddenly on Wednesday afternoon at the age of 71. He had been ailing for some time, but was able to be about on Wednesday morning. In the afternoon he was seized with sudden illness, and died on the couch downstairs. Until the election last spring he occupied a seat on the Selby Urban District Council, having been a member for several years. He had been engaged in farming about half a century, and occupied the Boodgate farm since 1882. When the farmers of the Selby district petitioned the North Eastern Railway Co. for increased facilities for the conveyance of their goods on the Cawood branch line, Mr Allison acted as organiser of the movement, and had some correspondence with the chief goods manager in relation to the matter. Mr Allison leaves a widow and four sons. One of his sons is a farmer at Gilberdyke.

LATE MR H. J. CLAYTON, ULLESKELF.

WELL-KNOWN HORTICULTURIST.

HEAD GARDENER AT GRIMSTON PARK FOR OVER 30 YEARS.

The death of Mr Henry James Clayton, which took place at his residence, Wharfe Bank House, Ulleskelf, on Sunday, will be greatly regretted by many. In the district Mr Clayton was known for many years, and more especially among the horticultural trade he was held in the highest esteem.

In gardening circles generally he was widely known, having been for over 30 years head gardener at Grimston Park, and by the Fielden family he was greatly trusted and respected.

Deceased, who was in his 71st year, was from his earliest years interested in horticulture in all its branches. Before coming to Grimston Park he was for a number of years head gardener to Lord Bolton in Hampshire. He served his apprenticeship in Lord Wharncliffe's gardens at Wortley, and afterwards worked as a journeyman gardener in the employment of the Duke of Wellington at Strathfieldsaye. He was a man of strong personality and shrewd judgment.

Mr Clayton retired a few years ago, and went to reside at Ulleskelf. He played an active part in the work of many horticultural bodies in the York district. He was a member of the Ancient Society of Florist, and took a great interest in its affairs, and probably would have been often on the list of office bearers, but for the fact that he lived some distance away.

In the interests of the Gardeners' Benevolent Institution and the Gardeners' Orphan Fund, he was also an active worker, and he was mainly instrumental in bringing into being the North of England Horticultural Society, which was started at Leeds some two years ago.

He was keenly interested in the affairs of the district in which he lived. He was a member of the Ulleskelf Parish Council and a school manager. He was a prominent Churchman, and was for over 30 years vicar's warden at Kirkby Wharfe, and superintendent of the Sunday School.

Mr Clayton was better known as a judge than as an exhibitor, though he had been prominent as an exhibitor at the Yorkshire Gala, one of his chief triumphs being the winning of the Veitch Memorial Prize for a collection of fruit. As a judge in practically every branch of horticulture he was in great demand, and he officiated on many occasions at the Yorkshire Gala and also at various district shows.

Up till about a fortnight ago Mr. Clayton seemed in his usual health, but about the beginning of last week he was laid aside with heart trouble, and was confined to bed until his death, which took place, as stated, on Sunday.

At the funeral at Kirkby Wharfe on Wednesday there was a very large and sympathetic congregation in the church, where the first portion of the service was conducted by the vicar (Rev. H. G. Metcalfe) and the Rev. R. Grimble (rural dean and vicar of Boston Spa), the former also taking the final portion of the service at the graveside. The principal mourners were—Mr H. Clayton, son (Blackpool), Mrs Woodhouse, daughter (Lincoln), Mr Woodhouse, son-in-law (Lincoln), Miss Clayton (daughter), Miss Nellie Clayton (daughter), Mr and Mrs W. Clayton (son and daughter-in-law), Mr and Mrs John Clayton (son and daughter-in-law), Mr Frank Clayton (grandson, York), and Mr Edgar Cooper (nephew, Accrington).

Amongst others present in the church to pay a last tribute of respect to the deceased were the Rev J E. Keets (vicar, Church Fenton), Mr W. Sykes, C.C. (Tadcaster), Mrs Sykes, Mr and Mrs Stephenson (Malton), Mr F. Williamson, Mr J. Copley, Mr G. Ashburn, Mr R. Clark (representing Ulleskelf Parish Council), Mr Mcintosh (York), Mr W. H. Hord, Mr John Pick, Mr R. Bellamy (Askham), Mr Richardson, Mr W Mosley (Bolton Percy), Mr John Mallett, Mr Knox, Mr J. Sadley, Mr Kendall (Kirkby Wharfe), Mr Eade (steward, Grimston Park), Mr J. Herbert, Mr Geo. Taylor, Mr John Ramsden, Mr H. S. Clayton, Mr E. Payne (Tadcaster), Mr Green (Tadcaster), Mr Wm. Richardson (York), Mr Bond (head gardener, Grimston Park), Mr B. H. Waterhouse, Mrs and Miss Gypson (Grimston Grange), Mr and Mrs Kendall, Mr and Mrs Steele, Mr E. Clarkson (Nun Appleton Hall), Mr W. Hill (Tadcaster), Mr A. Deighton (Church Fenton), Mr C. Rumbolt, Mr Daniel, etc. The bearers were Messrs W. Gardner, H. Smith, G. Moverley, R. Thompson, R. Peckitt, and A. Birdsall.

There were many beautiful wreaths, including the following: "From all members of the family"; Mrs Clayton, "In memory of a good father"; Mr and Mrs H. Clayton, "In loving remembrance"; from Mr and Mrs Woolhouse, Nelly and Ernest Clayton, Mr and Mrs John Clayton (Norwich), Mr and Mrs Willie Clayton, Mrs and the Misses Fielding, "With deepest sympathy"; Rev. and Mrs Metcalf (Kirkby Wharfe Vicarage), "In loving memory," from Mr and Mrs Clay, Tayler, Byram Park; the Church of England Men's Society, "With deepest regret," from the Sunday School teachers; the Sunday and Day school teachers and scholars, "In remembrance"; Mr and Mrs Macintosh, Bootham, York; Mr and Mrs Lidley, Kirkby Grange; Mr and Mrs Alsop, Leeds; Mr and Mrs Byford, Ulleskelf; the churchwardens and sidesmen, Kirkby Wharfe Church; Miss Jessie Clayton (niece), Mr and Mrs Gypson, Grimston Grange; Mr and Mrs Bound, Grimston Park; Mr and Mrs William Gardner, Ulleskelf; "With deep sympathy," from Mr and Mrs Tom Jewitt, Ulleskelf; Mr and Mrs Green, Tadcaster; "With deepest sympathy," from Mr and Mrs Hord, Everton, Bantry; and Mr and Mrs John Clayton, Norwich. Mr John Pick, of Ulleskelf, was the undertaker. The coffin was of unpolished oak, with brass furniture, and bore the inscription—"Henry James Clayton, fell asleep February 8th, 1914."

In the York Cup Competition Monk Fryston footballers played the Royal Garrison Artillery, and the match was drawn—one goal each.

WARRANT EXECUTED AFTER SIX YEARS.—In 1908 a warrant was issued against James Henry Senior, labourer, of Tadcaster, for deserting his wife and family, and leaving them chargeable to the poor law authorities. The prisoner was questioned the servants; they had never heard of such a thing.

"As a result of my deliberation, I decided on devoting one solid hour to the space covered by the curtains. The owner of the place was dead, the servants had been sent away, a caretaker was in charge. He had left me to make my examination alone. I determined to run the risk of a charge of damaging, and to slaughter the particular panel the curtains covered. I had already been over it inch by inch, feeling for any hidden spring—and failed. So I attacked it with a chopper, obtained from an adjacent woodshed. When the panel was reduced to so much matchwood and splinters, revealing the stone wall behind, I found a spring right enough—and I was filled with admiration for the cunning device of its concealment.

A SACRIFICE AND A MYSTERY.

The manor house at Elmfield was occupied by John Lawrence. His description of himself was "financier." Those who had suffered at his hands called him "bloodsucker." The truth was that he was a money-lender of a particularly avaricious, grasping kind. I acted as his secretary.

The French windows of the manor house stuly opened out on the lawn at the back of the house. In the act of crossing the latter I was suddenly startled by the sound of two pistol shots which came from the room. Dashing across the grass, I rushed into the study—to find my employer lying in a heap on the floor—dead!

Sound of the shots had attracted the attention of others, too. The servants stopped in tumbling over each other in their hasts to discover me beside the dead body. The hastily-summoned police were told of that, and the high words which had passed between Lawrence and myself earlier in the day. It is the business of the police to arrest people. They arrested me.

The quarrel, of which the officers were told, had arisen from the expression of my desires to be released from Lawrence's employment.

There was no actual need for me so leave, as I did, in the custody of the officers. It would have been quite easy to clear myself by pointing out the man concealed by the curtain. There was a reason why I did not do that. A big reason. He was the father of the girl I loved. The depth of her affection for him was well known to me. If he were convicted of so horrible a crime as murder her heart would have been broken.

There is little use in setting out details of my trial and sentence—such incidents lack novelty. Let it suffice that, in the finish, I lay in the condemned cell,

Ethel Leslie—the girl I loved—visited me, and her sweet faith in me remained. Then I had a huge surprise in the shape of a second visitor. Her father obtained an order and visited the prison. And this is what he said to me:—

"Fanny tells me that you are innocent. I would trust her judgment before all others in the world. She will break her heart if—if you die. That must be stopped. You will not find her a poor girl now. I told you if the market went up I should be all right again. It went up beyond my expectations. I can dower my daughter with five-and-twenty thousand pounds without impoverishing myself. You are—you must be—shielding some one. Speak the truth, for her sake—your own sake—for my sake."

"You—you can say that!" I could scarcely shape the words. "For your sake!"

I walked up to him. Almost unconsciously I seized him by the arms and twisted him round to the light. That way I could look into his face and eyes. I was astonished by what I saw. I read there nothing but surprise at my manner—no shadow of a trace of guilt.

In the half-darkness of the lamp-lit room I had mistaken the murderer for Leslie, and he told me now he was not out of London that night. There was need for action, and Leslie at once engaged a clever detective, and I was liberated. The detective told me how he unravelled the mystery.

"I went to the manor house and spent quite four hours there before I lighted on a solution of the problem. I believed, of course, what you had said of the presence of a man who resembled Mr Leslie."

"In the half-light it was quite easy to make a mistake."

"There was not a servant in the place who was even remotely like him, or could not account for his whereabouts at the moment of the murder. I ascertained, too, that the police had, before they left, examined the room thoroughly. That was a difficult matter to reconcile with your statement of the man hiding behind the curtain. But it had to be reconciled. Thoughts of a secret panel occurred to me, and the walls were, curiously enough, oak-panelled. I questioned the servants; they had never heard of

BREWERS' AND LICENSED VICTUALLERS' TRAVELLERS' BENEVOLENT ASSOCIATION

The County of York Brewers' and Licensed Victuallers' Travellers' Benevolent Association celebrated the 21st anniversary of the Society's formation by holding a banquet on Friday evening at the Albion Hotel, Briggate, Leeds. Mr Hugh Williams (district manager, John Dewar and Sons, Ltd.), presided, and Mr W. M. Charlton, Cardigan Arms, Leeds (vice-president of the Leeds Licensed Victuallers' Association) occupied the vice-chair. Others present included Councillor B. Roberts, Mr A. Edmanson, (Chairman of the Leeds Board of Guardians), Mr J. Scholes (President of the Leeds Licensed Victuallers' Association), and several honorary members of the Association.

The Chairman, who was received with hearty applause, in proposing "Success to the County of York Brewers' and Licensed Victuallers' Travellers' Benevolent Association," explained that the primary object of the Association was to provide a fund from which grants should be paid to any members of the Association, who, through adverse circumstances were constrained to ask for relief. The Association had been eminently successful in its object, and they had granted relief in many deserving cases, and notwithstanding the expenditure in this direction they had accumulated a fund of over £900, which was standing to their credit to-day. This was indeed very satisfactory, but they were not at all satisfied with their membership, which was about fifty. He felt sure that if the strong financial position of the Association, and the great benefits to be derived by its members, were more widely known and more thoroughly understood there would soon be a largely increased membership, and he appealed to all his hearers to make no opportunity of influencing possible members to join the Association.

Several new honorary members were proposed and accepted during the evening. Mr G. Seigwick, Mr C. Rhodes, Mr Thorpe, and Mr Stabler provided excellent musical entertainment.

WHIST DRIVE AND DANCE.—The annual whist drive and dance in aid of the funds of Monk Fryston and District Choral Society were held at the Concert Hall on Friday evening. There was a large number present, and the gathering was most successful. Ninety-six persons took part in the whist drive, under the able direction of Mr J. Wood. The prize-winners were:—Miss Sutton (South Milford) and Mr W. Berry (Monk Fryston), firsts; and Miss Dobson (South Milford) and Mr J. Powell (South Milford), seconds. The prizes were presented to the winners by the Rev. B. Hemsworth, M.A., J.P. Supper was afterwards partaken of, and the wants of the people were well looked after by members of the Society and other willing helpers. Subsequently dancing took place from 10 p.m. until 2.30 a.m. Mr Lightowler's Band (Brotherton) supplied the music, and the duties of M.C. were capably discharged by Messrs J. Wise and J. Kitching. After the expenses are paid there will be a satisfactory balance.

ROTHWELL & DISTRICT JOTTINGS.

In proposing to extend their tramway system pensioners and other old men should not be entitled to Halton, the Leeds Corporation declined to courageously. It is a penny-wise policy.

state a date for the completion of the undertaking, and at the time of the refusal I described it as a dodge. Of course, the District Council acting together, could compel the County Council, acting together, could compel to consent to the scheme without any more quickly and give better supervision to the guarantee, and the Corporation, having seen the work, but it is doubtful that this will effect any futility of attempting to proceed without the great improvement on the highways. Had it goodwill of the authorities concerned, have very been decided at the same time to employ only wisely "climbed down." They are to give a good men at a living wage the Council would guarantee that the tramway to Halton Institute have been warranted in expecting better results. will be laid within two years after they obtain If a man has the best material to work with he the necessary power from Parliament. will soon show what can be done.

The City Corporation might use the tramway extension as an argument for the annexation of Halton, many of whose residents work in the city, but they would not get the support of the inhabitants, who can they might have obtained local assistance had they been in a position to bargain with the residents as to carrying out the tramway project. Their guarantee to the District Council effectually disposes of that. In regard to annexation, the whole circumstances have been changed, and there is hope that the outside districts will now enjoy a lengthy period of peace. The efficient administration of the county is a new argument that will have great weight, and the removal of Mr. John Burns from the Local Government Board to another "sphere of usefulness" may prove a good thing for small areas, because the Right Hon. John was rather inclined to favour the pretensions of big Corporations. The new President's opinion on this question is unknown, but he starts with a clean sheet, and I should not be surprised were he the recipient of a hint from his chief to safeguard the interests of the smaller authorities.

What a change has come over Taddester Guardians and District Council. In the old days, when it was proposed to increase the salary of an official, however deserving, there was always a strong opposition, consisting generally of farmer representatives, and they frequently succeeded in upsetting the calculations of committees. Now the recommendations of committees are accepted without much discussion. It may be that members recognise that higher salaries must now be paid, or that they are so satisfied with those who serve them that they are anxious to show appreciation of their services. Whatever the reason, the fighting spirit of the so-called economists is no more, and the meetings are somewhat tame compared with those of a dozen years ago.

Kippax, although surrounded by acres of fields, is in the unenviable position of being unable to get a recreation ground. The inhabitants are, for the most part, working folks—they have no aristocratic leanings, otherwise they might have a golf course—but they need recreation—cricket, football, bowls, etc., yet the only land they can obtain is a narrow plot in the churchyard—useful only when life's game is ended. No landowner—like the late Hon. E. L. Wood at Halton or Mr. Lane Fox at Bramham—will endow the parish with an acre or two of land, and the villagers are thus deprived of all facilities for recreation.

Now, if Kippax folks will agree to support a recreation ground scheme they will, I think, achieve their purpose. The parish meeting must first give directions to the Parish Council, and if the latter were unable to rent a field they could have a look round the parish and fix upon the best and most suitable and buy it. Perhaps the owner would not sell, but he could be compelled to. It is for the Parish Council to act first, and if they can rent or lease a field all trouble will be at an end, but if they fail they must go to the ratepayers and ask for further instructions. It is a sorry state of affairs when no landowner in the district is sufficiently sympathetic as to meet the needs of the youth of the place.

Long ago—centuries since—every town and village was supposed to have a "green," whereon archery and all manner of sports were practised, but these recreation grounds have all completely disappeared that no trace of them now is left in the majority of places. Seacroft has a valuable "green," and Crossgates has a foot or two of turf which bears a similar designation, but what of Kippax, Garforth, Milford, Sherburn, Tadcaster, and Wetherby. If such greens did exist one wonders into whose possession they have wandered, and what purpose they are now serving?

In order that they might not be charged with absolute negligence, should another outbreak of typhoid fever again occur, the Garforth Urban Council caused a large number of ashpits in the infected neighbourhood to be turned, yet they had no grounds whatever for believing that the ashpits had any connection with the disease. Indeed, it was stated at last meeting that opinion has been expressed that a "carrier" was the cause of the trouble, but the Council—not very wisely, in my view—prevented the finding out of this by declining the assistance of the county experts. It was suggested that the suspected "carrier" had left the district, and, for the sake of the residents, I hope this "bit" is a good one, for a return of typhoid of the same severe kind would do harm to the area.

In connection with the arbitration proceedings between Leeds and Tadcaster District Council it was stated, on behalf of the Corporation, I am informed, that the people had been canvassed and preferred Leeds water to the Riddal product. The idea of the Corporation is, of course, to force water upon Barwick from the main at Stanks, and to minimise the loss sustained to the rest of the parish by the withdrawal of Crossgates from the Riddal scheme. When the next hearing takes place Leeds people will have their statements corrected and brought up-to-date, because I understand the residents have expressed no desire for Leeds water.

How can efficiency be secured on the highways? In several rural areas a number of old men are employed on the roads, and their labour is cheap, but would it not be better to engage able-bodied men at a good wage? A member of a District Council stated that he has occasion to travel frequently over a certain road, and he said to a companion that he had never yet seen a roadman who had charge of a certain section working. "I will give him a shilling," he declared, "the first time he is working when I pass." The shilling has not been paid yet. In order to save expense, it would be better to put on efficient men and set them to work under proper supervision. The employment of old-age

The Tadcaster District Council have made a grant to their surveyor towards the upkeep of a motor-car, so that he may get over the roads

Following the suggestions in this journal, a meeting of farmers resident in Templenewsam, Crossgates, Seacroft, Roundhay, and Barwick Garrets will be held on Wednesday evening at Whitkirk, as our advt. columns show, to consider the question of forming a Farmers' Club. The idea is an excellent one, and agriculturists in the district have everything to gain by the establishment of such an institution, whether its purpose be for the purchasing of commodities, insurance, or generally looking after the interests of our oldest industry. It may be pointed out that in purchasing commodities through a club farmers stand to gain substantially, and the membership should be open to a wide district because the greater the purchasing power of the institution the greater will be its degree of prosperity. There should be a crowded attendance of farmers at the meeting.

Owing to the inconvenient train service, there is some talk of running a motor-bus from Allerton Bywater, Kippax, etc., to Tadcaster on Monday once a fortnight, and it is suggested that a similar service might be established between Leeds and Tadcaster. No one, however, would run vehicles without some guarantee, but a motor-bus service from Leeds would probably pay, especially in the summer-time. The hour's wait at Church Fenton is a great inconvenience to passengers travelling from Tadcaster to Leeds in the afternoon, and there is no end of grumbling about it. The N.E.R. Co. have been written to several times about giving a better service, but they have been unable to meet the wishes of travellers up to now.

Not long since Garforth and Kippax people were very anxious to obtain a tramway service between the villages and Leeds, and, although the city authority are to extend their system to Halton, it may be assumed that they will not take it further for many years. In the Pontefract and Castleford districts a motor-bus service has been established, and it has been suggested that Kippax folks might induce the Motor-Bus Co. to run 'buses to Leeds. This is a question for the local Council to consider.

In Tadcaster district complaint is made anent cycling on footpaths, and, as Supt. Slack said, the practice is one that should be put down with a firm hand. There is, however, another nuisance with which the authorities should deal. Cattle are allowed to stray on the footpaths, and frequently the deposits of filth are such as to make the paths almost impassable to pedestrians.

Automatic lighting, judging by the experiment at Crossgates, is not an unqualified success. At times as many as half-a-dozen lamps are off duty, and at the outset people were inclined to blame mischievous boys for it, but their pranks do not extend to turning the light out. The fault is with the automatic apparatus, and it is very annoying to residents to have lamps stuck up in their streets for no other purpose than ornament. Surely it should be the duty of someone to go round every night to see that the lamps are doing their duty

MISSING BICYCLES AT SWILLINGTON.

AN EXCITING CHASE.

At the Leeds West Riding Petty Sessions on Tuesday Herbert Heaton, miner, and Edward Heaton, miner, were charged with stealing bicycles valued at 30s. and £4 respectively, from the Primrose Pit, Swillington, on Monday.

James Rhodes, miner, of Methley, said he was the owner of one machine, which was worth 30s., and he had taken it to work with him on Monday. On leaving about 2.15 p.m. the machine had gone.

George Holyhead, miner, of Crossgates, spoke to being the owner of the second bicycle.

Evidence was given by a youth named Sam Warp that on Monday, shortly after mid-day, he saw the two prisoners looking at the bicycles, which were in the engine-house. He had, he said, seen them about the place the previous Thursday. Later he saw the men riding off on the machines, and he gave information to the yard foreman, Edward Colley, who gave chase.

Colley, who was complimented by the Bench on his conduct in the matter, said he rode after the prisoners on his own machine, and, overtaking them, pulled one of them off. He made them return with him until a police officer was obtained.

Herbert Heaton was sent to prison for two months with hard labour, and Edward to one month with hard labour.

OULTON DISTRICT EDUCATION COMMITTEE.

WOODLESFORD AFFAIRS.

The monthly meeting of the Oulton and District Education Committee was held on Tuesday night at the Y.M.C.A. Hall, Albion Place, Leeds —Mr P. S. Marsden presiding. The other members present were Mr. B. W. Higgins, Mr. G. M. Abbey, Mr. S. Hyde, Mr. J. W. Ridyard, Mr. T. P. Allison, Mr. J. H. Tomlinson, and Mr. T. H. Mytton with the Clerk (Mr. W. H. Powell).

With regard to the old desks at Woodlesford, the Clerk read a letter from the West Riding Education Committee that it was not equitable to give the desks away either for recreation or other purposes, but to sell them for the best price obtainable.

The Clerk reported that there will be some more desks to dispose of when new ones are put in the Colton School in compliance with the suggestion of one of His Majesty's Inspectors.

It was reported that the cleaning and general looking after of the Woodlesford Council School was no better. At the last meeting of the Committee it was decided to give the caretaker another month, in order to see if any improvement was made. Both the headmaster and headmistress say there is no change, and the Committee on Tuesday night decided to give the caretaker one month's notice and to advertise for a successor.

Messrs Hopkinson were appointed to look after the repair of the pianos in the schools of the district, as the firm had carried out the contract in a satisfactory manner.

The attendance returns for the division show that for the month of January the percentage was 89.30 as against 84.99 last year. In the Oulton District the attendance was 85.69 as compared with 86.71 in 1913. This drop is accounted for by an epidemic of fever in Woodlesford and Templenewsam. At the Woodlesford Council, mixed department, the attendance was 85.83 as against 91.93, and at the infants' school, 75 as compared with 79.72 last year. Templenewsam (Halton mixed) had a percentage of 85.6 as against 84.02, and the infants' department 85.24 as against 72.86. Colton School was down, being 81.81 as against 84.68. The percentage at Oulton St. John's (mixed) was 91.46 as against 94.32, while the infants was 88.52 as against 90.91.

SELBY CONSERVATIVE WHIST DRIVE.—Another very successful whist drive took place in the Conservative Club on Tuesday evening, a large number of ladies and gentlemen taking part. Mr R. Lodge officiated as M.C. The following were the prize-winners:—Ladies—1, Mrs Rockett; 2, Mrs Tuck; sealed, Mrs T. Wright; consolation, Mrs Foster (after a tie with Mrs Perkins). Gents—1, Mr G. Brown; 2, Mr E. B. Jackson; sealed, Mr A. Swift (after tie with Mr Bradfield); consolation, Mr E. Rowntree. Light refreshments, chocolates for ladies, and cigarettes for gentlemen were handed round during the interval.

BIBLE SOCIETY MEETING.—A meeting in connection with the British and Foreign Bible Society was held at the Alpine Hall, Monk Fryston, on Friday evening. The Rev. W. El. Claxton (vicar) presided over a fairly good gathering. Mr R. F. Crosland, J.P., F.R.G.S., of Cleckheaton, attended as deputation, and he delivered an eloquent and inspiring address, in which he made a powerful appeal for support for the Society. A vote of thanks, proposed by the Rev. B. Hemsworth, and seconded by Mr G. Dixon, was accorded the speaker and the Chairman. A collection was taken on behalf of the Society.

CONSERVATIVE AND UNIONIST ASSOCIATION.—The annual meeting of the Monk Fryston Conservative Association was held in the Concert Hall on Friday evening. Mr H. S. Lyon presided. The balance-sheet for the year showed a debit balance of £2 6s. 8d. The officers appointed for the ensuing year were as follows:—President, Rev. B. Hemsworth; vice-presidents, General Baldock, Mr R. B. Parker, and Mr H. Aldersley; chairman, Mr H. S. Lyon; representative on Central Committee, Mr Jas. Sunley; secretary and registration agent, Mr John Sunley. The Secretary reported that the Association prospects for the ensuing year were exceedingly bright, as a number of persons had signified their intention of becoming members.

"RAISING THE POOL."

SHORT STORY.

By Dr. KENNEDY.

Let me tell you a little thing that happened on board an Atlantic liner, by which, I am thankful to say, I managed through my calling, to save in my humble way the happiness of what is now the happiest home, the future of two of the dearest children that ever breathed, and the breaking of two of the fondest hearts that were ever by God joined to let no man put asunder.

Well, now, it happened as I was coming home from New York, on board a well-known liner, that I made the acquaintance of a happy young couple. They had a friend. Happy people always have friends, who try and destroy that happiness. It's a curious fact, but, nevertheless where the happy people are not sensible with it, the destruction inevitably comes about. One night I was sitting with a cigar in my mouth in the smoke room, listening to the general amusing "chit chat" that goes on aboard an Atlantic liner, when I became conscious of an animated and passionate conversation going on between two young fellows near me. One was the husband of the young wife. The other was the friend.

The gist of the conversation was to the effect that the friend had loved the girl himself before the other married her, that she had discarded him for the husband, and that both the husband and wife were in his power, and that he could wreck their happiness by speaking one word when they got to Liverpool, through a telegram to the husband's father, who was on his deathbed, a very rich man, and who had one mania and that was his son should not marry while he was alive, or be left poverty stricken for the remainder of his days.

The husband, whom we shall call Bertie Land, was done; he was in this man's power. Poor devil, he had had a bad time both in the Eastern and Western States. His father had sent him money to come home, and this friend of his was Charles Danton, who was a second cousin, to whom there was a chance of the money and estates coming if he was disinherited, so Danton's plan was in every sinister way in a state to turn up trumps.

Bertie Land rose from his seat and said,

"Well, Charlie, I thought at least one thing of you, and that was, you were a man. I'm sorry to find I'm mistaken." With a nod he joined his wife on deck.

Danton smoked on in silence for some time. I leant back and watched him. After some three minutes' contemplation of my subject, I came to the conclusion that he was not only a bad man, but a subject, I have always endeavoured to uphold the right in all my undertakings, and I determined there and then to help Bertie Land, who seemed a very decent sort of a fellow.

As the smoke-room steward entered in answer to a summons I called him across, and turning to Danton, said

"Take a drink, sir."

Like all villains, he was nuts on "poison," so he said "Yes."

"Give it a name then."

And he answered "whisky."

To give him his due he was a smart looking fellow, bold and resolute, and there was no mistake about it, he meant mischief to the other boy.

The steward brought the liquor, and raising his glass he pledged me. I got "one" look at him and he was my property. I got him direct and exercised the influence over that man, as God is my judge, for a wise, true, and loyal purpose.

I said to him, "You are, Mr Danton."

He said, "Yes."

I said "Bertie Land and his wife are both in New York." Then I repeated "In New York."

He was, I must tell you, under my influence instantly, and he was perfectly cognisant of everything about him.

At my will he became my servant. Every time he looked at Mr and Mrs Land, his eyes were diverted from them. His only chance of seeing them was at meal times, but even if he looked their way he could not see them. I willed it otherwise. I monopolised his society at all times. Neither Bertie Land nor his wife could understand our friendship. The few days of passage over the "pond" passed, and Danton became my guest in Liverpool, while Mr and Mrs Land went to another hotel, he going to see his father, and comfort him on his deathbed.

Had the old man known his son had married without his consent, he would have altered his will, transferring the property to Danton. The old gentleman retained his faculties to the end.

In a few days after the funeral I went to Mr and Mrs Land, and told them the story of the smoke-room conversation, the subjecting of Danton to a state of hypnotism, and making a new meaning to the old adage that if "listeners never hear any good of themselves, they at least don't of other people," and so rendering them a service.

As for Danton, when the Lands were settled down, I brought him out of this (to me) submissive state, and left him in charge of his mother, who was very glad to see him.

As I said before, two dear children and their mother and father are always glad to see me.

SHERBURN PETTY SESSIONS

The magistrates at Sherburn Petty Sessions yesterday were the Rev. B. Hemsworth (Chairman), Mr Wm. Crosland, and Mr H. S. Childe.

The Rev. Mr Rowntree, curate of Sherburn, applied for a stage play licence for the Milgarth Rooms, Sherburn, for 24th February, and it was granted.

Joe Kellet, John Wm. Horton, and William Asquith, pit lads, of Brotherton, were all charged with playing football on the 7th inst. on the North Road, Brotherton. All pleaded guilty. Each defendant was fined 6d. and 4s. costs.

PRINCIPAL CHARACTERS:

LAURENCE WORKMAN, the inventor of a new motor for aeroplanes.

SIR JOHN BEDFORD, a partner in the Armadale engineering firm.

L' ABBE BREMOND, a close friend of Sir John's.

LILIAN DELOMOSNE, ward of Sir Herbert Armadale.

CHARITY WRAYE, a typist in Sir John Bedford's office.

CHAPTER XXV.

Sir John Bedford was up earlier than usual on the morning following these events, and at eight o'clock had already sat down to his breakfast and his private correspondence. There were several letters lying by his plate. He turned them over quickly, and picked out one in the bold handwriting of Monsieur Sabatier.

"My dear friend and colleague," it ran. "After delays which have been most trying and vexatious I am assured of ultimate success within a few days—possibly within forty-eight hours. It must be your part to see that no further progress is made in that other direction. I have already arranged for the coming of the representative of that Government you know of, and he will be here the day after to-morrow; so, too, our colleague the Abbé. You, of course, will be here. Our Berlin friend, I grieve to say, is still confined to his room on account of his accident, but we will rejoice his heart with our good news.—Thy comrade, PAUL."

Sir John laid this confident epistle aside, with a muttered grunt of anything but satisfaction.

"That's just like Sabatier," he said; "always cocksure of triumph, as he calls it, and always putting it off just as he's going to achieve it. I expect I must go over there to-night; but I must know what's going on here first. Wilson," he said, as his servant entered the room, "I'm expecting a man to call with a message this morning, about half-past eight. As soon as he comes bring him up here."

Then he read his remaining letters and glanced over the papers, and so occupied himself until half-past eight chimed from the clock on the mantelpiece, and the door opened and admitted Wilson and the man who had followed Miss Delomosne about the previous night.

"The person you expected, Sir John," said Wilson, and retired silently.

"Ah sit down," said Sir John. He went calmly on with his breakfast, and for some minutes showed no more sense of his visitor's presence than if he had been the chair on which he sat. And the visitor glanced at Sir John and then at Sir John's surroundings, and a strange look crossed his face. He was a tall, handsome man, with pale, clear-cut features, and there was an expression in his eyes which was strangely nervous and alert. He looked as if he were perpetually on guard, always looking for something. As for the rest of his appearance, he was very smartly dressed in a suit of blue serge, wore good gloves, hat, and boots, and looked, save for his careworn expression, like a naval officer or a traveller returned from a voyage, for his face was bronzed and tanned as if by constant contact with the weather.

Sir John finished his breakfast at last, strolled over to the smoking cabinet, selected a cigar, lighted it with great deliberation, and then deigned to look upon his visitor.

"Well?" he said, laconically.

"I went down there," the visitor replied.

"Well?"

"She came there," the visitor continued.

Sir John nodded his head, and blew away a cloud of smoke. "Oh, she did!" he said. "Very well. Now I know. Tell me all about it in your own way. Here, have a cigar—and get yourself some coffee if you will. I don't suppose you've had either lately."

The man's eyes shot a gleam of fire and his face flushed as he picked up the cigar which Sir John flung to him as he might have thrown a bone to a dog, but he made no reply. He lighted the cigar, and after a moment's hesitation poured himself out a cup of coffee.

"I went down to the address you gave me," he went on, quietly, "and I watched there from dusk onwards. She came as it began to get dark. After she had been there some little time a tall man with a military moustache visitor.

"That's he," said Sir John, nodding his head. "Go on."

"Came out," continued the visitor, "and made off hurriedly. Then a young woman arrived at the house, in company with a lame and deformed boy——"

"I know them," said the listener.

"After they had been there a few minutes the man came hurrying back. After a while she and the young woman and the lame boy came out. She went in one direction and they in another. Before she had gone far she turned round and ran after them. There was some conversation, and then all three walked to some flats close by, and went up one of the stairways. They came down again in about a quarter of an hour, and went back to the house which she had first entered. They were still some little time there; then the young woman and the lame boy came out and went away towards the flats. Two or three minutes later she and the man came out and went off together."

"Together!" exclaimed Sir John.

"Yes, to some livery stables, close by. They were in the yard there some time, and at last, when they came out, they were followed by a two-horsed waggonette. They walked down to the works, the waggonette following them. When they got there they both went into the lodge, and presently the pair opened the big gates and admitted the waggonette."

"Whereupon, of course, you couldn't see any more!" said Sir John.

"I waited—to see her come out. Before long, after their arrival, the young woman and the lame boy came and were admitted through the lodge. I had to wait quite an hour and a-half after that before seeing anything else. Then the gates opened and they all came out."

"Waggonette as well?"

"Yes. It appeared to be loaded or packed with something which was completely covered up by a tarpaulin sheet. Outside the gate the man and the lame boy got up by the driver and drove off; she and the young woman walked away to the nearest cab-stand. There she got a hansom and returned to Eaton-square."

"Confound it all, man, but where did the waggonette go?" asked Sir John.

"I had no instructions about the waggonette," said the visitor, sullenly. "You told me to keep an eye on her if she turned up there."

"You might have used your common sense, any way," growled Sir John. "And you don't you know the place where they got the waggonette."

"Oh, yes—Hargrove's Livery Stabler."

"Then you can find out easily enough where they went to," said Sir John.

"Supposing the driver's had strict orders not to tell?"

"Then you must open his mouth with some coin of the realm," said Sir John.

The man finished his coffee and looked about him uncomfortably. "It's running a great risk to be seen about there in the daytime," he said. "You know how well known I was."

"If I'm to help you to clear out for good," said Sir John, unconcernedly, "you must run a risk or two to help me. Where would you have been, I wonder, if I hadn't come across you?"

"Well, what am I to do, then?" asked the other, half sullenly.

"What you're told, and I'll get you across to France safely," answered Sir John. "Perhaps you'll meet your old friend Shepheard there—I've just found out where he is."

"Let you know where he is, and I'll do anything for you!" exclaimed the visitor.

"All in good time," said Sir John. "Now, go down to Hargrove's livery-stables again, and find out where the waggonette went. Here's some money—make as cheap a bargain as you can, but make it. And you've only to ring me up in my private room at the offices and I'll tell you what to do next."

The visitor put the loose gold which Sir John handed him into his pocket and rose to go. He looked round the room and seemed inclined to linger.

"It's no pleasant thing to pace the streets wondering if you're not going to feel a hand on your shoulder at every yard," he said, bitterly.

"I don't think you're running as much risk as all that," said Sir John. "You might be taken for a gentleman, dressed as you are."

The visitor laughed—a harsh, grating laugh. The glint of his teeth was not pleasant.

"Go and get on with your work," said Sir John. "I'm busy. And look here, Mr. Penrose, none of your histrionics. You ought to feel very grateful to me. Do what I tell you, and I'll help you across the water. And I'll tell you where Shepheard is, and then you can break his neck and get yourself guillotined for it afterwards, and there'll be an end of both of you. Now then, once more, be off!"

Penrose snarled again and went out. When he was once outside the door of Sir John's dining-room he stopped for a moment and looked back with an expression which it might have done that gentleman good to see, inasmuch as it might have warned him not to play too much with edged tools. Then he went out into the streets, and made his way in the direction of Southwark, using various methods of transit, and always apprehensive of being hailed. Passing through Southwark, Penrose, after turning a certain thought over in his mind, went into a post-office and took out a gun-licence under an assumed name and address. In a street a little further on he called at a gunmaker's and purchased a revolver and a supply of cartridges. He slipped the revolver into his hip-pocket, and felt a sense of gratification at possessing it. "I can't trust him any further than I can see him," he said to himself. "He's very likely only using me as a cat's-paw; and, any way, it'll come in handy—for Shepheard."

Then he made his way to the livery-stables; and, as luck would have it, there came into the yard just at the time he reached it what he believed to be the very waggonette he had seen leaving it the night before. The vehicle was dusty and splashed; the horses were tired; the driver was probably sleepy.

Under pretence of making some inquiry as to a conveyance, Penrose got into conversation with the driver, and soon found out that he had been on an all-night journey to Canterbury and back with the man to drink, and before long had him in a confidential mood.

"I went here," said Penrose, "I saw you set off from Armadale's works last night, and I've a particular desire to know where you went. I'll give you a sovereign in your hand if you'll tell me."

The man looked at his questioner suspiciously. "Ain't no pot a 'ee, guv'nor?" he said. "I don't want no pleece business."

"No, no!" answered Penrose. "Curiosity, that's all. I wondered why they wanted to remove anything at that time of night."

"Well, I don't know as I was asked not to speak," said the driver; "and, as a matter of fact, I wasn't. Make it a couple o' quid, guv'nor, and I'll tell you. Thank yer, guv'nor—well, what I carried in that there waggonette was one of these here flying machines. I know, 'cause I helped to load and unload it. I expect him what invented it's going flying with it—to France or the Continent, very likely."

Penrose shifted a little uneasily in his chair, and nervously shook off the ash from the end of his cigar. "Is it anything very dangerous?" he asked.

"Well, there's nothing that's really well worth doing in the way of adventure that isn't, at any rate, a little dangerous, is there?" said Sir John. "However, there's nothing very dangerous in this—to you."

"What is it?" asked Penrose, after a reflective pause.

Sir John helped himself to another liqueur, and dangled one leg over the side of his chair, as if disposing himself for a free-and-easy chat.

"Well," he said, "the driver of the waggonette told you this afternoon that what he had transported to Canterbury was an aeroplane. He was quite right—so it is. It's a biplane, not so vastly different, not so very much superior in design and execution from those we have seen since Blériot flew the English Channel, but epoch-making in another way. A case of motive power which will drive it. And that's the secret of its inventor, the young fellow whom you saw the other night."

"With—her?" asked Penrose.

"Precisely with her," answered Sir John. "The young fellow, presumably considering himself not safe at Armadale's, has transferred the scene of his labour to a barn at the Three Travellers. Eh?"

"I think I understand," said Penrose, slowly. "It's fairly if not absolutely clear," continued Sir John. "There he means to put the finishing touches to his work."

"Well?" asked Penrose.

Sir John leant forward and looked his man steadily in the face. "Those finishing touches must not be made," he said, in a low voice, and with a significant tone.

"Why?"

"Because it doesn't suit my purposes that they should be," replied Sir John.

"From a business point of view?"

"Yes—in more ways than one. The fact is," said Sir John, "a few friends and myself are hurrying on the completion of an invention of an almost precisely similar nature, and we wish—and intend—to be first in the field. And, because of this young fellow's labours must be brought to a sudden termination so that we may step in first."

Penrose made no remark on this, but sat watching and waiting.

"It seems to me," Sir John continued, "that considering your present position, your need of a helping hand, and your desire to betake yourself to another climate, you're the very man to undertake this little affair."

Penrose remained silent for a full half minute, staring straight at the man who sat opposite him with a strange, questioning look in his sinister eyes. Then he leaped to his feet with a sharp exclamation, throwing away his cigar.

"By Heaven!" he said. "I'm not going to undertake any murders! I——"

Sir John laughed sneeringly. "Murders!" he said. "My dear fellow, do you take me for a fool, to think I should suggest such unpleasant topics to any man. I don't want to find myself in the dock at the Old Bailey as accessary before the fact—not I!"

"What do you want, then?" asked Penrose, watching him suspiciously.

"Sit down and take a fresh cigar," said Sir John. "I merely want you to undertake a little task, the successful performance of which will stop this young man from perfecting his work for some little time. That's all." "Why don't you do it yourself?" asked Penrose.

"Nothing would give me greater pleasure and satisfaction," answered Sir John, "but unfortunately I am somewhat well known in Canterbury, and all the people concerned in this affair are also particularly acquainted with me. Now, you are entirely unknown, and can carry out the transaction quite satisfactorily, if you use as much—or half as much—intelligence and resource as you showed in effecting your escape from——"

"Leave that alone!" growled Penrose, with a nervous glance at the door. "Come to the point. What do you want me to do?"

Sir John rose, and going over to his desk opened a drawer and produced the square case which he had taken from his safe earlier in the evening. Holding this in his hand, he turned once more to Penrose.

"I want you," he said, slowly, "to travel down to Canterbury to-morrow morning—you can stay there for the night, and go from here—and when you arrive there to make yourself acquainted with the Three Travellers. It will not be a long time before you can obtain access to that barn, or, at any rate, to get within reasonable distance of it. If I know anything of the young man he will have surrounded himself with safeguards, so you will have to exercise considerable diplomacy. But the main thing is to find an opportunity of placing inside or in immediate proximity to the work of that harm-this!"

He lifted the stout leathern lid of the case, and revealed the small steel globe lying inside in its thick nest of cotton-wool. The light from the lamps flashed upon its highly-polished surface in a thousand coruscations.

Penrose started, and then quickly comprehended. And once more he jumped to his feet, rapping out a sharp exclamation. "A bomb!"

Sir John ran his finger over the shining sphere caressingly. "Quite correct," he said. "And a very beautiful bit of work. This steel shell is so delicate as the most delicate china, yet it contains a power sufficient to blow these rooms to pieces. I shall be sorry to part with this—I have always admired it so!"

"It's a queer thing to possess," remarked Penrose.

"I came by it in a queer way," said Sir John. "You may think you are running an enormous risk in carrying it as far as Canterbury. I, my sir, carried it from Odessa to London, and lived with it night and day. There is no danger in it," he said, lifting the steel globe from its padded nest, and holding it up to Penrose, "until you move that small knob here—from left to right. Within half an hour of that—ah!"

He gently replaced the explosive machine in its case, and put the case back in the drawer, which he then locked. "Do you understand now?" he asked.

Penrose took a turn or two about the room. "I thought there was to be no loss of life," he said.

"If there is," answered Sir John, "it will be your own fault. Study the habits of the people who use the barn, and find your opportunity when they're out. It's no part of my policy to destroy any life—I want that machine smashed up. Use your wits—you're a clear-headed man; you don't drink—your brain ought to be sharp enough. When one wants to do a thing, one's a fool if one doesn't find the opportunity of doing it—it only needs seeking."

"So I am to go in the morning?" he asked.

"Yes," answered Sir John, "and I think perhaps the best thing to do will be for me to run you down in my motor. At any rate, I'll take you as far as the station next to Canterbury, and you can go on by train. Then I'll have a run round and come back to Canterbury at night, and you can meet me at the Star Hotel and report progress. I'll take care not to be seen. Call in at the post-office in the afternoon—say three-thirty—and ask if there's a wire for Edredin."

It was about noon next day when Penrose, carrying a Gladstone bag, which Sir John's servant had fetched from his rooms, left the station at Canterbury and made his way towards the heart of the city. Following Sir John's instructions, he soon found a quiet hotel, and, leaving his bag—securely locked—there, he set out to look for the Three Travellers, which apparent hostelry he came across in less time than he had expected. He took its main features in at a glance—like a true old house, built round three sides of a cobble-paved quadrangle; there was the garden stretching away all round the sides and back of the house, and merging into a large orchard. And at the side of the orchard, standing in the very place of a small paddock, was what was, without doubt, the barn —a plaster-and-timber walled erection, roofed by old red tiles.

And at the gate the paddock was—a policeman! And further up the street, not far from the barn, was another! No one, however ingenious, would ever be able to get near that barn while—There they were all night!

Penrose walked across the quadrangle and entered the low-ceilinged parlour which Laurence had first met Charity. One of the biggest men he had ever set eyes on stood with his back, reading a newspaper with the aid of a pair of large spectacles. He looked out of the corner of his eyes, and jumped up at the sound of Penrose's footsteps, and it seemed to the latter that he was favoured with a stare of very critical inspection.

"Servant, sir," said Mr. Waple. "Fine day for a walk, sir."

"A beautiful day," replied Penrose, and asked for a glass of ale. He took a pull at this glass when it was handed him and looked round the parlour. "One gets hungry sight-seeing," he said. "I suppose I can get something here?"

"Yes, sir," answered Mr. Waple. "Coffee-room in there, sir. Cold meats and pigeon pie ready now, but I could get a chop or a hot luncheon."

"Then I'll wait until one," said Penrose, and I'll take a chop. "Anything going on?" he said, nodding through the window near which he sat at the view of the barn and knock and policemen. "Is there going to be a sale?"

Mr. Waple folded up the newspaper and put it on a shelf behind him, sandwiched between two bottles.

"No, sir," he replied. "No, there ain't no sale at present, sir, not now. It's a policeman's a private matter, sir—not public."

"Oh!" exclaimed Penrose, endeavouring to look as interested as possible. "Dear me!"

Mr. Waple drew a measure of ale for himself. "Yes, sir," he said, when he had drunk, "it's a private matter, sir. They've to keep anybody and everybody, no matter who he or she may be, from approaching that there barn or the premises. It's a tenant has completed a certain work which he's a-doing of there. On duty they are, sir, by night as well as by day. Watch dogs as never tires, sir."

"Dear me!" said Penrose. "The work must be of very great importance."

"Well, I'm sure I don't!" replied Mr. Waple, mysteriously. "So it must indeed, sir."

Penrose lingered in the bar-parlour until nearly one o'clock, and then entered the coffee-room. He had already commenced his lunch when Jimmy Dickie came in, a youth in blue blouses and overalls, both greasy and somewhat grimy. Penrose, of course, recognised him at once, but affected not to do so—he merely glanced at them as they passed through the coffee-room into an inner apartment, and then fell to work.

CORRESPONDENCE

LIEUT. BOUGHEY, R.N., AND MR E. H. FOSTER, J.P.

MR MARTIN HARVEY'S CHALLENGE.

(To the Editor).

Sir,—The correspondence under above heading has, after all, not been in vain. I have at last extracted from Lieut. Boughey one or two definite statements, and can now point out to him and suggest that he is capable of deliberate misrepresentation. I think the facts I shall presume will, in the alternative, at least convince him of a more legitimate use of his superior literary satisfactory position for one whose sole occupation in the Barkston Ash Division appears to be the enlightenment of the electors on matters of public interest.

But first let me point out that the gallant officer seems half afraid of his own bogey. He says: "I make no attack on Roman Catholicism as such," and then goes on to nullify this generous admission by quoting opinions of Dr. Horton and the Rev. Joseph Hocking, who are opposed to Roman Catholicism "as such." In any case, as I have before pointed out, public opinions are of no value unless supported by evidence. It is strange that the weakness of these so-called arguments against Home Rule is not apparent to a well-trained controversialist like Lieut. Boughey. For example, he tells us that Mr Hocking writes—

"The priests control not only the worship but the life of the people. If the Irish peasant deserves freedom he emigrates to America" and so on.

Now, sir, as a Protestant, without the slightest sympathy with Roman Catholicism, as such, I would point out that if the statements are true, they are not caused by Home Rule but exist under the Union. In the opinion of many, the best remedy for such a state of affairs is Home Rule. This view is borne out by the fact that the Duke of Norfolk, and most of the Irish Catholic Peers, signed a protest against the last Home Rule Bill, which protest was based upon the fear that a "Home Rule Parliament might limit the clerical power."

Lieut. Boughey quotes a resolution passed by the Sligo branch of the A.O.H., protesting against the action of certain Protestant merchants, not apparently objects to the finance clauses of the Home Rule Bill. With a knowledge of the local circumstances, I am not altogether surprised that such a resolution should be passed. But is this any argument against Home Rule? If so, then let us set about withdrawing local government from the people of this country, for while the quoted resolution does no proof to show that anyone has suffered injustice on account of religious or political opinions in the Sligo district, it would be possible to fill your paper with instances of such persecution in this country. What does Lieut. Boughey think of the following:—

In December, 1911, at Crowle-me, a farm labourer named Cullingford summoned his employer, a farmer named Meech for an assault. During the bye-election a fellow labourer put on the Conservative colours, and Cullingford the Liberal. When Meech saw the latter ordered Cullingford to take off the colours, or he would "kick him off the place!" When the man refused he was paid off and struck on the ear, although he had been in the employ three or four and a half years. Meech denied the assault, but admitted that he dismissed Cullingford because he wore the Liberal colours and was "cheeky!" This case is a fair instance of the intolerance resulted in a conviction, fine and costs.

It is not necessary, however, to go all the way to Sowerby to find instances of persecution. The Liberal candidate in Barkston Ash at the last election was a victim of political persecution and had to leave his farm in Shropshire because his views differed from those of his landlord.

Lieut. Boughey tries to make a point against Home Rule by quoting Mr Wm. O'Brien. I must therefore assume that he is not aware of what is well-known to everybody else, viz., that Mr O'Brien attacks everything he has no himself organized. It so happens that the A.O.H. is opposed to Mr O'Brien and was responsible for the election of Captain Donelan, M.P. (a Protestant, by the way) for East Cork. This clearly explains O'Brien's attitude, but I may inform Lieut. Boughey that the statement he quotes in this connection is not in accordance with the facts. Cardinal Logue has nothing to do with the new Irish University, where, as Lieut. Boughey ought to know, several Protestant professors are engaged.

The next case put forward is the "Kingstone" case. Here, undoubtedly, boycotting has taken place. But it is not on record that the victim was a Protestantism. I have all the facts in my possession, and but for the length of this letter I should be pleased to detail them. If any of your readers are in doubt on the point, I shall be pleased to post them full particulars of the case on receiving name and address. What I should like to say, however, is this. Had I been a resident in that district I rather feel I should have joined in the boycott. In any case, whether the complaint is justified or not, it has happened under the Union, and can, therefore, be no argument against Home Rule.

Finally (and here Lieut. Boughey is hopelessly wrong), we have an attack on the Irish Local Government Act (1898). It is common knowledge (except to Lieut. Boughey) that the Act has been administered satisfactorily. No representative Unionist, whose opinion is worth having, has ever denied this. I mention Mr Gerald Balfour and Mr Geo. Wyndham in support of my contention. As Lieut. Boughey wishes your readers to believe, what he can soon prove to be false doctrine if he will enquire, viz., that Protestants cannot gain election because of their religious faith, let me point out that Sligo is overwhelmingly Catholic, but notwithstanding this it is a fact that the last time a Protestant offered himself for election he topped the poll.

Lieut. Boughey further misrepresents the situation when he tries to prejudice your readers against Catholics by saying that Protestants have no chance of gaining positions under the County Councils. He instances among other places the following—Kings County, Mayo, Roscommon, and Westmeath. Now it so happens that figures were given in the House of Lords on Thursday last by Lord Macdonnell, whose knowledge of Ireland will not be questioned. He also quoted the figures for Galway, Munster, Carlow, and Tipperary. For the guidance of Lieut. Boughey, and for the information of any other of your readers who may be equally ill-informed, I set out the percentages of Protestants and the percentages of paid posts held by Protestants in these overwhelmingly Catholic districts.

	Protestant Population.	Paid Protestant Officials.
Kings County	11	48
Mayo	2	11
Roscommon	3	26
Westmeath	9	32
Galway	6	19
Munster	10	21
Carlow	11	40
Tipperary	6	29

Now, let us look at the other side of the picture and see how those who are squirming and pretending to fear Catholic persecution act when the boot is on the other foot. In Ulster, which, by the way, has a majority for Home Rule in the House of Commons, the Protestants are very partial to the "knaves and fishes." Personally, I have very little doubt that herein lies the main reason for the Ulster Protestant's "kicking." He is afraid that under Home Rule he will be asked to take a few dose's of his own medicine.

Here are the figures for that portion of Ulster which is regarded as Protestant, the percentages in this table relating to Catholics:—

	Catholic Population.	Paid Catholic Officials.
Armagh	45	6
Tyrone	55	10
Fermanagh	55	23
Antrim	20	8

If Lieut. Boughey can dispute these figures and prove them wrong, I assure him that no one will be better pleased than myself to be corrected. If he cannot dispute them what does he mean by the statements in his last letter? The Unionists of Ireland (no doubt) Lieut. Boughey will give fair play to the minority today."

Sir, I agree. The two sets of figures given above prove it, and demonstrate conclusively that the fair play is being meted out to Catholics, and in those districts where Protestants have the power. If Lieut. Boughey really believes that Protestants are persecuted in the Catholic districts of Ireland on account of their religious faith, I will give him an opportunity of serving his party in a double sense. Here is my challenge:—

For every case of a Protestant suffering on account of his religious faith in Catholic Ireland I will produce two cases of Catholics suffering at the hands of Protestants in the North of Ireland. If I fail I will forfeit a £5 note to the funds of the Barkston Ash Conservative Association, conditionally, that it is proved Lieut. Boughey will forfeit a like amount to the Barkston Ash Liberal Association.

I apologise for occupying so much of your valuable space. The misleading suggestions necessitated a detailed reply. I must now leave the matter with your readers, who are well able to judge for themselves, unless and until Lieut. Boughey accepts my challenge.—Yours, etc.,

MARTIN HARVEY.

Peckfield Lodge, Feb. 14th, 1914.

SQUIRE OF TEMPLENEWSAM AND HOME RULE

THE UNIONIST OPPOSITION.

The Hon. E. L. Wood, M.P., speaking at a meeting at Harrogate on Saturday, said that all who concerned themselves in politics would have been much struck with what he thought was no exaggeration to call a transformation of politics in the last week. If they had had the pleasure of being in the House of Commons they would have been more conscious of this than they could be from reading only on either side of the House was at this moment agreed that the passage of the Home Rule Bill in its present form was impossible. (Hear, hear). It had been a long journey, and after all there ahead into the harbour" that they heard of a month or two ago, but rather a consid-ration of what were the least offers that Ulster could be induced to take. That was a very significant change.

Sir Edward Carson had asked the Prime Minister whether he would consider the exclusion of Ulster as inconsistent with the fundamental principles of the Bill, and the Prime Minister did not answer, so Sir Edward said he supposed they might conclude that it was inconsistent. Mr Redmond also spoke, and after all his speeches with Mr Devlin had also said about the exclusion of Ulster the speaker was surprised that he was extremely careful not to say anything that would finally close the door to negotiations.

He did not think they as Unionists could do other than say, that the exclusion of Ulster for a term of years—which he thought might possibly be the proposal—such exclusion would affect their opinion in one respect only. It would not alter what they felt about the wisdom or unwisdom of Home Rule as a policy. (Hear, hear). All it would do was to avoid the immediate danger of civil war. He thought they should make it clear that they should not have that agreement to be construed as dispensing with their entire opposition to the policy of Home Rule. (Hear, hear).

How was that going to affect the question of the Bill dealing with the Church in Wales. He thought they should make their position quite clear about that; that they should ask the opinion of the people, directly by referendum, or that the question should be left over until after the election; or, failing those two things which the Church in Wales had a clear right to demand, they as the Unionist party must make it abundantly clear, as Mr Bonar Law had done, that they as a party should hold themselves free to undo the injustice done if and when they returned to power. (Applause).

CONSERVATISM AT ASKHAM RICHARD.

A BELFAST MAN'S REMARKS.

A meeting of Conservatives was held at Askham Richard, and Mr F. Wailes Fairbairn, J.P., of Askham Richard Hall, presided. He was supported by Mrs Wailes-Fairbairn, Mr H. Payne Galloway, Mrs. Rickaby, and Miss Rickaby, Miss Simpson, Rev. A. H. C. Fargus and Mrs Fargus, Messrs Bland, Dixon, Boulter, Rennison, Hopwood, Bailey, Theakston, McBlington (hon. secretary), Lancaster, Rogers, Hodge, Gibson, Midgley, Hall, Freer, Cawood, Calvert, Gaythorpe, Palfreyman, Robbins, and others.

Mr Robert Dunwoody, of Belfast, gave an address, and said that genuine Liberals were bound to vote against Home Rule, for it was by introducing Home Rule Gladstone found he had embarked upon a distasteful movement, which broke up the Liberal party. Principles did not change. It was only men who changed. Who asked for Home Rule? When the Government could have passed the measure by an assured majority they did not do so, and the present revival of Home Rule was inspired not by the need of it, but by the need for strengthening the Government with the support of the Nationalists. (Hear, hear). Contrast the present Government with Gladstone, who was at least a gentleman. (Hear, hear). They should not necessarily disbelieve the Liberals, but the latter were perfectly free in their views being obscured only by the Liberal newspapers, in which truth was at a discount. (Laughter). The Government were not fit to govern a workhouse; they were not fit to govern their members; and certainly they were provedly unfit to govern the country. The speaker concluded by asking his hearers to do their little part in standing up for religious liberty, for the defence of minorities, whose cause was just. If Ulster had to be faced with British bayonets, then Ulster would wrap the Union Jack around them and exclaim "Then shoot at that!" (Applause).

Replying to the questions of a gentleman in the audience, the speaker denied that under Free Trade the country was doing well. There were more paupers in this country than anywhere in the world. No people of the world were more taxed on food than the English. (Hear, hear).

Mr H. Payne-Galloway moved a vote of thanks to the speaker, saying they had spent a most instructive evening. (Hear, hear).

The Rev. A. H. C. Fargus, in seconding, said that if Yorkshiremen were put to the test as Ulstermen were being, they would stand by and fight for the British flag. (Hear, hear).

Before the motion was carried, Mr Midgley, of Colton, also had a question of the speaker, cordially supported it.

WHITKIRK AMATEUR OPERATIC SOCIETY.

PERFORMANCE OF "H.M.S. PINAFORE."

The members of Whitkirk Amateur Operatic Society, in undertaking the performance of "H.M.S. Pinafore," had an admittedly formidable task, but they were encouraged by the success of previous productions, notably "The Pirates of Penzance;" and, although there must obviously be limitations to the efforts of a society with a membership drawn from a restricted area, they are thoroughly justified in their desire for progressive work. Gilbert and Sullivan's brilliant opera was perhaps regarded by some as beyond the capabilities of the members, whose most ambitious effort it was, but its performance was highly satisfactory, and the large audiences that assembled in the Parochial Hall at Halton on Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday nights were delighted with the general work of the Society. It was evident that, although attention requires to be given to elocution and deportment, a considerable advance has been made, under the direction of Mr F. E. Kitchen, the hon. conductor, and Mr Clifford Pheavey, the coach and stage manager, and the performance was certainly the best the members have given. The Society went with a swing, and the members are to be congratulated on their success.

The chorus work is usually a feature of the Society's productions, and in "H.M.S. Pinafore" the members surpassed themselves. Mr Kitchen, were:—First Lord's Sisters, his Cousins, his Aunts—Misses F. Bryan, E. Cowell, M. Firth, T. Henson, Emily Hewitt, Elsie Hewitt, M. Harrison, E. Hague, D. Heaps, F. Hemsworth, A. Lamb, E. Simpson, K. Moss, E. Thompson, and E. Walton. Sailors—Messrs C. Batty, C. Bilsany, P. Coultas, C. Coultas, G. Farndale, H. Hemingway, H. Hobson, A. Harrison, H. Lumb, T. Shaw, W. Myers, W. Taylor, G. Henson, H. Longfield, and F. Brooks. They had the support of an excellent orchestra, consisting of Messrs A. Beaumont, F. Dickinson, Smith, Preston, B. Marshall, F. Fidler, Fresborn, J. E. Foohard, and Atkinson. Mr Bennett, the hon. chorus accompanist, who has rendered valuable service to the Society, was again at his post.

Mr W. Braithwaite (Whitkirk), as the pompous, portly Sir Joseph Porter, K.C.B., First Lord of the Admiralty, was outstanding, and his interpretation of the role was one of all-round excellence. His singing and dancing, no less than his acting, met with keen appreciation, and he had to respond to calls for more. Mr W. L. Moss, as the gallant captain of the "Pinafore," had a part that suited him admirably, and he added another to his successes with the Whitkirk amateurs. Although not gifted with a strong voice, he sang his numbers pleasingly, and was frequently recalled. Mr J. Brooks (Corkoigeon) figured in the somewhat exacting role of "Ralph Rackstraw," able seaman, one of the suitors for the hand of the captain's daughter, Josephine, and he acquitted himself well, although greater freedom of movement would have given more attractiveness to the character. His singing was, of course, a distinct feature of the production, and his efforts received the thorough appreciation they deserved. Mr S. Myers as "Dick Deadeye" (false seaman), gave a clever representation. It is one of the most difficult characters to interpret in the opera, and Mr Myers' study did him very great credit, indeed. Mr J. Atkin (Crossgates) sang pleasingly as "Bill Bobstay," and Mr W. Wood, as "Bob Becket," and Mr C. Firth, as "Tom Tucker" (midshipmite), were equally successful.

Miss M. Wood, as "Josephine," the captain's daughter, had the leading part among the ladies, and she was a bagpie from first to last. Of a beautiful voice, of considerable range and power, she sang her numbers with fine taste and feeling, and her conception of the role was excellent. Without doubt, she shared the honours of the performance with Mr Braithwaite, and her admirable work throughout delighted the audience. Miss E. Wood was a charming "Little Buttercup" (a Portsmouth Bumboat woman). She used her sweet voice to advantage, and, her acting showing a keen appreciation of the part, she played another success to her credit. Mrs H. Hemingway, as "Hebe," Sir Joseph's first cousin, had not much to do, but she did what she could to her was marked by ability and careful study.

Mr Clifford Pheavey acted as stage manager, and the stage lighting arrangements were carried out by Mr A. Hepwood.

The opera was preceded by a smartly-written short play, entitled "The Reason Why," by Mr. Berry Pain. The respective roles of "He" and "She" were filled by Mr Hemingway and Mrs H. Longfield, and their clever performance of this little comedy created great amusement. Both players showed marked ability, and they were loudly applauded.

BROKEN DOWN BY PILES.

PAINFUL AILMENT, BROUGHT ON BY WORKING IN WATER, CURED BY ZAM-BUK.

Mr Thomas Cunningham suffered such torture from itching piles that he became, as he says, "entirely broken down."

His restoration to health is solely due to a wonderful Zam-Buk cure.

Mr Cunningham, who lives at 3, Double Row, Mareerail, Worksop, related this story to a "Worksop Guardian" reporter.

"Three years ago," he said, "I was tunnelling near Ashby-de-la-Zouch, and often had to work up to my waist in water. As a result I got piles, which played havoc with me. Besides being in terrible pain, there were times when I couldn't even walk, and I lost a lot of work. For over two years I was never really free from the torturing itch.

"In addition to doctor's treatment, I tried ointments, salves, lotions, and physic until I got thoroughly disheartened. A mate at last told me to try this balm.

"Zam-Buk was instantly a success in my severe case. Zam-Buk soothed the pain and itching in surprising fashion, considering how all ordinary ointments had failed. The growth of piles was gradually lessened as I persevered with Zam-Buk, and I realised that I was getting cured.

"The piles did finally and entirely stop troubling me. As I have now been quite free from them for some time, I can say that Zam-Buk has worked a complete and wonderful cure."

Nothing else known to Science possesses the unique and permanent skin curing power of Zam-Buk, the wonderful herbal healer. Sold only in sealed boxes, at 1s. 1½d. and 2s. 9d. Beware of worthless imitations.

BETWEEN CROSSGATES AND GARFORTH

STORY OF A BROKEN WINDOW.

At the Leeds West Riding Petty Sessions on Tuesday Frank Robinson, a collector, living at Leeds, was summoned by the North-Eastern Railway Co. for interfering with the comfort of other passengers of the 7.40 p.m. train from Castleford, and with doing damage to a carriage door legfd, to the amount of 6s. 6d. Supt. Pearson prosecuted for the Co.

Edwin Allen, of Leeds, gave evidence that on Jan. 28th he joined the 8.14 p.m. train from Garforth to Leeds, entering a corridor carriage. He noticed the defendant standing at a window, and he was using bad language. After leaving Garforth the defendant came into his carriage, and, after some conversation, he asked witness if he could fight. Witness said he could not and defendant commenced sparring. He struck the witness but inflicted no serious injury. He broke the carriage window and said to the witness "You must not say anything about this. If anyone asks you who has done it you must say a man from Ripon." Witness said he could not say that and at Crossgates he informed the stationmaster.

George Albert Howe, guard in charge of the train, said defendant joined the train at Castleford and all went well until after leaving Garforth, when there was a crashing of glass, and on looking from his van he saw the defendant with his head out of the carriage window. At Marsh Lane defendant got out, but witness stopped him and asked him about the window which he had broken. Defendant, although his hands were bleeding, denied breaking the window, and, in explanation of his bleeding hands, said he had been working among glass at Castleford.

A detective officer, in the Company's service, said that when aiven at his home defendant denied breaking the window, but said he had had some drink.

The Bench imposed a fine of 10s. and costs in each case, and ordered defendant to pay the damage, 6s. 6d.

TADCASTER PETTY SESSIONS.

At Tadcaster Petty Sessions on Monday the magistrates present were Ald. E. C. Brooksbank (Chairman), Colonel Gatesellgrt, and Mr J. H. Ingleby.

APPLETON FARMER'S OFFENCE.

George Popplewell, farmer, of Appleton Roebuck, was charged with cycling on a footpath at Bolton Percy on Feb. 11th.

Defendant admitted the offence, and P.S. Juniper gave evidence.

Supt. Slack said that there was too much cycling on footpaths in the district and it should be put a stop to. On every footpath in the locality there were tracks of cycles.

The Chairman: I know.

Defendant was ordered to pay a fine of 2s. 6d. and costs.

A TADCASTER MAN'S APPEAL.

Edward McMannon, described as a labourer, of Tadcaster, was charged with having been drunk and disord rly on Feb. 2nd at Tadcaster West.

Defendant pleaded guilty.

The police evidence was that defendant was lying on the side of the Leeds Road, and when he was set on his feet he could not stand. He used bad language to the constable, who took him into custody.

Defendant said that he had not tasted for about three-and-a-half years, and it did not take a great deal of drink to bowl him over. He said that if the magistrates would do their best for him he would not taste any more for the short time he had to live.

The Chairman said that he had not been up for nearly four years, and they would take that into consideration in only imposing a fine of 1s. and costs

HAZLEWOOD CASE—DISMISSED.

George S. Britton, labourer, of Hazlewood, was charged with stealing wearing apparel by John R. Cumberland. The case had been before the Court twice, and the magistrates were unable to proceed with it owing to the absence of Cumberland's son, who is now a soldier, and who was the chief witness.

When defendant's name was called he did not put in an appearance.

Supt. Slack said that there was no evidence to put before the Court. There was a letter from the person who was the chief witness.

The Chairman: Is your son coming to give evidence?

Cumberland: No.

The Chairman then read a letter from Cumberland's son, who stated that prior to enlisting he was employed as a carter on a farm at Hazlewood, near Tadcaster, and he had, he said, asked Britton to forward a box and his clothes to his father at Tadcaster.

Britton gave his version of the case at a previous Court.

The Chairman said that he did not see, in the absence of evidence, it was possible for them to go on with the case, and they, therefore, dismissed it.

EASTERN AINSTY PETTY SESSIONS

JUMPED FROM A BRIDGE ON TADCASTER ROAD.

Thos. Oliver (43), described as a fish worker, of Granville Terrace, Manchester Street, Hull, was charged at the Eastern Ainsty Petty Sessions at York on Saturday, with a't mpting to commit suicide by jumping from a railway bridge on the Tadcaster Road on December 30th last Superintendent Slack saw the offence was committed about 1.30 p.m. on December 30th, when the man jumped from a railway bridge on the Tadcaster Road. No one appeared to have seen prisoner jump from the parapet of the bridge, but he was found later on lying on the railway and in answer to P.C. Marsh he said, "I did try to kill myself." Accused had been drinking very hard for some weeks and had become "saddened" with drink. There was no doubt that at the time of the offence accused was suffering from delirium tremens. From inquiries, it transpired that accused had previously been a good workman, but had been addicted to drink, though he had never been before the magistrates on any occasion for any offence. His (accused's) daughter-in-law, from Hull, and other friends were present in court and were willing to take charge of him, provided the magistrates would allow of such a course, and take him back to Hull. He (the superintendent) thought that would be a good way out of the case. Accused said he would not attempt to kill himself again. Drink had been, up to the present, his failing, and almost his downfall. It had been necessary to take the accused to the hospital, and it had cost the county £12 10s. for supervision. He, therefore, asked that the costs be ordered to be paid, and urged that the relatives should pay the money. It was not long ago that a man cost the county £20, and he (Superintendent Slack) afterwards recovered that amount from the relatives. The costs in this case were entirely for the accused's benefit. Accused was now starting afresh, and, being free fro i drink, could manage better. The reason why the accused had been kept in hospital was that he had been suffering from broken ribs.

Accused, in answer to the Chairman, promised that he would never touch drink again.

Accused was thereupon discharged, his sister-in-law promising to do her best to reimburse the county for looking after him.

CHARGE AGAINST A ROTHWELL FOREMAN

COMMITTED FOR TRIAL FOR £3d. WORTH OF COAL.

RAILWAY COMPANY PROSECUTE.

At the Leeds West Riding Petty Sessions on Tuesday Walter Blake, foreman, living at Rothwell, was summoned by the East and West Yorks. Union Railway, by which he was employed, for stealing coal to the value of 3d., since the continuous missing of coal the Company had decided to prosecute. The defendant had been in the Company's service for ten years, and was a foreman. He described him as a trusted servant, and went on to say that in consequence of the systematic missing of coal notices were posted by the Company that men would be prosecuted if they took coal. Not long ago a man was dismissed for the offence, yet after he had gone coal was still missed. The defendant Blake worked at Robin Hood, and it was his custom to walk along the railway track to his home at Rothwell, and the line had been watched by a police constable, who, shortly after midnight on February 6th, saw Blake with lumps of coal under each arm. Evidently he saw the officer before the latter could get up to him, and dropped the coal on a bridge over which he passed. The officer going to the spot found two large pieces of coal which had evidently been dropped by Blake.

P.C. Womack stated that in consequence of certain complaints he was appointed to watch the sidings at Rothwell coming from Robin Hood, on February 6th. Blake was seen walking along the line to go home from his work at Robin Hood. About 12.15 a.m. on February 7th, a bright moonlight night, he saw the defendant jump down about 50 yards past when witness first caught sight of him from his hiding place behind some waggons. Witness explained that there was a railway bridge close to and that was necessary for Blake to pass this to get to his home.

Witness saw that he was carrying a lump of coal under each arm. There was no mistaking the man, as he knew him well, and he caught a glimpse of his face. He then left his hiding place and walked towards the roadway in Wood Lane just as defendant was crossing the bridge. When he got to the bridge he could get no sight of him, Blake only had some pieces of wood under one arm, and disappeared into his house. Going along the bridge witness found two large lumps of coal practically where defendant had crouched. Witness went to the house and told Blake that he had found some coal, of which he would take possession and report the matter to the Railway Company. Blake replied that he had not brought any coal; he only had wood, which he was privileged to bring.

Mr Musser (who defended): You found the coal at a place between metals where trucks of coal would be passing all day?

Witness: Yes.

Joseph Smawley, traffic inspector for the Company, said that on the Saturday morning he, in accordance with instructions, suspended Blake. He said to him "What bother is this you have got into now?" He replied "Have you got to know about it?" He said: "You were caught last night about 12.15 by the police with coal." Defendant replied "I had not the coal; it was on the bridge. I saw the police, and if they had not been there I should have taken it."

Mr Oeller intimated that this was all the evidence for the prosecution.

On behalf of the defendant, Mr Musser pleaded not guilty, and stated that as he (defendant) was the only witness he would reserve his defence.

Blake was committed for trial to the next Quarter Sessions.

Mr Musser applied for bail as his client held a responsible position in connection with the National Union of Railwaymen, being secretary of the Rothwell Head Branch.

Bail was allowed.

MR LANE FOX, M.P., IN PARLIAMENT.

THE POLICY OF "LAND BURSTING."

Speaking in the House of Commons on Tuesday night Mr Lane Fox (Barkston Ash) said that agricultural values had not been arrested all over the country, but especially in the neighbourhood of towns, by the 1909 Budget. The land taxes of the Budget made it impossible for landlords ever to raise the money for the improvement of their land in an agricultural sense. The policy of "land bursting" foreshadowed by the Chancellor of the Exchequer would have equally disastrous results. For the purpose on which the Chancellor of the Exchequer seemed to proceed was that, having unsuccessfully tried to tax landlords had obtained some thousands of pounds, for which the community had given two millions—having failed by taxation, he now set out to "burst" the land system in existence. Such methods were likely to increase the value of land, and more especially as there seemed to be so much variance of opinion amongst Ministerialists as to what they were setting out to do that it was difficult to know were going to accomplish it. The Chancellor of the Exchequer had made certain speeches describing rural life. It would be extremely interesting if he would make speeches similar to those speeches at Bedford, Swindon, and Holloway in the House of Commons, and one statement which he had repeated in these speeches in the country was extremely unfair. He had said more than once that for every 20s. paid from the land in wages, 25s. was paid in rent. He did not challenge the figure—it might be true—but Mr Lloyd George had deliberately refrained from saying that a considerable amount of the 25s. paid in rent was returned to the land in repairs and improvements. Those statements of that kind were the cause of much uncertainty in the country as to the stability of the credit of land. Infinite harm had been done by the report of the wages and land enquiry. The House of Commons knew that none of the members of the committee had special knowledge of agricultural matters and took the report at its real value, but the general public might not know that, and the report might prove extremely dangerous, more especially as it was to form the basis of all Liberal speeches in the country for the present. He hoped the Chancellor of the Exchequer would give them an assurance that, before further action was taken in the matter of the land legislation, an inquiry would be held which would not be so biassed as the secret committee, and which would possess the confidence of the country. (Cheers)

MARRIAGE OF LORD HOLDEN.

The marriage of Lord Holden of Alston to Miss Edith Judd, daughter of the late Mr B. S. Judd, of Richmond Hill, Leeds, took place on Saturday at St. Andrew's Church, Wells Street, London, was a pretty but quiet ceremony.

Lord Holden, whose Yorkshire seat is Nun Appleton House, Bolton Percy, is the second peer, succeeding to the title only two years ago. He is 47 years of age, and a widower.

His father, the first peer, was Sir Angus Holden, Bart., Liberal M.P. for the Buckrose Division, and head of the great woolcombing business at Bradford and Rheims, established by his father, Sir Isaac Holden, who was Liberal M.P. for Keighley.

The officiating clergy were the Rev. Francis A. Judd, brother of the bride, and the Rev. W. H. Churchill. There were five bridesmaids—Miss Eileen McLaren and Miss Moira Shirren, nieces of the bride; Miss Phyllis Illingworth, cousin of the bridegroom; Miss Ada Hilda Lowe, and Miss Cornwallis. Mr Douglas Illingworth, a cousin, was groomsman.

The bride, who was given away by her brother, Mr H. S. Judd, wore a dress of white satin. The corsage was ornamented with pearl, and the skirt ornamented by a silver girdle, with two tassels suspending. The court train was of satin, lined with shell pink, and rounded at the end. A shawl of antique lace lay over the shoulders.

The bridesmaids' dresses were of cream charmeuse, with net tunics having two rows of gold embroidery.

There was no reception, and shortly after the wedding Lord and Lady Holden left London for their honeymoon at Cap Martin. Lady Holden's going-away gown was of blue cloth with a shepherdess, draped up at the front and trimmed with sable. The bodice was of draped fine laces, with touches of sable on the coloured satin waistband.

ROTHWELL RAILWAY.—The annual report of the East and West Yorks. Union Railways for the year ended 31st December, 1913, shows that the traffic receipts amounted to £49,097 2s. 8d., as compared with £47,773 18s. 11d., and the expenditure £9,337 10s. 8d., as compared with £9,374 16s., leaving the net traffic receipts £9,759 12s., as against £9,399 2s. 11d., to which must be added miscellaneous receipts amounting to £169 13s. 9d. as against £328 7s. 5d., making the total net income £10,029 5s. 8d., as against £9,727 10s. 4d. The balance brought forward from last year's account was £2,635 12s. 1d.; 1912, £2,456 10s. 1d., making a total of £12,664 17s. 9d.; 1911, £12,184 7s. 5d. After the payment of charges amounting to £4,684 6s. 3d., as compared with £4,618 9s. 6d., the balance is £7,980 11s. 6d.; 1912, £6,585 10s. 11d. An interim dividend at the rate of 4 per cent. per annum was paid on the preference stock for the half-year to 30th June, 1913. The Preference stock for the last half-year, together amounting to £5,239 19s., and leaving a balance of £2,740 12s. 6d. to be carried to next year's account. The total weight of goods and mineral traffic passing over the railway for the year was 697,764 tons, as compared with 643,943 tons carried in the year 1912, showing an increase of 53,821 tons. The tonnage and receipts for 1912 were affected by the miners' strike. The directors who retire at this meeting are Messrs Edward Saltersen and S. W. Meyer, who are eligible for re-election. The retiring auditor is Mr John Hartley Blackburn, who offers himself for re-election.

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 21st, 1914.

Within the past few years a marked change has come over the drinking habits of the people, and licensing meeting statistics, although not an absolutely reliable guide, indicate that the residents of the district are exercising greater self-control. No one will believe that the police are less vigilant than in former years, nor that they will tolerate any laxity in the management of licensed houses, and it must, therefore, be concluded that public opinion is having a salutary effect in checking excesses. Without doubt the growth of temperance principles is following the advancement of education, and, while many people definitely decline to pledge themselves to total abstinence, they recognise that if they are to get the best out of life they must adopt temperate habits. At one time drunkenness in a person of social standing was regarded as something of an "accomplishment" but so great is the change that has come over the habits of even the working-classes that the person who indulges to excess is very quickly marked as one whom society is to be avoided. That is a very welcome change, and it is having its influence on the community. Brewster Sessions figures, however, do not prove that less alcoholic drink is being consumed; indeed, there is reason to believe that the quantity used fluctuates according to the state of national trade; and this shows that for any increase recorded the working-classes, who are more acutely affected by trade conditions than any other section of the community, are primarily responsible. No doubt large sums of money which should go towards building up the family or beautifying the home are spent on what are termed luxuries, and in multitudes of cases people are worse off under good trade conditions. This is a serious reflection on one class, or a section of one class, and until they learn to profit by steady employment their energies are, to some extent, wasted. To these people the licensed "trade" itself has, as a rule, no encouragement to give; they are a class of customer whose absence is preferred to their company; and the ever-indulgent soon discover that they are not regarded as friends of the licence-holder.

One lamentable feature of the reports at licensing courts in Lancashire is the increase of drinking among women, and it must be regarded as a sign of social decadence. According to some of the reports, the women do not usually frequent public-houses; they have their needs supplied at the grocer's shop; and their drinking is done in secret, until a time comes when they are so depraved and dissolute that they care not a jot for the opinion of their neighbours and come out and flaunt their vices openly. This deterioration bodes ill for the nation. Intemperance in man is bad enough, but so long as the mother is sober and industrious there is hope for the family and the home. When, however, the wife gives way to excesses the result is disastrous for all concerned. For that very reason, drinking by women should in every way possible be discouraged. It is not necessary, when the sores have eaten so deeply into our social life, to remark upon the evils associated with intemperance among the female population, because they are apparent to all who are newspaper readers. The nation, by safeguarding her women, will only be protecting her highest interests, and an extension of the evils alluded to must eventually call forth repressive measures.

The club system, which has taken firm root in the social life of the people, has received the kindly consideration of the magistrates, and with absolute unanimity, they recommend that they should be brought under the same law as public-houses. Politicians are not always guided by principle; expediency frequently moulds their course of action, and it would be difficult to state what their attitude would be in places where the club population is strong. Nevertheless, there is need for action, because to give clubs a privileged position in our licensing system is unfair. In this particular district the clubs have been well conducted—no complaints have been forthcoming, but in many other districts institutions have been established for no other purpose than that men may have additional drinking facilities, with the result that sometimes riotous scenes occur and the clubs are struck off the register. Club members state that they are able to spend their evenings in a comfortable and interesting way without being compelled to drink, whereas were they to go to inns they would, "for the good of the house," have to consume liquor they did not want. That, of course, applies to a section. Clubs which are well conducted have nothing to fear from police inspection, and, on the other hand, institutions which exist for drinking purposes only should be wiped out. As a matter of fact, police inspection would materially strengthen the position of the club movement, because it would eliminate all the undesirable places that exist for drinking purposes only, and give to the well-conducted clubs an acknowledged position in the licensing system. The regulation of hours is very necessary, too, and if clubs had to pay a little more to the national revenue they would simply be giving a return for undoubted privileges which they enjoy.

THE SCHOOLS.—In Sherburn district the percentage of attendance last month was 90.81 against 85.68 in January, 1913. The figures for the various schools were:—Sherburn Endowed, 93.63 and 95.93; girls, 93.15 and 88.4; and infants, 88.88 and 78.09.

COUNTY COURT CASE.—On Friday at Selby County Court a claim was made by David Greenwood, the administrator and only son of Sarah Greenwood, deceased, of Church Fenton, against Jacob Whstrop, farmer, Little Fenton, for £60 10s. A counter-claim was filed for £54 for goods sold. Evidence was given that the late Mrs Greenwood died on June 4th last. The claim, which was remitted from the High Court, was made by the executor of the deceased's crops by the deceased, namely, between 1893 and 1913. The defendant had paid £8 10s. into court, leaving the amount now due £54. The counter-claim was made for goods, such as corn, peas, etc., said to have been sold to Mrs Greenwood for a number of years. After hearing several witnesses, his Honour gave a verdict for plaintiff for the amount claimed, with costs. On the counter-claim his Honour also found in favour of Greenwood, but without costs, as he considered defendant was justified in submitting the claim.

ROTHWELL & DISTRICT NEWS.

ROTHWELL

CHURCH BELLS.—Now that the church bells are in order it only remains for the officials to engage bellringers, but it is understood that some difficulty is being experienced in this direction.

WEST RIDING PETTY SESSIONS.—Sensational charges were the subject of investigation at the Leeds West Riding Petty Sessions on Tuesday were Mr. J. W. Morkill (in the chair), Col. Sagar Musgrave, Mr. C. Holliday, Mr. J. Hirst, Mr. J. R. Cross, and Mr. E. Parkin.

PRIMITIVE METHODIST CHURCH.—At the Primitive Methodist Church on Sunday afternoon a service of song, entitled "The choicest gift," was rendered by the Shaftesbury Wesleyan Choir. Mr T. Ward presided, and the connective readings were given by Mr J. Southward. A collection was taken in aid of the organ fund.

PICKWICKIANS.—The Pickwickians at the weekly meeting on Thursday night, was held somewhat late. The evening was presided over by Mr G. W. Nodding, who gave "The temporal advantage of Dodgson and Fogg" (chapter 47, "Pickwick Papers") and "Is learning or wit to be dead," by Mark Twain. Mr J. H. Rawling presided.

MATCHES.—Teams representing the dart, domino, and whist section of the Rothwell Working Men's Club (Marsh Villa) played the representatives of the Armley and Wortley Socialist Club. The Rothwell teams took both in the darts and dominoes, the scores being as follows:—Darts, Armley and Wortley 3,961, Rothwell 3,110; dominoes, Armley and Wortley 141, Rothwell 40. In the whist tournament, however, Rothwell was by 20, the scores being 43 and 17 respectively.

FOOTBALL.—Rothwell Wednesday played Leeds Tramways at Rothwell on Wednesday. Both sides did their share of attacking in the first half, but the Tramways proved the slightly superior, and Billiards netted. Play in the second half was rather rough, Arch and Leas (Rothwell) being sent off. This made matters somewhat easier for the visitors, whose score was further augmented by Bcrton and Drake (penalty). Result: Leeds Tramways 3 goals, Rothwell Wednesday none.

THEFT.—At the Leeds West Riding Petty Sessions on on Tuesday Fred Cossing, a carter, living at Rothwell, was charged with stealing harness mountings, the property of Harry Flockton, of Oulton, and valued at 7s. 6d. The prosecutor spoke to last seeing the harness mountings safe in the harness room of the stable when it was locked up on Monday last. The next morning the stable door was open and the articles were gone. Goddard had given evidence of arrest. Coning was sent to prison for two months with hard labour.

BAZAAR.—The Wesleyans are seeking to raise money for the circuit funds by a two days' bazaar, which was opened in the schoolroom on Thursday afternoon. The ladies have been busy for the last few weeks with their preparations, and an attractive assortment of goods and fancy articles was on the stalls. The opening ceremony was performed on Thursday afternoon by Mrs T. P. Wade, of Scourton Lodge. The Rev. N. W. Thomlinson presided, and said he had some vivid recollections of some remarks made within the last twenty-four hours in vigorous denunciation of the length of time usually occupied in the opening of bazaars. However, the lady who had made the remarks was to speak afterwards, and he hoped she would justify her own observations. Mr Thomlinson then introduced Mrs Wade. She represented in her history two of his old circuits, and he paid a graceful tribute to the work she had done, especially in the Hunslet circuit. Mrs Wade expressed her pleasure at being present to open the bazaar, and said she did it to show her appreciation of the work they had so much at heart. A vote of thanks was accorded Mrs Wade, on the proposition of Mrs Walter Hargreaves, and seconded by Mrs Wood Goldthorp, who to justify her denunciation as mentioned by Mr Thomlinson, said she had heard some people speak for over an hour, and it was very tedious, besides they had been anxious to get to work. (Laughter). The stall-holders were:—Sewing Meeting Stall—Mrs W. Hargreaves, Mrs Senior, Mrs J. Butterick, Mrs Morton, Mrs T. Young, Mrs S. Armitage, and Mrs Copley. Refreshment Stall—Mrs Palmer, Mrs Thomlinson, Mrs W. Batty, Mrs Goldthorpe, Mrs J. Ellis, and Mrs Wood. Fancy Goods Stall—Miss Stephenson, Miss Copley (Mrs Batty, Miss Batty, Miss E. Copley, Miss Elsie Morton, Miss Ethel Morton, Miss E. Senior, and Mrs Hobson. Flower Stall—The Misses Atherton, Miss Emily Smith, Miss Doris Baines, Miss Katherine Holt, Miss Eveline Barker, Miss Eveline Barraclough, Miss Winnie Stephenson, Miss Winnie Lishman, and Miss Nellie Heaton. Sweet Stall—Miss M. Armitage, Miss K. Varley, Miss L. Lee, and Miss N. Butterfield. Married People's Stall—Mrs Marshall, Mrs Rowley, Mrs Stephenson, Mrs Charlesen, Mr and Mrs W. Ellis, Mrs P. Wade, and Mrs J. Abbishaw. Afternoon teas were provided by Mrs H. Armitage, Mrs T. Denton, Mrs Scholey, Mrs T. Lunn, and Mrs Arundel

ALLERTON BYWATER

The report of the Ripon Diocesan Church Building Society shows that £50 was given to Lock Lane, Allerton.

BARWICK

At Barwick School last month the number on the books was 158, and the average attendance 144. The percentage was 91.14 against 88.06.

A meeting will be held in the schools on Friday evening, February 27th, when addresses will be delivered by Mr E. H. Foster, prospective Liberal candidate for the Division, and others. See advt.

ROOKS.—A Barwick-in-Elmet farmer urges that there should be organised action to reduce the number of rooks in country districts, where they do considerable damage at sowing time. Shortly, he points out, farmers will be sowing corn, and unless drastic steps are taken to shoot the rooks, especially at nesting-time, loss will again be suffered. Several owners and farmers in his district have signified their willingness to take part in a concerted shoot, but there remain others who find rooks picturesque inhabitants of the trees around their houses, and are loth to see them destroyed. If the birds are not driven away by any great extent, he suggests that they will be more easily frightened away from a field of corn than is the case at present.

BILLIARDS.—On Friday evening a team from the Garforth Conservative Club paid a visit to Barwick, where they met the representatives of the Village Institute. Some very exciting play was witnessed, most of the games proving very close. When the scores were totalled it was found that the homesters were the winners by 44 points. Details (Barwick names first):—T. Robshaw 47 v. H. Burnley 100, E. Forbes 100 v. J. Barker 97, F. Mounsey 100 v. W. Wormald 91, K. Birch 97 v. F. Allinson 100, J. Robshaw 86 v. W. G. Jackson 100, H. Walton 88, and Fred Lumb 89 v. D. Fowler 100. Fordham 50, Victor Robshaw 100 v. E. Johnson 100, and Fred Lumb 80 v. D. Fowler 100. Totals—Barwick, 819; Garforth Conservative Club, 775.

BOWERS ALLERTON

AUTHORITY OF THE GOSPELS.—At the Men's Bible Class on Friday evening the 70 members present listened with interest to Mr A. Blakley, of Gwrmanton, who gave the first of two lectures on "The authority and probable relation of the first three Gospels." During the 150 years between the birth of Christ and the writing of the Gospels the life and sayings of Jesus made such an impression on the Jews that they were leansed by heart and so passed from one to another. The next generation, however, put it written record, and the four gospels were chosen from a large amount of fragmentary documents on the subject. The oldest and most original of the Gospels is that of St. Mark, who, although he had not personally heard Christ, followed Peter very closely, and the Gospel may be safely considered Peter's account. St. Mark was an important leader of the early Church, and one of the founders, and an earnest student of the works of Christ, and his Gospel might be considered the foundation of the other two Gospels. St Mark's account was written in Greek for the Gentiles. St. Mathew's and St. Luke's Gospels were copied largely from St. Mark's, the difference being simply one of personal bias, as several examples taken from each Gospel proved. St. Mathew, a tax collector and statistician, classified the sayings, as proved by the Sermon on the Mount, while St. Luke, a medical student and a man of sympathy, arranged them according to circumstances and gave a prominent place to Christ's sympathy with women and children. St. Luke was a friend of St. Paul and wrote also the Acts of the Apostles, and he wrote in Greek for the Gentiles. An interesting discussion followed.

CARLTON

WESLEYAN CHURCH.—In connection with home miss ons special sermons were preached at the Carlton Wesleyan Chapel on Sunday by Mr Hiram Keey, of Lofthouse. On Tuesday a public meeting was held, Mr Michael Pitts presiding. Addresses dealing with home missionary work were given by the Rev. N. W. Thomlinson, of the Rothwell Wesleyan Church, and Mr. S. Stephenson. A report, which was of a satisfactory character, was read, and during the evening the solo "Pass it on" was sung by the Rev. N. W. Thomlinson. Collections in aid of the Home Missions were taken at the services.

CROSSGATES

A meeting in connection with the Crossgates and District Sweet Pea Society will be held on Saturday, March 7th. See advt.

The report of the Ripon Diocesan Church Building Society for the year shows that a grant of £50 was made to Manston Church.

At the meeting of the Crossgates Baptist Fellowship on Tuesday evening a discussion on "Should a living wage be the first charge upon a business?" will be introduced by Mr T. Cox. See advt.

CROSSGATES GOLF CLUB.—The annual meeting of the Golf Club was held in the Recreation Hall, Crossgates, on Friday evening, and there were over fifty members present. Mr Hugh Hurst (President) presided. The report and balance sheet were read in detail by the secretary (Mr Finlay). The club has a membership of 152 as compared with 78 in the previous year, and already 18 new members have been elected this season. After spending £40 out of revenue on the extension of the club-house there was a profit on the year of over £20, and, as showing the popularity of the course with visitors, it was stated that a sum of £42 had been taken in green fees. The club is in a prosperous state, and the engagement of a professional (McKechnie, of Gloucester) is a forward step. The report and balance sheet were adopted on the proposition of Mr Hurst, seconded by Mr H. Johnson. Officers were elected as follows:—President, Mr Hurst; captain, Mr John Simpson; hon. sec., Mr N. Llewelyn; hon. treasurer, Mr W. Finlay; committee—Messrs MacCallum, Townsend, Poyser, Thomas, Rushton, Cowling, Coates, and H. Rhodes.

CROSSGATES LITERARY SOCIETY.—In connection with the Literary Society on Monday evening a most interesting lecture was delivered by Mr A. Gilligan, B.Sc., F.G.S., Lecturer in Geology at Leeds University, on "Meteorites." Mr E. Hendewerth presided, and there was a good attendance. The lecture was illustrated by a number of slides, and several specimens were shown, as well as some under a powerful microscope. These bodies were regarded with veneration by the ancients, their unknown origin leaving great room for the imagination. Popularly they were known as shooting stars, and a meteoric display might be expected at periods of 33 years. Some noted falls had occurred in the British Isles, two in Yorkshire, but no record of any in Leeds was known. There was no authentic case of any personal injury sustained, but roofs o' buildings had been penetrated. The state of Arizona was the richest in specimens, and examples were dredged up by the "Challenger" during its expedition for deep sea sounding. The most plausible theory of the origin of these bodies was that they were material from comets attracted by gravitation, their incandescent appearance being due to the fusion caused by friction in falling. The speed attained was as much as 260 feet per second. Acid in the atmosphere rapidly decomposed their elements and specimens in the museums needed protection. On the motion of Mr R. H. Carr, seconded by Mr S. H. Young, a hearty vote of thanks was accorded the lecturer. Mr J. E. Broadbent officiated at the lantern.

LIBERALISM.—On Friday evening a meeting of Liberals was held in the Wesleyan Lecture Hall, and there was a good attendance. The first of a series of lectures on the land and housing question was delivered by Mr Marriott Morley, J.P., of the Central Land and Housing Council, who dealt mainly with the historical aspect of the land problem, and at the close he answered a number of questions which were put to him by the members of the audience. Mr W. G. Stephenson (President of the Crossgates Liberal Association), who presided, proposed a vote of thanks to Mr Morley, and Mr F. Hartop having seconded, it was cordially passed.

GARFORTH

LANGUAGE.—At the Leeds West Riding Petty Sessions on Tuesday Andrew Backhouse, a labourer, of Garforth, was summoned for having used obscene language in Main Street, Garforth, on Saturday last. P.C. Holmes gave evidence, but defendant denied using the language, and corroborative evidence was called by the police. A fine of 2s. 6d. and costs was imposed.

WHIST DRIVE AND DANCE.—On Monday evening a whist drive and dance promoted by the teachers of the infants' department, took place in the Parish rooms, and there were over 100 present. Ladies—1, Miss Dickinson; 2, Mrs Jermy; consolation, Mrs P. Barber. Gentlemen—1, Mr Teale; special, Mr Cooper; 2, Mr Herbert Thompson; consolation, Mr Robson. An enjoyable dance followed.

SCHOOL ATTENDANCE.—The attendance was up last month in all the schools in Garforth. The percentage for the district was 90.66 against 83.31 on January, 1913. The figures for the local schools were:—Garforth Council, 91.62 against 89.71; Garforth Council Infants, 88.88 and 77.14; East Garforth, 91.78 and 82.21; Garforth Parochial, on and 89.87; Garforth Parochial Infants, 84.39 and 70.79; and Garforth Roman Catholic, 85.71 and 89.47.

TWENTY-ONE CONVICTIONS.—At the Leeds West Riding Petty Sessions on Tuesday Herbert Heathcote, labourer, of no fixed abode, was charged with begging in Garforth on Sunday, February 10th. P.C. Beever stated that he saw the defendant stopping foot passengers on the Aberford Road. When stopped, he said he had had nothing to eat since the previous day. He had in his possession a complete tramp's outfit. There were 21 previous convictions against him, and he was sent to prison for three months with hard labour.

PICTURE HOUSE.—The patronage accorded this popular house of entertainment continues to be satisfactory, and the fare provided this week has been highly appreciated. The three-ver subject "The Pumpkin" is drawn as a setting for "The Fortune Hunter," one of the films described in the recent disastrous fire in Leeds, is a very fine production, the plot, scenery, acting, and photographic being of a very high quality. For this half of the week a strong programme includes another three-part picture, exclusive to this hall, entitled "Saved by Fire," a story of strong dramatic interest and interesting situations and incidents, while "Black Beauty" deals with the sagacity and intelligence of a horse. It is a subject that strongly appeals to all animal lovers. The programme for the first half of next week includes a three-part picture "The Black Ball," which unfolds a fascinating story somewhat out of the usual run, and depicts an exciting chase over the roofs of tremendously high buildings. Other dramatic subjects are "Redemption of a Soul" and "Brave Little Woman." For the second half an interesting and outstanding features are "The Blind Sculptor," "The Gallop of Death," and "Attack on the Lighter," all good close subjects of absorbing interest, while the remaining pictures and comedies complete the programmes. For times and prices see advt.

HALTON

GUN CLUB.—The Halton Gun Club had a field day on Monday at the Irwin Arms, Halton. The sweepstakes were decided, the first being divided by F. Hemingway (Bruntcliffe) and J. Elam (Leeds), both killing up. The second tourney was won by Stead (Leeds), with four kills out of five birds; the third was divided by Stead, Walker, Elam, Taylor, and Morris; the fourth was won by Stead; and the last event was divided by Elam, Hemingway, and Clarkson.

LECTURE.—Mr T. Redington, of the Leeds University, delivered a lecture on "Educational Gardens" before the members of the Templeversam Allotments Association on Thursday Mr J. W. Chadwick, who presided, gave an account of the formation of the Allotments Association and its activities. Mr Redington dealt with his subject in a racy and interesting manner, dwelling first upon some of his experiences in various parts of Yorkshire when delivering lectures on horticultural subjects. He then went on to describe in detail the conditions conducing to the formation of educational gardens. The University authorities would supply seeds, artificial manures, and fruit, and also give practical instruction. The allotments would pay for the land, purchase farmyard manure and pea rods, and undertake to do all the work according to the directions of the instructor. The produce would belong entirely to the students. Several questions were asked, and Mr Redington answered at length. Mr Redington then proposed a vote of thanks to the Chairman, and this was passed. Mr S. B. Chadwick proposed a vote of thanks to the lecturer for the simple and interesting way in which he had treated his subject. Mr C. E. Goodall seconded and hoped that the Allotments Association would do something towards establishing an educational garden at Halton. The audience accorded the vote of thanks in the most hearty manner.

THE PROPOSED TRAMWAY TO HALTON.—The Leeds Corporation Bill was on Monday before Mr Gully, one of the Examiners of Standing Order Proofs. Its consideration had been put off for the contested Hunslet and Guiseley District Councils to the proposed tramway. Mr Harry Pritchard, who appeared for the Bill, said the only point now standing had reference to these consents. The Corporation themselves were the local road authority in regard to the trams in question, and he now produced the consent of the Rural District Council of Hunslet and the Urban District Council of Guiseley. The Examiner: On condition that the trams are completed within two years. Mr Pritchard: Yes. I was going to mention that period before you this; that was sufficient for outstanding orders, and that these consents were the consents of the local road authorities. But Mr Browne, who represents the West Riding County Council, contends that that Council is the road authority. It is not necessary to discuss that matter now, because we have the consent of the County Council, and I now produce it. To guard myself in the future, I am not admitting that the County Council is the road authority. The Examiner found that there had been a technical non-compliance with the standing orders owing to the production of the consents being delayed, and the matter must come before the Standing Orders Committee before the Bill can be sent for first reading.

LIBERALISM.—The annual meeting of the Templenewsam Liberal Association was held on Thursday evening at Halton, and Mr G. D. Crosthwaite (President) presided over a good attendance of members. After the election of officers for the ensuing year, Mr E. H. Foster, J.P., K.C., the prospective candidate for the Barkston Ash Division, delivered a short address on the Government's programme. Mr Martin Harvey, President of the Barkston Ash Liberal Association, also gave an instructive address on "Organization."

KIPPAX

UNITED METHODIST CHURCH.—Collections were taken in this church on Sunday and Monday evenings in aid of home and foreign missions. Mr Wilkinson (Castleford) was the preacher on Sunday, while Monday evening's meeting was held by Mr Rev. H. W. B. Chapman (circuit minister, Castleford) and the Rev. T. B. Davenport.

MINER IN TROUBLE.—At the Leeds West Riding Petty Sessions on Tuesday Moses Hope, miner, of Kippax, was charged with being drunk and disorderly at Kippax on Sunday. P.C. Aldborough stated that about 10.35 p.m. on Sunday he was on duty in High Street, Kippax, when he met Moses Hope, who was drunk and making use of bad language. He asked him to go home, but he took no notice and the officer repeated his request and told him he would be reported. Hope it was alleged, then drew a knife and ran at the officer, who closed with him, a struggle taking place with both men on the ground. Eventually the policeman succeeded in getting the knife. A fine of 10s. and costs was imposed.

PARISH CHURCH.—Services in connection with the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel in Foreign Parts were held in the church on Sunday. The Vicar was the preacher in the morning, and the Rev. F. Beaumont in the evening.—The Girls Friendly Society held a social in the Schoolroom on Monday evening, and there was a capital attendance. The supervision of the Vicar and Mrs Smith. The Vicar gave a short address on the work of the G.F.S. Refreshments were served by the following ladies:—Miss Beggan, Miss Handley, Miss Waring, Miss Byers, Miss Wright, and Miss Cawood, assisted by Mr H. Cockerham and Mr A. Eastwood. The music for dancing was supplied by Mrs Gill, and Mr Leonard Wilson acted as M.C.

WESLEYAN CHURCH.—The young men of the Bible Class in connection with this church had their annual soiree in the schoolroom on Tuesday evening. Mr J. P. Prince, who presided, gave a short address. The following programme was gone through:—Pianoforte solo, Mr H. Gummerson; recitation song, "Washing Day," Girls' Junior Class; whistling solo, Mr S. Gummerson; recital, "The Farringdown," Miss Fleming; solo, "Carmencita," Miss Crowther; whistling solo, Mr S. Gummerson; recital, "Welcome goes to Riverboro," Miss Fleming; action song, "The tall top hat," Sunday School boys; whistling solo, Mr S. Gummerson; recital, "Bevar Rabbit," Miss Fleming; solo, "Ferryman," Miss Crowther; humorous dialogue, "A husband's experiment," Bible Class. There was a fairly large audience and a very pleasant evening was brought to a close with the singing of the National Anthem.

BOOKMAKER'S OFFENCE.—At the Leeds West Riding Petty Sessions on Tuesday James Newell, a bookmaker, of Kippax, was charged with following for the purpose of betting at Kippax. P.C. Gough gave evidence that about 2.40 p.m. on Saturday he was on duty in High Street, Kippax, when he noticed Newell approached by a man who gave him a slip of paper which he put into his waistcoat pocket. A moment later another man came up and gave him something. Gough went up to him and charged him with the offence, and Newell replied, "Well, I don't think you saw me take a bet since dinner time." When searched, three slips of paper relating to horseraces and to the value of £1 4s. 6d. were found, in additional to a pocket book, sporting paper, and coins to the value of £8 10s. 5½d. Newell had nothing to say and was fined £10 and costs, the Chairman remarking that they were determined to put a stop to such men.

THE LATE MR THOMAS FARRER.—By the death of Mr Thomas Farrer, Kippax has lost the oldest and most widely known local preacher the village possesses. The deceased was at work on Tuesday last week, became seriously ill early on Wednesday morning, and died on Thursday morning. His connection with the Primitive Methodist Chapel in Kippax extended over 47 years, and he was a thoroughly devoted local preacher. His services were much sought after by the neighbouring chapels. Public officers had no attraction for him, and social and political matters he did not allow to interfere with the one object of his life, viz., that of ministering to the spiritual needs of his fellow men. The greatest religious revival that Kippax has known was led by Mr Farrer. A burial service was held in the Primitive Methodist Chapel on Sunday, the officiating minister being the Rev. B. B. Farlow, of Castleford. The hymns "Hark, hark, my soul" and "Only remember I love you," and "Safe home" were sung by the large congregation, and the organist played the "Dead March" as the cortege was leaving the chapel. The Rev. B. B. Farlow officiated at the grave side, and the choir sang the hymn "For ever with the Lord." Mr Farrer was 64 years old and leaves a wife and two daughters.

METHLEY

MEDICAL OFFICER RESIGNS.—At Pontefract Guardians' meeting on Saturday Dr. Wigin, medical officer for the Methley district of the Pontefract Union, on the ground of ill-health, resigned the post, which he has held since 1876. The Chairman (Mr. T. W. Nicholson) said the Board would accept the resignation with regret, as in all the 35 years Dr. Wigin had been their officer he did not remember a single complaint. It was also decided to send a letter of sympathy with Dr. Wigin in his illness.

MICKLEFIELD

At Micklefield School, mixed department, last month the percentage of attendance was 92.13 which compares for January, 1913, and at the Infants' School, 80.71 against 85.21.

OULTON

OULTON GOLF CLUB.—February Medal.—R. K. Swales, 88, 9, 79; G. Parish, 101, 18, 83; N. D. Long, 88, 4, 84; A. P. Belland, 94, 9, 85; F. Denton, 103, 16, 87; Thos. Swales, 108, 16, 92.

DRINK.—At the Leeds West Riding Petty Sessions on Tuesday William Lee, a labourer, of Oulton, was summoned for having been drunk and disorderly on the Aberford Road, Oulton. On the evidence of P.C. Coldwell he was fined 10s. and costs.

SERVICE OF SONG.—In connection with the Oulton Wesleyan Sunday School a service of song, entitled "Billy Bray," was given on Sunday afternoon by the male voice choir. Mr Herbert Armitage, of Rothwell, presided, and during the service a number of prizes were distributed to the scholars of the Sunday School by Mr John Ablishaw.

THE CHURCH.—The Rev. E. B. Smith, vicar of Kippax, addressed a men's service at Oulton St. John's Church on Sunday afternoon. The attendance was not so large as on previous occasions; nevertheless the service was of a bright nature. Basing his address on the words "When I was a child I spake as a child," he spoke of the lack of interest shown by the men in church matters. He pointed out how as children their thoughts and speech were innocent, and said it was a matter of regret that men would not go back and start where they had left off and try to blot out the years of materialism.

ROBIN HOOD

UNITED METHODIST CHURCH.—A departure from the usual P.S.A. service was made at the United Methodist Church on Sunday afternoon, when a musical service, arranged by Mr T. Hollings and party, was given. An enjoyable programme of solos and musical items was gone through. The following items were given by the quartette party:—"God is a spirit," "Jesus Saviour," and "Nature's Praise." Mr T. Hollings gave as a violin solo Van Biene's "Broken Melody," and Miss Hilda Hollings sang "The Nazarene" and "A voice from Paradise"; and Mr Tom Robinson "Jesu, Lover." Miss Emily Hollings recited "The doctor's fee" and "The flower alley." Mr J. Naylor presided.

FARMER PROSECUTED.—At the Leeds West Riding Petty Sessions on Tuesday Douglas Jackson Boyle, farmer, of Robin Hood, was summoned for moving a pig without the necessary licence. P.C. Taylor said that on Monday, February 9th, he was in the Whitkirk Auction Mart when the defendant came in with a pig for which he had no licence. He was told that Templenewsam was an infected area and he would be reported. Boyle said he did not know it was necessary to have a licence. Asked by the Bench how long he had kept pigs, defendant replied "Four months." The Chairman's remark that he should be acquainted with the laws o' pigs caused a ripple of laughter. A fine of 1s. and costs was imposed.

THE COST OF KEEPING A WIFE.—At Wakefield West Riding Court on Friday John Wainwright, a young bywerkman living at Lingwell Gate, was summoned by his wife, Lucy Wainwright, for desertion. It was stated that in June last defendant deserted his wife, and was summoned, the case being adjourned for a month. In the meantime complainant, who was in a weak state of health, attempted to commit suicide. Eventually the summons was withdrawn, and she defendant agreed to pay his wife 6s. a week, but he had not kept the payments up. The defendant said he could not afford to pay her that much. He was already paying 7s. a week for the baby (12 months old). The Chairman (Mr W. W. Scarth): Do you expect your wife to live on less than the child? The Bench made an order for 5s. a week.

ROUNDHAY

THE LATE MR BURROW.—The death is announced of Mr A. L. Burrow, Roundhay, head of the firm of Messrs. Burrow and Stern, brush manufacturers. He was taken suddenly ill with pneumonia on Friday. Mr Burrow was not very well-known in public life, but he was for one of the vice-presidents of the British Brush Manufacturers' Association, a position he held for many years. He did a lot of work on the Conference and was well-known in the brush trade in all parts of Europe.

NO LICENCE.—At the Leeds West Riding Petty Sessions on Tuesday Harry Needham, a farm labourer, of Whinmoor, was summoned for moving pigs without a licence. P.C. Taylor gave evidence that defendant had taken a pig into the Whitkirk Auction Mart, which was in an infected area, without a licence. Defendant was fined 1s. and costs.

STOURTON

P.S.A.—An interesting address was given at the Primitive Methodist P.S.A. service on Sunday afternoon by Mr Seaman. Mr Collinson presided.

SEEPING OUT.—At the Leeds West Riding Petty Sessions on Tuesday George Nuttall, a labourer, of no fixed abode, was charged with sleeping out. P.C. Boyes stated that he found the prisoner at the coal siding at Stourton Railway Station, in Hanover Square, Leeds, on Saturday, 1ed to Henry Ellis, seventeen years of age, whose parents live at Stourton, being sent, at Leeds Police Court, on Monday, to prison for two months' hard. He was charged with stealing a silver watch from another young man named Reginald Elsworth. They had both been medically examined, and it was alleged that he took the watch from Elsworth's clothing.

PRIMITIVE METHODIST CHAPEL.—A successful tea and concert were given in the Primitive Methodist Schoolroom on Saturday evening in aid of the chapel funds. The tea, which was well attended, was provided by Mrs Bosomworth and Mrs Crossley. The concert which followed was an enjoyable one, the items being provided by the members of the Ladyjit Lane Band of Chapel. Mrs Dixon, of Stourton, presided, and at the close a hearty vote of thanks to all who had contributed towards the success of the evening was proposed by Mr Collinson, and seconded by Mr Crossley.

DOUBLE CHARGE.—At the Leeds West Riding Petty Sessions on Tuesday William Rushby, a coal hawker, of Stourton, was summoned for driving a vehicle without a light and also for using obscene language. P.C. Sowray stated that about 8.30 p.m. on Saturday, February 7th, he was on the Pontefract Road, Stourton, when he saw the defendant in charge of a cart which was without a light. He spoke to him about it, and defendant said the lamp was broken and he had no money to feed it. Witness did so, and the lamp was sold. This he told to the defendant, who commenced using obscene language. When told he would be reported he said he should not, and that I will kill you," and waved a scale pan above his head. Defendant's wife appeared and said her husband had had some drink at the time. A fine of 5s. including costs in each case was imposed.

HUNSLET BOARD OF GUARDIANS.

EMIGRATION OF CHILDREN.

GUARDIANS QUESTION THE WISDOM OF THE POLICY.

The fortnightly meeting of the Hunslet Board of Guardians was held at the Union Offices on Wednesday—Mr J. Butterick presiding in the absence of the Chairman and vice-chairman. Other members present were Mrs Dickinson, Dr. Groves, Father Cody, Messrs W. Schofield, J. R. Chappell, W. A. Appleyard, J. Hodgkinson, J. Bannister, J. Gavins, T. Conyers, J. Flanagan, W. Verity, E. B. Pickersgill, W. Lunn, G. W. Peace, J. W. Verity, and W. Stead (with the Deputy Clerk (Mr F. Ward)).

It was reported that during the fortnight there had been five deaths in the Workhouse and the number of vagrants relieved was 41 as against 62 last year, an increase of 21.

The minutes of the Children's Homes Committee showed that the application of the superintendent and matron for increases of salaries was considered on a reference from the Board, and it was resolved that the Board be recommended to increase the salaries of Mr and Mrs Bell, from £80 and £35 to £90 and £40 per annum respectively, together with the emoluments already assigned them, subject to the usual conditions. Letters were received from the Salvation Army Emigration Offices offering to undertake the emigration of any children entrusted to them on the terms stated, and it was resolved that arrangements be made with the Salvation Army to undertake the emigration of the whole of the children.

Mr Lunn referred to the number of children who were being sent to Canada. He did not know, he said, whether the Homes Committee had satisfied themselves that it was in the best interest of the children that they were sent away. He would like to know under what circumstance they took in connection with the children. It was easy to work up children, and if they put glowing reports likely to inflame children's minds as to the way they would naturally get children to go. He was opposed to sending the best blood of the country to other lands whether they were the Colonies or not, and he sought to try to find employment elsewhere for the boys and girls in this country than send them off to Canada. He did not know whether the Board had any information as to the care and so the children after they had brought it was an important matter that they should be cared for and their future be looked after. Personally he thought it was much better for the children to be kept at home where they were well looked after.

Mr Butterick, to Mr Lunn: Do you object to the children being emigrated just because they can be better done to at home?

Mr Lunn: Yes.

Mr Butterick said that was not the experience of the Homes Committee. He agreed with some of the ideas of Mr Lunn, and at the same time there were others with which he did not agree. The committee took all the care possible to ascertain who the children were from, and they belonged the nature of their surroundings, and what the consequence was of placing them out of the country, and it was always in the best interests of the children that the committee recommended emigration in the cases of certain of them. Another thing they had the report of the association through whom the children were sent, as to the homes in which the children had been placed, the way in which they were treated, and the progress they were making in the line of business they had taken up. He could say the committee watched with a jealous care the future of the children sent out. The committee, Mr Butterick said, had no particular fancy for emigration, yet it had always been done in the interest of the child's future. Possibly it might not have always turned out so, yet they had had reports from time to time which resulted in them coming to the conclusion that in the majority of the cases it was the best thing that could have happened to the child. Some of the letters read by the superintendent and even by the committee justified their action.

Mr Conyers asked why the Homes Committee had refused to allow a girl to emigrate from away. In the past they had been sent through Mrs Birt.

Mr Butterick said perhaps Mr Chappell would reply.

Mr Chappell said in the first place the children were very often sent out because they had relatives in Canada. He instanced how a few weeks ago a girl had left one of the homes who had done very well, and in the last batch the girl's sister was one of them. Another point was that the children had very undesirable relatives, and it was in the interest of the children that they should be removed away from people who would have a bad influence over them. The committee had been under Mrs Birt, because she had given notice that the charge per child would be considerably more—£3 per child more.

Mr Lunn expressed satisfaction at the explanation.

Father Cody said the reports received as to children in Canada were most gratifying to the committee, yet he did not agree that Roman Catholic children should be sent out under the supervision of the Salvation Army. In the past they had been sent out by the Catholic Emigration Authority, and he would move an amendment that the minutes be passed with the exception of the part relating to the removal of children to Canada, which he proposed should be referred back to the Homes Committee.

Dr. Groves seconded Father Cody's amendment. People who were not Catholics, he said, would object to their children being sent out under the Catholic authority, and naturally Catholics would object to their children being sent out by the Salvation Army.

Mr Hargreaves asked why boys were not found employment here, as there were several farmers asking for boys from 13 to 16 years of age.

Mr Butterick: We have had nothing brilliant offered from farmers at home yet.

Mr Flanagan supported Father Cody.

Mr Lunn said he did not object to children being sent under the Salvation Army. They were the most musical and the most lively, and they had the best connections with the religious bodies than any other emigration association. If the ship went down they would get to the place they were striving for, and there would be no difference in that respect. (Laughter).

Father Cody: There may be the difference in the distance. (Laughter).

Mr Lunn: Perhaps some people would not want to go direct, and that would be the only difference he knew. (Laughter). He thought the committee had made a wise change.

Mr Gavins said that while he agreed with Mr Lunn he knew the parents of some of the children, and he thought it was better that they should be taken away from their environment. He knew there was a certain class of boy labour in this country, not that he was an advocate of boy labour as being cheaper, but because he realised that they were feeding in the industrial world the want of boy labour, and in the future this country would be denuded of young men who were learning a business, to carry on the industrial part of the community. He thought it advisable to pause and see if they could not get the boys put into homes where they could learn a legitimate trade and make them into craftsmen. He did not mean to drive them into a blind alley. If Father Cody would make his amendment to read that the portion relating to the two Catholic children be referred back, he would support him as he was in his rights and entitled to their play.

Mr J. W. Verity said that when he had visited the different institutions he had been asked by several of the boys if they would be sent to Canada, as they had relatives there. He had learnt that Mrs Birt had given satisfaction in looking after the children, but the Salvation Army had given a guarantee that the children of the Roman Catholic faith would not be interfered with in regard to religion either in going across or upon landing.

Mr W. Verity said he agreed with Mr Lunn that boys mixed with ratepayers' money would be better kept in the country. He had never agreed with sending children away.

Mr Chappell said the matter was fully discussed at the meeting of the Homes Committee, and the minutes recorded a unanimous decision. They had the understanding given to them that the Catholic children would be placed with Catholic people.

Father Cody asked how the Salvation Army were to know the kind of Catholic hom

POLITICS IN BARKSTON ASH.

PUBLIC DEBATE AT WHITKIRK.

MR E. H. FOSTER, J.P., MOVES THE KING'S SPEECH.

THREE AMENDMENTS PROPOSED—MR J. A. MACKAY AND HOME RULE.

Under the auspices of the Crossgates Baptist Church Fellowship a political debate took place in the hall at Whitkirk on Tuesday evening, and there was a good attendance. County Councillor Dewhirst, of Wibsnoor, presided, and he was supported by Mr E. H. Foster, J.P., C.C., prospective Liberal candidate for Barkston Ash, and Mr J. A. Mackay, of Harrogate, who formerly resided at Halton.

Mr Foster, in moving the King's Speech, dealt principally with the Irish question. What was the position to-day, he asked. They had three-fourths of Ireland asking for Home Rule, demanded at election after election, and they had a quarter of the people living in the North-East part of Ireland stating that if they carried Home Rule they would resist it by force. The demand for Home Rule had existed since 1801, because before that time there was a Parliament in Dublin, which was taken away by bribery of the most unblushing kind. He believed that the effect of granting Home Rule to Ireland would be that the Roman Catholics and Protestants would learn to live and work together in public life as they did in England. Religious animosities were dying out in every part of the world. The Government were willing to meet every grievance, real or imaginary, that Ulster had. In regard to the constitution of the Second Chamber, he said that the English people would have been content to put up with the House of Lords if it had done its work at all reasonably. A Second Chamber, if performing its functions properly, should be a revising chamber, and should hold the balance equally, but could anyone say the House of Lords answered that description? He referred to how it had rejected Education, Licensing, and Plural Voting Bills introduced by the Government, and said that what they intended to set up was a chamber in which the hereditary principle would be abolished and the members would be men of experience and ability, hired to exercise the power that would be given to them. In regard to housing, he said that the manner in which it had been carried out in great populous centres was a disgrace to any civilised community, and in the country it was not a matter of bad and insanitary houses, but no houses at all. The Government intended to give the agricultural labourer not only a house, but a piece of land and some security in his occupation. It always happened, he said, that when a Liberal Government was in power that the Opposition demanded a General Election. He did not know how many they were demanding at present, but they, at least, wanted elections on Home Rule and Welsh Disestablishment. They were actively charged with moving for guidance, but so far from that being the case he believed the historian would wonder they had moved so slowly. (Applause).

Mr J. A. Mackay said Mr Foster had stated that since the Act of Union Ireland had expressed its desire for Home Rule through its Parliamentary representatives, but they ought to know something about the electoral system in Ireland and the small constituencies. (Hear, hear). Mr Foster had said that a fourth of Ireland did not desire Home Rule, but he was bound to remind them that Ulster paid 29 per cent. of the taxation of Ireland. He had also stated a belief that with the passing of Home Rule religious difficulties would cease, but the Ulster Party believed that they would increase. In regard to the House of Lords, he said he believed that with all its faults it contained a large number of men who held their positions by selection and not by the hereditary principle. (Hear, hear). It would be interesting to know how many had been selected by the Radical Government, how many had served a splendid apprenticeship in the House of Commons, and how many had been Councillors, aldermen, and mayors of cities. He believed that the land question was a mere vote-catching device to draw the attention of the people away from the real issues. He proposed that it would be a disaster to proceed with the Government of Ireland Bill until it had been submitted to the people. Home Rule, when it had been the question before the electorate, had been twice rejected by the people, and it certainly was not an issue at the last election. The issues were the land taxes and the people's budget—the big, beautiful budget. (Laughter). Who said Home Rule was an issue? ("Mr Asquith.") He mentioned the names of a number of Ministers who made no reference to it in their addresses, and stated that when Mr Birrell was asked at Bristol he said that Home Rule was not an issue. On the 8th December, 1910, when Mr Asquith knew he could not rule the country without the Irish vote he said the Liberal Party would grant Home Rule, and never before. Mr Redmond, a month before that, said he was going to the British Parliament with one purpose only, and that was shut out of the necessities of the English party system he was going to get Home Rule for Ireland. Did the people know anything about the Home Rule measure? Did they know that by one clause 42 Irish members were to remain at Westminster, not to represent anyone, but to vote on domestic questions, and the English Members would have no vote on theirs? The Unionist Party demanded an election because on this most important question they considered that the voice of Nonconformity, Ulster would never retract. The people knew too well that the object of the Nationalist Party was to drive them out of their civil and religious liberty. They were dealing with a people who had a history behind them and ideals before them. Their ideal was to remain in the Empire and enjoy the privileges of just government. (Applause).

The Rev. J. Miller Hamilton asked Mr Mackay if anyone could tell them an election since 1885 at which Home Rule had not been one of the principal questions. (Hear, hear). Mr Mackay stated that a fourth of Ireland was against Home Rule, but it was a fifth. Again he said that a fourth paid 29 per cent. of the taxation. What fourth? If he meant Ulster, Mr MacKay did not tell them that 17 out of the 33 Members in Ulster were in favour of Home Rule. (Applause). He had stated his belief that with the passing of Home Rule religious difficulties would increase, but his (Mr Hamilton's) opinion was that they would not increase. He mentioned that a Baptist deacon was a candidate for a County Council constituency in Dublin, and he was returned by Roman Catholic votes. His belief was that Home Rule would be the death knell of religious bigotry. If Home Rule was not granted to Ulster along with the rest of Ireland Belfast would suffer enormously from the upheaval in commercial matters.

Mr. F. Hyde (Halton), in an eloquent little speech, proposed an amendment regretting that in the King's Speech there was no mention of the Woman's Suffrage Bill. She said the women's question was not a mere sentimental, like the Irish question, but was a tragedy, in the course of which some of the best women of the country had been driven into open rebellion.

Mrs Dodgson, who seconded, said the social work of the country would not be done properly until they had more women working together.

Mr A. Chadwick (Halton), who supported Mr MacKay's amendment, said he believed it was thought by the Government that if they gave the ladies the vote they would use it in the Conservative interest. (Laughter). They would find that the Government would attempt to disfranchise or destroy all those who did not support them. (Laughter). The brewers were considered to be Tory, and the "Trade" had to be destroyed. The Church was considered to vote the same way, and its property was to be confiscated. The plural voter was supposed to vote Conservative, and he was to be destroyed. If they supported the Government that was all right and they got what they—wanted. (Laughter). In regard to Home Rule, Mr Foster had mentioned the Colonies, but if they took the most recent example it was exactly the opposite. In Ireland it was a policy of decentralization, but in South Africa they destroyed Parliaments and united them in one. The Unionist Party said they would have one Parliament in this country

Mr T. Cox (Halton) proposed an amendment regretting that the Government had not made a reduction in the cost of armaments, and made no effort to do away with the right of capture at sea in time of war. The country was spending £200,000,000 a year, or about £4 per head of the population. He said there were men growing up who were shirking on small wages and they said "Why should I pay £20 a year for security when I have nothing to secure. If the German Emperor came here and took possession he cannot give me less than I have now." (Laughter).

Mr Young (Halton) spoke in support of Mr MacKay's amendment.

Mr J. A. MacKay, in reply to Mr Hamilton, said that Mr Foster stated three-parts of Ireland wanted Home Rule, and he accepted that position. In regard to commerce, he said that every Chamber of Commerce in Ireland had passed a resolution against Home Rule. The business men of Ireland held that the trade of the country would go down. He still believed that Home Rule would increase the religious difficulties.

Mr Foster, in reply to the amendments, said that if the growth of armaments in Europe went on at the rate of the last few years it would bring revolution or war. The Government had, however, to take things as they were, and they had to maintain the supremacy of the sea and protect the trade routes. With regard to woman's suffrage, he was in favour of it, but in his fictitious character he must oppose it. (Laughter). The movement had made great strides in forty years, but he thought the ladies were impatient. (Laughter). He did not, however, think they had the support of their sex, and the sober opinion of the country was against lawlessness. Mr MacKay had referred to the number of votes by which Irish Members were returned, but they must take the population as it was, and it was one of the grievances of the country that by the legislation of the past it had been depopulated. They had, however, the enormous majority of the people asking for vote-catching device, but it was singular that the Tory Party always said that when the Liberals set out to remedy a great grievance. In the early days of the Insurance Act they said it was a vote-catching device. (Laughter). In regard to Home Rule not being before the country at last election, he quoted a speech by Lord Lansdowne, wherein he said that if he went, and Bill was heard Mr Asquith in the Albert Hall make that abundantly clear. But what was the attitude of Ulster? The people there said that election or no election they would oppose Home Rule. (Applause).

No vote was taken, and the proceedings terminated with the usual votes of thanks, proposed by Mr Diggle, seconded by Mr Hartop.

Mr. PAUL. BLANCHARD,

GARFORTH GOLF CLUB.

ANNUAL MEETING.

The first annual meeting of the Garforth Golf Club was held on Friday night at the Hotel Metropole, Leeds, under the chairmanship of Mr C. E. Cass.

The report and accounts, which were adopted, showed that the subscriptions received amounted to £417 10s., and that the membership was as follows:—Foundation members, 303 men, 105; ladies, 58; juveniles, 10; country members, 3; honorary members, 5; total, 211.

During the year the club had two trophies presented, viz., from Colonel Gascoigne and Mr H. S. Childe. Mr T. H. Pratt has presented a small cup to the winner of the Darlington Cup, and has promised a similar trophy for the next two years to the winner of this cup. The winner of the Darlington Cup was C. P. Denby, and the Childe Cup was won by the captain, H. E. Smithson. In September last it was decided to call in Dr. Mackenzie to advise on the laying out of the course. His plan was accepted, and it is hoped to have no new greens made this winter, provided the necessary financial support is given to the club. It is hoped to change to the new course in June next.

In July last the committee authorised the issue of £1,000 debentures bearing interest at 6 per cent. per annum; of this sum only £225 was applied for, the major portion by members of the Committee. "Dr. Mackenzie," proceeded the report, "tells us our turf is the finest for golf within a radius of 20 miles from Leeds, and that the sur-set way to success is to get the course properly laid out with the least possible delay. If this is to be carried out the Committee must ask for a good proportion of the debentures to be taken up by the members. In the meantime the Committee unanimously recommend that a levy of £1 1s. be made on each male member of the club, to enable the construction of the new greens to be proceeded with without hindrance, and it is hoped that this appeal will meet with a full response." The net loss for the year was £38 14s. 3d.

Mr H. F. Smithson was re-elected captain; Mr G. H. Walker was elected vice-captain; Mr Henry Sandy, hon. secretary; and Mr C. E. Cass is the Chairman of a newly-elected Committee of twelve.

On the motion of Mr H. F. Smithson, seconded by Mr J. H. Denby, a resolution was carried approving of the subscriptions fixed by the General Committee during the last year and giving them discretionary powers to fix increased subscriptions and entrance fees until the next annual meeting. It was stated that the present subscription for men is three guineas and for ladies one-and-a-half guineas.

Mr Denby, in proposing a vote of thanks to the officers, expressed the opinion that Garforth was likely to prove one of the most successful golf clubs in Yorkshire.

The Chairman, replying to the vote of thanks, said the club had been exceptionally lucky in securing the services of Dr. Mackenzie as the architect of the course. Great credit was also due to Williamson, the professional, for his valuable advice, and already the alterations effected on the course had fully justified his selection by the members. (Hear, hear). Mr Cass added that it was intended to carry on the work of construction to the end of April, and for that purpose a sum of £170 10s. was necessary. He appealed to the members to show a generous spirit in responding to the guinea levy and in taking up debentures so that the club, which had a very promising future, might rapidly be placed in a sound paying position.

At the close of the meeting £100 was promised in debentures by the members present.

BRAMHAM MOOR HUNT

MEET AT WIGHILL PARK.

The Bramham Moor Hounds met on Friday at Wighill Park, the residence of Lord Hawke's brother, the Hon. Godfrey. The pack hunted very slowly, and with many checks, through Bilton Wood and Bickerton Springs, across Rudgate, and forward over the York road with Wetherby Road close to the Bickerton Stud Farm.

Continuing slowly through Lingerolt, the fox reached Oates Wood, and there doubling back, ran through Goose Moor and Lingerolt, and with Bickerton village on the left, recrossed the York High Road. He was then taken through Bickerton Springs and Bilton Wood, and with Nova Scotia on the right, headed east for Fairy Cross, but declining left-handed, was lost short of the York and Wetherby Road, after a tedious, dragging hunt, at a little better than walking pace, of an hour and a half.

A remarkable example of the varying scent carried by the different foxes was now instanced in a fine gallow from Marston Whin of exactly an hour. After running up to the grassy lane which leads to Bilton, hounds turned right handed and crossed the grasses to Wilstrop. Without any hesitation the fox ran the length of this covert and straight on to the railway crossing, where it gave place to a small unnamed triangular covert about half-a-mile on the Skip Bridge side of Marston Station.

Going forward over fields and Boroughbridge Road, the pack ran without any real check, only hovering once or twice, but never needing the huntsman's assistance, with Moor Monkton Church close on the right, to Red House Wood. This is a four-and-a-half-mile point, and was covered in about 23 minutes, over a capital grass line, only one ploughed field being touched. At Red House the fox ran to the south end of the covert, and there doubling back, left it very much where he entered, and ran up past the old windmill nearly to Moor Monkton Rectory. There, turning right handed, he made his way straight to Skip Bridge Whin, and got to ground, the earths being open, as this is a York and Ainsty covert.

MEET AT LINTON SPRINGS.

On Monday the Bramham Moor met at Linton, and, moving off to Woodhall, they ran to the Devonshire Covert, after a short time, through Scotchman and Sicklinghall Wood, and ran into the Stockeld Spring Wood. They ran round the cover, the fox being headed two or three times, and he just managed to get outside, where he was killed.

Going back to the Devonshire hounds found again, but the fox quickly went to ground, the hounds subsequently being stopped. They found, however, in the Pigeon Cote cover at Stockeld, and hunted over the Wetherby Road nearly to Jackson's Quarry, where reynard was lost. Another brace of foxes were on foot at Stockeld, and hounds met one of these, which was hallooed near to Deighton Spring. They raced him in view up to the drain, and he managed to get through the wire, and went on over the railway, but was headed on the Spofforth road. He made back to the railway, and went to ground in a culvert under the line. He was soon bolted, and hounds just missed catching him. He went over the railway as if for Stockeld once more, but came back over the railway, and crossed the line right in the middle of the pack, but escaped. He went on towards a little cover on the railway side, and then came back to the railway again, and into another cover. For more than half an hour an attempt was made to bolt him, but he would not come out again.

Hounds then went to Sicklinghall Wash, a certain find hitherto, but this time it was blank. Thence they went to Cocked Hat Whin, and found, the fox pointing for Stockeld, as did another that ran up towards the cover. They turned back and went on to Ingham's Gorse, where the fox crossed the road, and ran down to the Punch Bowl. Then he made off straight towards the river at Nethertby, and coming back by Clap Gate they ran on to Addthorpe, where most of the followers left them.

FOOTBALL JOTTINGS

BARKSTON ASH CUP—THIRD ROUND.

On Saturday afternoon the third round of the Barkston Ash Cup Competition will be played, and four matches will be decided. Wetherby have no easy task at Cawood, and they will have to put in all they know if they are to defeat the United. If Tadcaster place their best eleven in the field against Aberford they will have a good chance of success, but the Aberfordians are a good combination, and, playing at home, they will make the Calcarians go all the way. Garforth W.R. and Barwick United should furnish perhaps the most interesting game of the quarters. Between the teams a keen rivalry exists, and, although the White Rose have hitherto proved themselves the better side, the Barwick men are determined to make a strong fight for Cup honours. Garforth will, I fancy, win if they evince their best form. The other match is at Selby, where the Olympians and Holmes Mill will meet, and this should be an attractive fixture.

Feeling has been generated owing to the transfer of two players from Monk Fryston to South Milford, and, in their objection, certain Garforthians think they have been hardly used. Although I think the deposit should have been returned, because the objection was made owing to a misunderstanding, the transfers were perfectly in order, as the documentary proof showed. No club can deprive an amateur of a transfer, and in future it would facilitate matters were club secretaries to grant transfers when applied for at once.

DRIGHTON SHIELD—SATURDAY'S MATCHES.

In the Brighton Shield Competition on Saturday afternoon South Milford defeated Whitkirk by eight goals to one, but the match between Garforth W.R. and Barwick United was drawn—three goal each. Wetherby easily defeated Tadcaster by five goals to nil, and Harewood went under to Wetherby Con. by four to one.

The game between South Milford and Whitkirk was not so one-sided as the score would indicate, and, indeed, play in the second half was fairly interesting. The Milfordians, who were bigger and stronger than their opponents, were superior in every department of the game, but their principal advantage was in the defensive lines. Their play was marked by method, and they were always on the ball than Whitkirk, whose lackadaisical ways lost them opportunities of making headway. Taylor, however, played well at back, and in the half-back line Gascoigne and Wright were triers, while forward Coultas and Clough were outstanding.

Milford had nearly all the play in the first half, and Arrowsmith soon had a couple of goals on—one from a penalty, and Townend followed with a third. Tompkinson was prevented with a goal owing to the referee using his feet instead of his hands, and failing to clear, and Townend put on the fifth. Towards the close of the half Whitkirk had more of the play and netted. Then the Milfordians were to the other end, and were given two penalties—both doubtful awards—and Arrowsmith scored from both. Whitkirk were given a good chance of netting again, for in trying to clear a shot from Gascoigne the custodian fell and left the ball in front of goal. Clough had only to put it in, but he missed somehow, and the backs cleared. Milford scored their eighth goal from a header, and shortly afterwards Whitkirk were given a penalty, but Wright shot into the custodian's hands, and he cleared. Milford won by eight goals to one. The Shamrocks to be congratulated on put more vigour and method into their play, but they are a young team, and with coaching, they will improve.

Wetherby were opposed by a good Tadcaster eleven, and the match was a real triumph for the former, for they were superior in every department of the game. Within a minute Dade scored twice and Johnson once, and just before half-time Hoffman and Wells took penalty kicks, but Moverley stopped the ball on both occasions In the second half Wetherby were again in the ascendant, and Oxby and Johnson netted, the Calcarians being defeated by five to nil.

MONK FRYSTON DRAW AGAIN.

Monk Fryston replayed their match in the Riley-Smith Cup Competition with the Royal Garrison Artillery on the ground of the latter. Monk Fryston were represented by:—Hargreaves, goal; Hodgson and A. Barker, backs; Walsh, W. Barker, and Vause, half-backsfi; R. Harrison, Hester, Hunter, Gibson, and Bellamy, forwards. In the first half Harrison scored for Monk Fryston, and Hodgson unfortunately put through his own goal, making the scores equal. In the second half Monk Fryston had the best of the game, and Hester, Hunter, and Gibson netted, the Calcarians being defeated by five to nil.

CAWOOD UNITED DEFEATED.

Cawood United played the Eble Class at Malton on Saturday afternoon. The homesters played with the wind, but Cawood defended well. Once or twice they had a fine chance to score, but Pulsey was very safe. Allison had a grand opening, hesitancy spoiling the chance. Cawood broke away in the centre, but Spence was there and play again settled near the Cawood goal. The Class forwards had many chances, but sometimow weakness in the front rank spoilt the openings. Towards half-time the Class pressed, but Cawood kicked out to save their citadel. They played so excellent game in defence, being heavier and stronger than the Class, but the homesters should have had a penalty. The interval came with no score. Cawood missed immediately after the restart, and then Grieveson ran through and beat Thompson. The Class started with nice passing. Prest took Hayking's pass and racing away, shot hard into the net, equalising the scores. The wind now lowered, and the Ebles assumed the aggressive. The forwards lined up, and Blackburn centred for Hayking to add a second goal for the Class. Still maintaining the advantage in open play the homesters went through again, but the Cawod custodian cleared. Allison, however, by a fine forcing effort, beat him a third time. Cawood went off the way from the centre, Grieveson adding a second goal for them with a good shot. Prest was repeatedly dangerous, and from his accurate centre Allison headed the best goal of the match. The Class maintained their lead by superior play, and won by four goals to two.

LEEDS AND DISTRICT.

In the Leeds Senior League on Saturday afternoon Rothwell White Rose overcame Methley Perseverance by four goals to nil, and Allerton Bywater had a three goals' victory over East Hunslet, who failed to score. Garforth Preston and East Ardsley played a drawn game, no goals being scored.

Rothwell White Rose strengthened their hold on the League championship on Saturday, when they defeated Methley Perseverance by four goals to nothing. The promise of a good match attracted a fairly large "gate." There was a strong wind blowing, but when Parfit kicked off against it the homesters seemed to be quite at home under the conditions, and for the greater part of the first half play was in the Methley half. After starting Parfit passed to the right wing, and Abrams was conspicuous with a brilliant sprint, but in repassing to the centre he placed his opponents in possession. A dart was made for the opposite end, and they succeeded in beating down the Rothwell backs, but Parfit, a corner was blown offside, and a free kick caused considerable relief. Once more in possession the homesters' forward line ran down the field, and Hughes put in a well-judged centre, but there was no one near to place the ball home. Abrams also overkicked, the ball rolling dead. However, a moment later Wright netted. The visitors now broke away, and Beaumont had a shot, but he kicked too high. The Rothwell still continued to press, despite the wind, while the visitors broke away on the third times without success. Abrams had hard luck with a smart shot, but Davis, the Methley custodian, played a clever game. Half-time came with Rothwell leading by one goal. Soon after the resumption Hughes made a splendid run but a corner was forced, but this was fruitless. Taylor, who had been playing a good game at half-back, netted a second goal a little later. A third was registered by Parfit, who also scored the fourth. In his attempt to save the latter the visitors' custodian threw himself full length across the goal. A fifth goal might have been recorded, but this was disallowed owing to the custodian rushing out to save, putting Hughes offside.

In the Leeds and District League Rippax Woodville had a runaway victory over St. Anthony's by 13 goals to nil, and Rothwell P.C. were beaten by Glasshoughton Colliery by four goals to one.

ROTHWELL P.C. AND THE CHARITY CUP.

Rothwell Parish Church are now in the final of the Charity Cup Competition. On Saturday they played Pontefract Garrison on the Methley Perseverance ground, and won by the odd goal in five. Pontefract are a fast team, and the play was brisk throughout. Hitchin scored for Rothwell in the first half, and in the interval Pontefract were on equal terms. In the second half both teams added another goal, Hitchin again being the scorer for the Parish Church. Within the last ten minutes J. Lunn netted the third and winning goal. For the Pontefract side the outside right and the inside left men played well. Shiers, outside left, also played a good game for Rothwell. S. Nunns, the Rothwell custodian, made his re-appearance with the team, and displayed good form.

RUGBY NOTES.

ROTHWELL WHS.

Rothwell were at home on Saturday and secured a victory over Castleford by 16 points to six. Eastwood kicked off down hill, and attacked strongly, but Rothwell gained relief from a free kick, and put in some good passing. Castleford being lucky to save their lines. Rothwell kept play in the visitors' quarters. Castleford were penalised, and Bulmer landed a goal. Bulmer missed another chance from an easy position. Wise scored a try, Bulmer improving on it. Cox scored, and Milner landed a goal. Welsh scored for Castleford, but no goal resulted. In the second half Rothwell added four points, and the visitors three.

COMPENSATION CLAIM.—In a case at Selby County Court a question arose as to the payment of compensation to the widow of the late Thomas Lyons, labourer, Osmotherley, Selby. The man met with a fatal accident during this winter while at work on a building in the course of construction on the East Riding side of the river. He fell a considerable height and was killed. There are three children, girls, the eldest being 8 years of age. His Honour said that as the sixth of 'another child was expected to July next, he would adjourn the apportionment until the November Court, when further application might be made. His Honour directed the payment of £10 out to the widow, Edith Caroline, and also to pay her 17s. 6d. per week till November. The total amount of compensation that had been paid into Court was £231 8s.

TUBERCULOUS GLANDS CURED.

19, Ebor Mount,
Hyde Park,
Leeds, 30th August, 1913.

Professor Crosswaite,

Dear, Sir,—

I thought it would interest you to know of THE VERY REMARKABLE SUCCESS YOUR TREATMENT HAD UPON MY YOUNGEST DAUGHTER, who last year was suffering from TUBERCULOUS GLANDS.

Many of my friends advised me to consult a surgeon, but being opposed to the knife I emphatically declined to have my child tortured and perhaps disfigured for life.

You assured me, sir, after our consultation together, that it was possible to remove the substance without the aid of an operation. You were a true prophet.

The scar (what little is left of it) is gradually passing away, and before long it will entirely disappear.

I cannot adequately find words to express all I feel, but I assure you, sir, you have won our EVERLASTING GRATITUDE, and if at any time the efficacy of my statement should be disputed, I shall be willing to bring my child to your consulting rooms and thus give ocular demonstrations of the wonderful cure you have accomplished.

Trusting you may be spared for many years to come to carry on your splendid work.

Believe me, dear sir,
Gratefully yours,
H.DORRINGTON SMITH.

OUR GARDENS.

A Weekly Article specially Written for

Amateur Gardeners, Allotment Holders, &c.

By ALBERT CLARKE, Birkenshaw.

THE FLOWER GARDEN.

Herbaceous plants, such as phloxes, Michaelmas Daisies, and hallianthus may be lifted, divided, and replanted. If only a few new plants are required for filling gaps in the herbaceous border they may be dug out from the sides of large clumps without disturbing the parent plant. Monthretias are charming flowers and are worthy of careful cultivation. They are very prolific in the production of new bulbs, and this makes it essential that they should be lifted every third year. Select all the strongest bulbs and plant them on light rich ground. Ryson dor, Germania, Eldorado, Sunbeam, and Pottsi are good varieties.

DESTRUCTIVE BIRDS.

Sparrows are very troublesome at this time of the year. They do so much damage that one feels disposed to think they do it in a purely mischievous spirit. With what glee they attack the first yellow Crocus that appears. Young leaves of pinks and carnations suffer a similar fate. The best method of keeping them in check is to tightly stretch strong black thread over the plants they are likely to attack. This is accomplished by driving a few stakes into the ground and fastening cross pieces to them in such a way as to form a T. Secure the thread to the cross pieces at a height of about 3 inches from the ground. Other means of fixing the thread will present themselves to the mind. It is often suggested that the birds destroy the leaves and flowers in their search for water, and that if a saucer of water is placed near the spot for them they will not harm the flowers, etc. We have tried this plan and are satisfied that there is nothing in it.

DECIDUOUS SHRUBS.

Weigelias, lilacs, Thorns Golden Privet, and almost all kinds of deciduous hard-wooded subjects may be planted this month. Important points to keep in mind when planting are a natural disposition of the roots, which means making a hole of such a size as to allow the roots to be laid straight out, and at the same depth as they were before being lifted, and the cutting back of all strong, fibreless roots. This should be done with a sharp knife.

Climbing plants such as clematises, honeysuckle, ivy, ampleopsis, jasminums, and rambler roses may be planted any time this month.

BEDDING PLANTS IN FRAMES.

The treatment of bedding plants in cold frames is a simple matter during early winter. Now that the days are getting longer, and the sun more powerful, different tactics must be adopted. Violas are hardy in many parts of the country and require no protection whatever. This fact implies that very little coddling is necessary even in our northern climate, where absolutely outdoor treatment will not answer. From this time onward the frames should never be closed, only when there is danger of frost. On mild days the lights should be removed altogether. Another point which should be attended to is the watering. Examine the soil and if it is approaching dryness, give it a thorough drenching. Other young stock may also require water. Calceolarias, penstemons, Marguerites, and antirrhinums are commencing to grow, and it is advisable to pinch the tops, as this tends to cause them to develop their side growths.

BEAUTY OF NICE STOCKS.

Readers who sowed stocks as recommended in this column during early autumn should examine the 3-inch pots to ascertain the condition of the roots. If they are running freely around the pot sides repotting may be attended to without delay. The strongest may be transfered to 5-inch pots, 3 parts loam and 1 part each leaf-mould, rotten manure and sand will grow them well. Pot firm and return to the cold frame. Keep close for a few days, then give air in increasing quantities until the plants may be removed altogether except during very wet weather, or when frost threatens. We wish to exercise the value of this class of stocks. They have all the good points of the ten-week varieties, and in addition will continue to bloom for 5 or 6 months. Seed may be sown now in a warm house, but the seedlings should be moved to a cold frame when they are about half an inch high. Stocks of all kinds are important of having their roots disturbed, and should be grown on in pots wherever it is possible. The autumn-sown batch, after being potted on will grow rapidly. They may usually be stood outdoor in a sheltered position about the middle of April. Early in May they should be planted into their summer quarters, and if the spring is mild and open they will commence to bloom before the wallflowers are over. The best results are obtained when they can be given a position shaded from the mid-day sun. There are few more pleasing sights than a large bed filled with well-grown stocks. Their scent in the evening is delicious. The Beauty of Nice type may be purchased in separate colours, the white one being exceptionally fine. Queen Alexandra is a pleasing pink variety and is an excellent companion piece to the white.

SWEET PEAS.

If not already done, autumn-sown sweet peas should now be potted on into larger pots. Give a rich compost and pot firmly. Seeds may be sown in pots for early flowering. Where large specimen blooms are wanted it is advisable to sow the seed singly in thumb pots. Later on they may be potted into 4-inch pots. The preparation of the ground is the most important point in their cultivation. Deep digging and a free admixture of thoroughly decayed manure will do much towards bringing success. Overcrowding will result in enfeebled growth, and a corresponding weakness in the flowers. Plants intended for indoor flowering should be encouraged to grow freely. They need a cool, light, moist position.

GENERAL WORK UNDER GLASS.

During the present month there is a lot of work requiring attention under glass. Seed sowing, pricking off seedlings, and repotting, will all require attention. As the days lengthen, pot plants will dry up oftener, and regular attention must be paid to watering. The atmosphere amongst growing plants should be moist. This encourages clean healthy growth, and helps to keep greenfly and other insects in check.

Seed may be sown of the following:—Tomato, cucumber, parsley, lettuce, and onions; dahlia, begonia, gloxinia antirrhinum, sweet peas, and other flower seed requiring a long season of growth.

Put in cuttings of lobelia, bedding geraniums, fuchsias, petunias, decorative chrysanthemums, coleus, etc.

Pot off bedding geraniums, chrysanthemums marguerites, and other rooted cuttings.

Ferns, pelargoniums and other plants that are commencing to grow may be potted on.

Vines that have been started should be kept at a temperature of about 60 to 65. Daily syringing should be practised, as it helps to keep mealy bug in check. This pest always seems to increase rapidly when syringing is suspended whilst the blossom is open. If time can be spared go regularly over the rods during spring. Dab affected part with methylated spirit and it will considerably lessen the danger of the fruit being spoiled. The ventilators should be opened when the sun commences to shine or scalding of the delicate young leaves may follow.

STOVE PLANTS.

Crotons, Dracoenas, and a variety of other decorative-foliaged plants are now commencing to grow freely. This should serve as a reminder that the time for repotting has arrived. New growth means new roots, and it is obvious that better growth will be obtained where the roots have a supply of fresh material to feed upon. The majority of stove foliage plants thrive well in a compost of equal parts fibrous loam and Kent peat, half part leaf mould, and a free addition of crushed charcoal and silver sand. If the loam lacks fibre a six-inch pot of bone meal may be added for each barrow load of compost.

GLOXINIAS.

Gloxinia bulbs that have been resting during winter should now be brought out and started into growth. Where they have been allowed to remain in the pots whilst dry, they may be started in them, but should be repotted before much growth develops. A temperature of about 60 to 65 degrees will soon start them into growth, and although a moist atmosphere suits them, they must not be watered freely until rapid growth commences. Overwatering in the early stages may result in the bulbs rotting off. They like an extremely light position, and a warm, moist atmosphere. Equal parts loam, peat, and leaf mould, \ part rotten manure, with the necessary amount of sand will grow them well.

VEGETABLE GARDEN.

CULTURE OF JERUSALEM ARTICHOKES.

Thoroughly worked, deep and friable sandy land is best; but the plant succeeds in any remote and little used corner if the soil be honestly trenched in autumn and left rough through the winter. Work in a light dressing of manure when trenching. Fork over in spring, and dibble in during March medium sized tubers from 4 to 6 inches deep in rows 2\ or 3 feet asunder, the sets being placed from 12 to 15 inches apart in the line.

Hoe regularly during summer; draw up a little earth to the stems; cut them away as they die down in autumn. Keep clear of weeds. Raise a portion of the crop during November with a fork, and store it in dry sand, boxes, or clamp, ready for use in order to be dug up as required, until the end of February, when every tuber should be raised. If desired, the whole of the tubers may be raised in November and pitted like potatoes.

Not only are artichokes a pleasant change when baked, roasted, or boiled and served with milk and butter, but they are practically as nutritious as potatoes, foods containing much less waste. When the tubers commence growth they become dark and discoloured, being then only suitable for flavouring.

DISCOVERY OF SKELETONS AT GARFORTH

THREE MORE FOUND.

The interest aroused in the Garforth district recently by the discovery of two skeletons in some newly opened sand workings to the east of the village has been greatly stimulated afresh by the further discoveries of a similar kind. It will be recollected that the workmen employed in the moulding sand quarries of Messrs J. Rickard and Company were engaged upon some new workings in the vicinity of the Isabella Pit of the Garforth Colliery Company, when they unearthed the skeletons of two fully developed adults.

The skeletons, were in an excellent state of preservation, were laid in graves which had been rudely hollowed out on the top of the sand bed some distance below the surface of the ground. Certain opinion favoured the theory that the bones were relics of the Battle of Towton, although as against this view there was no evidence that the Roses and the White Roses in the haphazard way one would associate with the aftermath of a hard-fought skirmish in the struggles between the Red and the White Roses.

On the contrary, the position of the skeletons indicated that a certain amount of care had been exercised in the matter of burial, and an interesting feature of the discovery was the presence of a large boulder resting on each skull and smaller boulders on the feet. Nothing was found to indicate the origin of the skeletons, and unfortunately, after a cursory examination, they were returned, and are now hidden beneath several tons of soil and sand.

In the hope that further excavations would disclose some explanation of the graves and their contents the quarrymen kept a close look-out for other burials, and a few feet away an empty grave was uncovered. After proceeding for a few yards along the top strata of sand the men have now unearthed three more skeletons, two being those of adult persons, and one that of a child. In each instance it is clear that the sand was removed to a depth of nearly a foot before the bodies were interred, and again there is the curious feature of stones being placed upon the skulls and feet.

In the second find the digging operations first disclosed the skeleton of an adult, but side by side with this, in a small grave, were the bones of a child. In neither instance were the bones in such good preservation as in the earlier discoveries, and the quarrymen, after collecting a few of the sounder ones and placing them aside for further investigation, buried the remainder.

The third skeleton was found in a grave a few feet away and in a direct line with the other two, its presence being noted when the spade of one of the men glanced off a stone and struck the skull. For the present only the skull has been unearthed, and as it is well preserved it also has been set aside in the hope that it may serve as a guide to the history of the burials. Apart from an injury to the lower jaw, the blow by the having displaced several of the front teeth, the skull is intact, and whilst showing a normal frontal development has a remarkable posterior development. Fragments of bones, presumably those of some animal, have also been found near the graves, the fragments including a small tusk and a section of a jawbone containing several teeth.

The whole of the discoveries have been made in the limestone strata which lies to the east of Garforth, and in this connection it is interesting to note that some years ago two skeletons were discovered in the same strata in the direction of Garforth Cliff. In that case the skeletons were in a crouched position and were fairly well preserved.

IS A MIDDAY MEAL NECESSARY?

During the winter months I am a strong advocate of a midday meal. Let us consider the argument for one moment. During the late spring, summer, and early autumn the hens are astir at four or five o'clock in the morning, and seldom roost before seven in the evening, while during the period under discussion from 7.30 a.m. to 5.30 p.m. is certainly their average day. A healthy bird, and one properly fed, employs this time in scratching and searching for insect life, green food, &c.; that is, food of a highly nitrogenous character; hence, it stands to reason, conditions being similar, it is impossible for our feathered friends to obtain the same supplies during winter as in summer, and consequently, for this reason alone, we must augment their rations with food of a nitrogenous nature.

But are the conditions similar? Emphatically no., There is a great diminution in insect life, and during periods of prolonged frost, it may almost be said to be non-existent, and instead of rich, succulent grasses for the birds, only coarse, withered vegetable life is at hand, and in many small runs not even this. So that not only is the period at their disposal for searching greatly curtailed, but also their supplies are materially diminished.

In Nature this is provided for. Only as the days lengthen and insect life abounds, combined with vegetable growth, do the hens lay; this does not suit our requirements, and if we desire eggs out of season, we must supply the material which Nature withholds, exactly as the florist must supply heat and artificial manures to produce blooms or fruit at Christmas time.

Accepting this argument, many people augment the morning ration; but here, as I have already shown, they defeat their own purposes, for a small meal in a light dry mash in a rapid condition ensues, activity is destroyed, and impaired health results. After many and careful experiments, the only satisfactory solution I have discovered is to give the birds a light midday feed, rich in nitrogenous matter.

MIDDAY RATION.

In advocating the use of cut green bone and cut clover for this meal, I might mention that this policy is thoroughly endorsed in the leaflets issued by the Board of Agriculture and Fisheries.

In previous articles I have referred to the efficacy of cut clover as an egg-producing food, and the value of cut green bone has been diluted afresh. It is not necessary at the present to again go into the pros and cons of the use of these two foods. It is sufficient to explain exactly how the best results can be obtained, and the quantity to be employed.

It is my practice to use them alternately. For birds that are in full lay an ounce of cut green bone is not too much, though the quantity can be reduced to half an ounce for pullets. Where this is placed in troughs, and judged by its rapid disappearance is thoroughly appreciated by the birds, and forms a profitable bill-fare. On the other hand, the cut clover is not, at first, so eagerly sought after, and one would imagine is somewhat of an acquired taste, commencing with a very small quantity, say a handful to a dozen birds. Scald it with boiling water the night before it is required. Should any of the liquor remain in the morning it should be utilised to mix the morning mash. As midday fare, it is only damp, in the troughs, and the initial small quantity will be eaten up, though probably not voraciously, like the green bone. As the fowls begin to show a preference for the latter, the quantity can be increased until a good handful between two birds is not too large a ration. I might here remark that the use of cut clover has a most beneficial effect upon the birds' health, not hitherto noticed as being dilated upon by writers to the poultry press. This is probably due to the percentage of lime that is found in well-cured clover.

TADCASTER GUARDIANS AND DISTRICT COUNCIL.

SURVEYOR AND A MOTOR-CAR—A GRANT.

IMPROVEMENTS AT SHERBURN.

The fortnightly meeting of Tadcaster Board of Guardians was held on Monday at the workhouse—Ald. E. C. Brooksbank, J.P. (Chairman), presiding. The other members present were Alds. R. Ithell (Newton), Col. Gascoigne (Lotherton), Rev. C. D. Ash (Saxton), Messrs T. H. Prater (Parlington), W. Y. K. Young (Abertord), J. H. Ingleby, J.P., J. Nettleton and H. P. Hall (Tadcaster), E. Parkin, J. H. Watt, W. A. Dickinson (Kippax), J. W. Dobson (Newthorpe), R. Routledge and J. Prime (Garforth), J. H. Schofield (Ocxon), W. Simpson (Leeds), J. E. Camborne, J. G. Foster, and T. Hey (Scarthorn), J. Ladley (Kirkby Wharfe), R. Wrigley (Barwick), Lancelot Milford (Micklefield), Copley (Ryther), A. Johnson (South Milford), T. Carlton (Stutton), White (Barkston), E. Midgley (Colton), E. H. Lowe (Great Preston), Birkenshaw (Ledston), F. Phillips, W. Robinson, and W. Jones (Allerton Bywater), T. P. Fawcett (Austhorpe), and G. Webster (Huddleston-cum-Lumby), with the Clerk (Mr. G. A. Broome), the surveyor (Mr Scott), and the sanitary inspectors (Messrs Kilner and Wood).

The master's report showed that during the fortnight there had been 2 admissions to the workhouse and 3 discharges, and the inmates numbered 91 in the house and 18 in the children's home, against 113 at the same date last year. The tramps relieved during the two weeks were to and 21 against 23 and 17 for the corresponding weeks of last year.

The House Committee had before them an application for an increase of salary from Mr Bortoft, porter, and Mrs Bortoft, assistant matron, and it was recommended that their respective salaries be increased to £30 and £27 10s.

Miss Ada Smith, assistant nurse, resigned her position, and it was accepted, she to be granted a testimonial. A successor is to be advertised for.

Tadcaster Electricity Co. wrote enclosing their account for lighting and stated that the meter did not register on two days, and they would charge the Board at the average rate.

The minutes were adopted.

DISTRICT COUNCIL.

The treasurer to the District Council was reported to have a balance of £5,072 in hand.

A sum of £84 13s. 4d. was spent on district roads.

The Highways Committee minutes showed that a footpath at Sherburn is to be asphalted at a cost of £6 0s. 8d.

In regard to Sherburn Cross improvement, a plan showing estimate amounting to £25 was submitted, and it was agreed that Mrs Pearson be supplied with a tracing and asked for terms for the land required.

For footpath improvements at Allerton Bywater estimates were submitted, and a subcommittee was appointed to inspect the footpaths and report.

Tadcaster East Parish Council wrote asking the Council to reconsider their decision not to pave the crossing as Mill Lane, Tadcaster. The Council decided to adhere to their decision, on the ground that the road is gradient, a paved crossing would be dangerous to horse traffic.

A letter was read from the Post Office engineer asking permission to erect telegraph poles at Sherburn and South Milford. The surveyor is to report.

A letter was read from the County Council asking the Board to undertake the maintenance of the main roads for the year.

SURVEYOR AND A MOTOR-CAR.

The Highways Committee recommended that a grant of £30 be made for one year to the surveyor towards the upkeep of a motor-car, the question to be then considered.

Mr Midgley (Colton) said that the committee thought this matter should be discussed by the Council. He asked if he could move an amendment.

The Chairman: Yes.

Mr Midgley said the original application was for an increase of salary, and he moved that the application be refused. In doing that he thought he had the great majority of the ratepayers behind him. The ratepayers he represented had had a meeting, and they passed a resolution emphatically protesting against any additional grant to the surveyor, and they were of opinion that the salary he now had was an excellent one. He had not a word to say against Mr Scott's ability. He was an excellent man, but there must be a stopping-place to increases of salary. The case was fully gone into by the committee, and he thought the recommendation was carried by a majority of one, and it was the opinion of the committee that it should come before the Council. The reason why £30 was recommended was that there might be later supervision of the roads. He did not make any complaint about his work, and if an increase of salary was necessary it ought to be proved that there was an increase of work, and if there was more work to be done he was of opinion he ought to take out a steps. He could be granted clerical assistance, or he could have the assistance of an assistant surveyor or practical road foreman.

Mr Hey: I will support you.

Mr Clinch: Does Mr Scott find his own motorcar?

Mr Hey: Yes.

Mr Clinch said that a motor-car would enable the surveyor to get about better.

Mr Hey said that the committee had had a lot of discussion in regard to this matter, and he pointed out that the recommendation was for only one year. If Mr Scott did not get about the roads more quickly and give more supervision it could be re-considered at the end of the year.

Col. Gascoigne: Does he propose to do away with his horses altogether?

Mr Hey: Yes.

Mr Ingleby: What is the surveyor's present salary?

The Chairman: £150.

In answer to a question, the Chairman said that he had 237 miles of road to supervise.

Mr Wright asked if the twelve miles of roads at Crossgates and Garforth were deducted.

The Chairman: Yes.

Mr Ingleby said he thought the recommendation was a wise one. In these days the surveyor wanted to be able to get about quickly. With a horse and trap he could cover only ten or fifteen miles a day, but with a motor-car he could keep in touch with the whole district. He thought it would be in the interests of the Council to pass the recommendation.

This Chairman said this was proposed as an experiment for one year, and if they found the roads better kept and expenses kept down by greater supervision it would be satisfactory. It would give Mr Scott a better opportunity of getting about the country and giving greater supervision, and, of course, they would expect him to do it.

On a division the amendment was defeated by 14 votes to 11, and the recommendation was agreed to.

SANITARY COMMITTEE.

At a meeting of the Sanitary Committee it was resolved to give property-owners in Robinson Street, Allerton Bywater, notice to connect with the sewer.

Tenders were submitted for the reinstatement of the old waterworks at Sherburn, and they were referred to the Sherburn representatives.

Plans for the erection of a stable at Tadcaster were approved, but plans for w.c.'s at property at Tadcaster are rejected.

An application was received from South Milford asking for water for building purposes, and the committee decided to adhere to their decision.

An application was received from Mr T. Spear, of Sherburn, for a licence to store petrol, and it was granted.

Mr Crosland and the two inspectors were appointed to attend a Housing and Town Planning Exhibition and Conference at Liverpool next month.

In regard to a complaint by the York-shire Fishery Board, a letter was received from the manager of the Tadcaster sewage works, and the Clerk was instructed to reply accordingly.

An application was made by a Sherburn resident for a cesspool to be emptied. It was decided that the work should be done, and the owner will be asked to connect with the sewer.

The minutes were approved.

THE WEEK'S MARKETS.

CORN.

SELBY, Monday.—A fair attendance, with an inquiry for corn for seed purposes. Wheats 32s. to 33s., oats 20s. to 22s., feeding oats 18s. 6d. to 19s. 6d., barleys 32s., medium quality 27s. to 30s., 32s. 24s. per qr.

PROVISIONS.

SELBY, Monday.—Eggs to and 11 for 18.; butter 1s. 2d. to 1s. 3d. per lb.; chickens 4s. 6d. to 6s. per couple; potatoes 5d. per stone.

CATTLE.

SELBY, Monday.—At this marr to-day Messrs Richardson and Son disposed of 120 beasts, 4 sheep, and 42 pigs. There was a good attendance of butchers and dealers, with a brisk trade all round. Best beef made up to 9s. per stone. Sheep far too small for local purposes, making fully 12d. per lb. An improved trade for pork, the best small making 8s. per stone. Stores scarce and dear. Fat bullocks realised up to £25 10s., fat heifers to £19 15s., fat cows to £23 12s. 6d., fat wobs to £28 10s. 6d., store beasts to £14, cows in milk to £16 15s., incalving cows to £21, fat hoggs to £2 15s., fat pigs to £3 13s., pork pigs to £7, and store pigs (small) to £1 18s. each.

TADCASTER, Monday.—Messrs ThomEnson and Son had a big entry of prime, well-finished stock, which met a firm, good trade at about late rates. The attendance of butchers and dealers was scarcely up to the average, and consequently there was a slow, dragging demand except for really choice quality, which made fully 9s. per stone; medium beasts 8s. 6d. to 8s. 6d. per stone, and cows 7s. 6d. to 8s. Hoggs and shearlings a smaller show, and they made a shade more money, from 10d. to 10\d. per lb.; ewes 9s. to 9s. 6d. per stone; lambs from 9s. to 9s. per stone. Stores sold readily from 15s. to 25s. each. Numbers sold: 126 fat beasts, 18 fat steers, stores, and calves, 121 sheep, and 97 pigs. Mr C. Hawksworth, Ulleskelf, supplied four prime bullocks, which realised £25 5s., £24 5s., £23 15s., £21 10s., and £21; Mr W. H. Welburn, of Huddleston Hall, sold three choice bullocks at £23, £20 17s. 6d., and £20 7s. 6d.; Mr Hessel Simpson, Cross Roads Farm, sold three good quality bullocks, making £21 2s. 6d., £20, and £20; Mr F. Metcalf, Towton, sold two very choice heifers at £18 15s. and £17; Mr W. Elvidge, Healaugh Park, supplied four prime bullocks, which realised £23 5s., £22 5s., £21 17s. 6d., and £19 10s.; Mr C. Bailey, Saxton, sold three grand bullocks at £24 10s., £24, £23 12s. 6d., and £17 5s.; Mr Job Riley, Saxton, sent two choice bullocks, making £23 10s., £17, and £16 10s.; Mr Settrington, Stutton, sent a grand wealthy bullock, which sold for £27 5s.; Mr F. Jackson, Healaugh Grange, sold three choice bullocks, making £21 17s. 6d., £21 12s. 6d., and £21 7s. 6d.; Mr W. Dunnington, Marston Lodge, sold two choice bullocks, which made £21 10s., and £17 12s. 6d.; the auctioneers sold nine bullocks of their own feeding, realising £20 2s. 6d., £25 17s. 6d., £24 12s. 6d., £23 17s. 6d., £23 7s. 6d., £23 5s., £20 5s., and £19 17s. 6d.; Mr J. W. Watson, Manor Farm, Wighill, sold two grand bullocks at £26 5s. and £23 15s.; Mr W. D. Waddell, Hornington, sold three nice heifers at £20 6s. 6d., £17 15s., and £18 2s. 6d.; Mr L. Sampson, Newton Kyme, sent two nice bullocks, making £28 10s., and £28; Mr T. Robinson, Healaugh, sold three choice bullocks and heifers up to £22 7s. 6d.; Mr Platts' fat cow made £18 5s.; Mrs Sykes, Milford Grange, sold two grand bullocks at £20 15s. and £20; Mr Jno. Lardy Hawke, cow dur, £18 17s. 6d.; cow from Mr Cowthorpe made £23 10s.; cow from Mr T. Richardson, £21; from Mr Geo. Winter, two heifers in calf sold for £19 7s. 6d. and £17; a nice cow from Mr A. Hills made £17; from Mr Gaufgan, Acaster, three heifers in calf made £19, £17 15s., and £16 15s.; from Mr F. Myers, two heifers in calf, £17 and £16 5s. Prime fat hoggs from Mr F. Bramley, Sherburn-in-Elmet, made to 72s. 6d. each; from Mr G. E. Wright, High Moor, 70s. 6d.; from Mr Jas. Bramley, Huddleston, to 62s. 6d.; from Mr L. Sampson, Newton Kyme, to 58s. 6d.; from Mr Hy. Watson, Newton Kyme, to 60s.; from Mr F. Jackson, Healaugh to 62s. 6d.; from Mr H. Simpson, Cross Roads, to 54s. 6d.; from Mr J. Robinson, Bilton, to 56s.; from Mr J. Bailey, to 58s.; from Mr C. Bailey, Saxton, to 58s. 6d. Prime fat pigs from the Hon. Lady Hawke made to £9 13s. each; from Mr F. Jackson, Healaugh Grange, to £11 15s.; from Mr B. Blacker, Healaugh, to £12; from Mr C. F. HINTS FOR HOUSEWIVES.

No bed should have drapery forming a canopy to it, since such an arrangement prevents the free circulation of the air and is unhealthy for the sleeper. Should the bed be in such a position that an intolerable draught blows in from the window, a screen placed between the bed and the window will form ample protection, or a red night be fixed at right angles to the upright at the head of the bed, and from it a curtain could be hung, which could be drawn back in hot weather.

Styes show weakness of the system, which arises from an ill-balanced diet, in which fat is deficient. They are really tiny abscesses which form at the root of a hair of the eyelashes and are sometimes extremely painful. It is possible to ease the trouble by pulling out the hair, and wiping off the pus or matter which exudes; but the best treatment and the only permanent cure is the addition of an extra allowance of some form of fat to the food. Any fat will answer the purpose, but cod-liver oil is the best on account of the large amount of iodine it contains.

Many people find cod-liver oil very repulsive to the palate, although in time children get to like it very much, particularly when it is mixed with extract of malt, which masks the fishy flavour. Until children are accustomed to the oil, they take it more easily if the nose is pinched when it is offered to them. Adults, too, generally prefer the oil mixed with malt, but when it has been taken gradually much more palatable if a little salt or a few drops of lemon juice are added.

Soda, though a useful softener of water, should be used but sparingly. It should never be used in washing flooreloth or linoleum, since it softens the paint used in forming the pattern and causes it to wear away. Even in ordinary washing boards, the use of soda in the water is not advisable, since it always leaves a blackish tinge to the white wood, no matter how carefully it is rinsed. Far better results are obtained by sprinkling a little silver sand over the boards before scrubbing them, and the cost of silver sand compared with soda is really less.

Carbolic acid is a cheap and reliable disinfectant, but is powerless in the form in which it is bought. It must be diluted with at least twenty times its bulk of cold water before it can act as a disinfectant. Carbolic soap, although it contains but a small percentage of carbolic acid, is of great service in keeping a disease at bay. It should always be used when washing animals or the places in which they are kept, as it is invaluable as a preventative of fleas.

Never allow children to read or do any form of fine work unless there is a bright, steady light. Working by firelight or gas light is apt to be a strain on young eyes that they never acquire, and weak or defective vision is the result. Notice whether a child holds books and work very closely to the eyes, and if so, consult an oculist, so that the child may be fitted with suitable spectacles.

CARRIAGE OF GIRLS.

"Before I finally engage a girl," said a shrewd business man, the alert and dependable character of whose female employés gives force to his words, "I like to get a look at the way she carries herself, walking along the street when she has no idea that she is under supervision. It gives an unusually good clue to her temperament and to the way she will be likely to take hold of her work. What I look for most in the class of employees I require is best typified by the girl who has shoulders where they belong, held erect and steady as she walks, and with her arms, if they swing at all, naturally at her side. Is girls only knew it, the mere practice of walking in that self-possessed fashion would help wonderfully to brighten them up and give them a far better poise, mentally as well as physically. Why? Oh, that is very simple. You can't have clear heads and a healthy interest in your daily occupation unless you have a fair circulation of good, red blood; you can't have good, red blood, or any circulation of it worth mentioning, unless you hold your shoulders so as to give the lungs room to fill up normally, with each long, deep breath, and when the arms are held limply forward all the muscles of the chest and shoulders are so cramped that they forget how to act. So it's a rule that works both ways."

DURING DONE HERE.

If you are going to dye any material at home, dissolve a pinch of bicarbonate of soda in the water in which you mix the dye. This will ensure the colour coming the material evenly. If you cannot buy the shade you wish, it can easily be mixed. For instance, mix blue with pink to make violet, a little yellow with green to make moss colour, black with ecru for yellow smoke, etc.

WAKING-UP DON'TS.

Don't wake up worrying. Banish care from your mind. You have no idea what an important effect the first waking thoughts of your mind exert upon the whole body during the day. Don't take your breakfast alone. Even though you may not want to talk, it is a good thing to have cheerful society in the room with you. It will keep you from brooding. Don't plan things before breakfast. Many women are in the habit of laying out the day and making memoranda before they rise. Don't think seriously before breakfast. Don't quarrel until you have been awake at least two hours. Quarrelling before the morning meal is a great wrinkle-maker.

EXERCISES FOR THE FIGURE.

To strengthen and beautify the growing figure some simple exercises should be taken. In the back is not strong and upright there is a tendency towards curvature—a more common occurrence in young girls than is generally realised—very this: Lie perfectly flat on the floor—the bed or couch will not do—then the leg is lifted almost at right angles to the body, and a circle described in the air with the tip of the toe. The leg must be kept quite straight during the turn several times, the knees, of course, being held perfectly stiff. Another excellent exercise for strengthening the back and giving that hardness and strength to the abdominal muscles which will keep the waist slender and abdomen flat in later life is to lie flat on the floor, with the tips of the toes hooked under the rung of a heavy chair, or table and the body raised from the waist, with the arms folded, until a sitting posture is assumed. This exercise requires great strength, and should be indulged in very cautiously at first.

TADCASTER
IN THE OLD DAYS.—An "Octogenarian," writing to the newspapers, says:—"I travelled from Skipton to Newcastle on the top of a coach, with just one change of horses, and only fine day overhead. A most enjoyable way of travelling, and after spending the night in hospitable quarters we went up to Tyneside, on the Carlisle railway, which was then open as far as Hexham, where I spent 18 months near Stagshaw Bonk, where a great fair was held once or twice a year. I well remember a cattle dealer who farmed in my early life near Tadcaster going from York Fair in the afternoon, and riding his own horse to that place for the next day's market. His name was Mr Chas. Houghton.

LEEDS EMPIRE PALACE.

At the Empire this week Houdini is proving as great an attraction as before, and the interest evinced in his performance shows no sign of diminishing. His chief trick is to liberate himself from a host of manacles, locks, and bolts, and to effect an escape from a formidable contrivance of his own invention described as a "Water Torture Cell." Ernest Shand brings with him a number of good songs, one of which is notable for an abundance of topical jokes including the inevitable reference to the taxicab fiend and his policy. A farcical play presented by Nat Reith and Co., entitled "Chasing Chickweed," gives the chief member of the company an opportunity of making innumerable puns. Entertainment of a similar kind is provided by Hunt and Thomas in "Father Time," a sketch which illustrates a little domestic upheaval, and incidentally points a moral. Dressed as bakers, the Lecards Brothers present a clever acrobatic turn. The Rawsons provide musical entertainment, Peter and Potts have some humorous banter, George Rae is a very agile Scotch comedian, and Francis and Alfred are smart jugglers.

An exceptionally interesting engagement has been made for Monday next at the Empire Theatre, when the famous Sir Field choir, conducted by Dr. Henry Coward, will appear for the first time in Leeds. Founded in 1872 by Dr. Henry Coward, its present conductor, the Sheffield choir rapidly advanced to a position of artistic eminence, and at the present time it is one of the very few choirs which have attained such fame that some years later Dr. Coward was asked to form a similar choir in Leeds. The two grew apace, until, in 1911, the seat of the world's success was set upon Dr. Coward's genius as a conductor by an invitation to take 200 members of his choir upon a festival tour of the Empire. During that tour Sir Edward Elgar and Dr. Charles Harriss, were among the eminent musicians who conducted their own compositions sung by the choir. Other notable attractions include Miss Beaumont Collins and Co., in a new comedy sketch, entitled "Bedfellows"; Jack Thomas, "the goblet of mirth"; Harry Herbert, comedian; Russell and Held, the popular comedy duo; Jack McKay, Scottish humorist; Rosy Reys, vocalist; Toch and Tard, burlesque comedy artistes; and Trixie Marris, comedienne.

LEEDS HIPPODROME.

At the Hippodrome this week "You Never Know" is the title of an amusing comedy sketch, so called because it suggests a series of ridiculous and absurd events. The first scene is laid outside the Casino at Monte Carlo, where the red-headed, corpulent attendant, in the person of Herbert Darnley, undergoes an unaccountable transformation, and suddenly discovers that he is surrounded by a galaxy of admiring damsels, and a number of dashing officers in picturesque uniforms. A talented company appears in the production. Beatie and Babs, a pair of unconventional juvenile comedienes, present a bright and humorous act, "The Sagragetts." Harry Cliff, who appears in his familiar character, "The White Knight," a literally dazzling creation, takes part in an operatic novelty, and the lady who assists him is a skilled vocalist. Breezy and boisterous entertainment is provided by the Howard and Collinson Trio, who contribute a sketch "Fun in a China Shop," while Tom Harris's songs are strongly selected, but quite effective. The Westwoods are skilful trick cyclists, Jack Walsh is a successful comedian, and Dexter draws "lightning" cartoons.

At the Hippodrome next week the principal attraction will be a revue, entitled "Come Inside," and, besides the principal artistes, there will be a beauty chorus of thirty ladies, a double quartette of male voices, and a troupe of lady dancers. Others in the bill are the famous Flying Fishers, sensational and comedy aerialists; Lawley and East, in a musical comedietta; Jack Edge, "Curly," of the Waterloo Pierrots, Bridlington; Teddy Elben, vaudeville entertainer; The Stellios, acrobats; and picture.

LEEDS QUEEN'S THEATRE.

At the Queen's Theatre this week the capable company appearing in William Watson's pantomime "Little Jack Horner," endow the production with incessant and rollicking humour. There are many novelties which will appeal especially to juveniles, bright and sparkling ballets, and effective settings. The latest creations in the way of syncopated music are introduced, and these prove to be so infectious that the gallery soon finds itself unconsciously humming the choruses, which are smartly sung. The eleven scenes illustrate various parts of "Ye Olde Village," affording picturesque glimpses of a forest glade, an antiquated baronial castle, and a village fair. Miss Etty Waldron, who possesses a good voice, plays daintily in the title role, and the acting and dancing of Maimie Effis, in the part of Mary Daw, are also very acceptable. An amusing dame is Mr Billy Waldron, who has an irresistible way of descouring his jokes. A clever performance is also given by Mr Malcolm Cumming. Others who contribute to the entertainment are The Four Henriques, Eddie May, James Dixon, and the Sisters Sinclair.

Next week at the Queen's Theatre Charles Harrington will present the emotional and domestic play "Why He Divorced Her," or "Madame de Moray's Secret."

On Wednesday Mr Charles Bush will take his benefit, and there will be only one house. Artistes from all the Leeds theatres and music halls will appear.

LEEDS CITY VARIETIES.

Hodgson and Lowthers, in a screaming comedy sketch, "Left Luggage," are at the City Varieties this week, and audiences find their comical sketch very much to their liking. It is really funny, and is smartly acted. Burns and Bentley are also good in song and dance, and Phil Kauffman makes a popular coon. The Two Lillies, versatility dancers and vocalists, present an acceptable turn, and Dix and Dox appear in an eccentric musical act. Miss Violette, a clever male impersonator, is also appearing with success.

At the Varieties next week the programme will include Lowenwirth and Cohen, in an entirely new act; Mina Bax, the artistic dancing girl; Bert Symes, the wonderful ploughboy baritone; Lesters and a "lady," a smart juggler; Nellie Nora, in a dainty instrumental act; "Three Little Vagabonds," laughable comic film; "The Pickpocket," a dramatic film; and The Edwards, high class vocalists.

LEEDS THEATRE DE LUXE.

At the Theatre de Luxe "Chelsea 7750," a remarkable exclusive detective film, was the "star" attraction. The film was a rare combination of thrilling and sensational incidents, and showed the efforts of Detective Kirby and his daughter to round up a clever gang, and the trials they underwent before achieving their object. The scene in which Kate Kirby rings up "Chelsea 7750," and while pretending not to speak taps a message on the 'phone was a most original and powerful incident. A psychological study "The Man Outside," "A Peaceful Victory," a dramatic episode, and two screamers, "The Janitor" and "Riley's Decoys," completed the entertainment.

For the week-end another exclusive attraction, "Joan of Arc," is booked.

ROTHWELL EMPIRE.

The programme at the Empire this week includes a clever ventriloquist, who creates genuine merriment by his cross-talking with the dummies. The features of the picture side of the programme have been greatly enjoyed. On Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday the films were "In the grip of the eagle's claw," a sensational kidnapping drama; "The riddle of the tin soldier," "The Rise" (comic), "How it is done," "The staff duster" (comic), and "Apple growing in Washington" (educational). For the last three days the following have been obtained:—"The Sheriff and the Rustler" (a Western drama), "Master Bob" (sensational), "Tweedledum as Jockey" (comic), "Just Kid" (Keystone comic), etc., etc. Fields and Lewis, as laughter-makers, should prove a first-rate turn.

LIBERALISM AT ABERFORD.

MR MARTIN HARVEY AND FAIR FIGHTING.

MR E. H. FOSTER AND LABOURERS' WAGES AND HOUSING.

In connection with Barkston Ash Division Liberal Association a meeting was held on Wednesday evening in the Church Schools at Aberford, and there was a large attendance. Mr Martin Harvey (President of the Association) was in the chair, and he was supported by Mr E. H. Foster, J.P. (prospective Liberal candidate for the Division), Mr F. W. Sutcliffe (Chairman of the Association), Mr Taylor (Liberal agent), etc.

The Chairman, referring to the Home Rule question, said that they were having history hashed up again. A good many strong things had been said about the Home Rule Bill and what was going to happen if it passed. When the Bill for the disestablishment of the Irish Church was under discussion equally strong things were said, and on July 13th, 1869, the Rev. Dr. Drew stated:—

He had asked the Orangemen of Scotland whether, if the worst came to the worst, and the Orangemen of the North marched to the assistance of their brethren in Dublin, they would cross the Channel and come to their assistance, too, and he could not express the enthusiasm with which they had answered. That was a threat of war to the knife if the Bill was passed. Some of the other expressions made then were stronger than that. Mr Gladstone simply went forward, and the Bill was passed, and to-day the Church was stronger than before (Applause). All the talk about religious persecution was nonsense. It was merely a case of the Ulster men who had had so much power in their hands hitherto being afraid that if Home Rule was passed the Nationalists would put a little of the Ulster butter on their own bread. In regard to the National Insurance Act, he desired them to listen to what a Conservative leader said before it became an Act. Mr F. E. Smith said:—

He welcomed in its main features Mr Lloyd George's Bill without any reservation whatever. Its failure to become law, in some form or other, would, in his judgment, be an unparalleled misfortune to the State. No temptation born of party spirit, no desire for an Opposition advantage, would induce him to oppose the main features of the Bill for a single moment."

Lord Charles Beresford, another Tory M.P., said:—

"It is a Bill not only to relieve the poor, but to relieve the sick poor, and the case of the sick poor, in my opinion, has been a shameful case in this country for a great many years. The principle of the Bill has been approved by all shades of opinion of this House, and that principle is sound."

He pointed out that now at bye-elections the Tories were trying to score a party advantage from the Insurance Act, and he asked if it was honest. He was told that in certain districts it was considered a grievance that farm labourers had to pay as much as miners or people living in industrial centres, although their lives were regarded as being more healthy. Under the old arrangement, before the Insurance Act became law, if he was informed correctly, the Friendly Societies charged the same rate to agricultural labourers as to miners and gave the same benefits. If that was true it was no invention of Mr Lloyd George. Yet, because this evil—if it was an evil—was perpetuated in the Insurance Act, they were told it was one of the evils of the present Government. Did they think that was fair? ("No.")

Mr E. H. Foster, who had an excellent reception, said that, as they knew, an attempt was being made—and every sensible person hoped it would succeed—to settle the future government of Ireland by consent, so that the new Parliament would start with the good-will of all the people of Ireland. The Government were willing to go a long way to try and bring about this desirable state of affairs, but in any settlement there must be give and take by both sides. It was not, however, very encouraging when Sir Edward Carson, speaking in London that day, declared that the Government might in the end succeed by getting their Bill put upon the Statute Book, but the people of Ulster would render the carrying out of it impossible. Nothing under heaven would divert them from their fixed determination; describe it as they would, to resist to the end." He continued to talk in that way the Bill as it stood would go through. The Unionist Party went much further than that. They were deliberately attempting to tamper with the Army in this country. The following circular had been issued to officers in the Territorial Army:—

"I appeal to you as a patriotic Englishman who is in command of a part of the Territorial Army, and I beg most earnestly that you will do your utmost to save Irish Protestants from a very great injustice. I, therefore, ask you as a patriotic Englishman to let it be officially known that if the Government, without consulting the electors of the United Kingdom, attempts to force Ulster under a Dublin Parliament you will resign, so as to be free to help the cause of justice and patriotism. If you do this you will greatly strengthen the hands of the King and assist him in securing an appeal to the electors of the United Kingdom, and you will also save the British nation from committing an act of gross injustice to the million loyal Irish Protestants.

It did not lie with a party, who called themselves "the party of law and order," to take up such a stand when a Bill was to be passed that did not please them. (Applause).

The Government, he said, had been in power eight years, and they had survived three elections. That could not have happened if their record had not suited the people of the country. (Applause). Never let them forget they passed old age pensions. (Applause). The Tories promised to give old age pensions for ten years, but they never fulfilled their promise. Having spoiled the reconstruction of the House of Lords, he said the Government were to set up Boards who said the Government were to set up Boards who should fix a minimum wage for agricultural labourers. That was necessary because it was admitted on all hands that the wages of agricultural labourers, taking them throughout the country, were such that they could not live on them. He admitted that there were some cases where good wages were given; they were higher in districts where there was alternative employment, but where there was not that wages were below what a man could live on. In some counties they were as low as 12s. and 14s., and he asked anyone who knew anything about the cost of living and the price of commodities if it was possible for a man to bring up a family in reasonable comfort on that wage? ("No.") That being so, they said it was a most important thing that men working every day, Sunday included often, should have a wage be at the mercy of the landlord. They could live on and bring up their families. (Applause). It was common ground that there was a dearth of cottages in the country, and they had far and away the worst record in the matter of the acre, so that the labourer should not supply that need, so that the labourer should not have a house but also a piece of land to cultivate. If he, by any means, lost his job, he would not have to leave his house, and he would have time to look round for work. That would put the labourer in a position of greater independence. (Applause). As to the former, they were to give him security of tenure, and if he could show the Wages Board that he was unable to pay increased wages, it would be provided that the increase should fall on the landlord. They were also to give him further protection against game. There were other measures of social reform long overdue, and it was the determination of the Government to make this country a better and a happier England for the working-man. (Loud applause).

An enjoyable musical programme was submitted by Miss Johnson, Mr Proctor, Mr Cressey (Selby), and Mr Davidson (humorist, Leeds), who caused roars of laughter. Mr Brewins was the accompanist.

At the close Mr Sutcliffe proposed a vote of thanks to the Chairman, Mr Foster, and the singers. Mr Whitehouse seconded, and this was cordially passed.

RETIREMENT OF SHERBURN POLICE INSPECTOR.

COMPLIMENTED BY MAGISTRATES.

Mr J. Fleeman, inspector of police for Upper Barkston Ash, is retiring from the force, and he carries with him the best wishes of the public of Sherburn and the district of which Mr Fleeman has been in charge, for his future happiness. Mr Fleeman has done his duty well. He joined the force on January 2nd, 1888, being constable at Settle and police constable and sergeant at Pudsey, where he was for 14 years.

On July 1st, 1903, he was promoted to be inspector at Cleckheaton, where he remained 4 years, and he was afterwards removed to Bolton-by-Bowland, and was there about 3 years. Finally he came to Sherburn, where he has been 2 years. The inspector was awarded the Police Coronation Medal for long and meritorious service, and it was presented to him, on behalf of the King, by Mr Justice Ridsdale, at the Leeds Town Hall on 26th July, 1912.

At Sherburn Petty Sessions yesterday the Chairman, on behalf of the Bench, said he had a pleasant duty to perform in congratulating Inspector Fleeman on his well-earned retirement on pension. Whilst he had been in the division he had proved to be a most painstaking and excellent officer. He was sorry to lose such an able officer, and he wished him every happiness for the future.

Inspector Fleeman thanked the Chairman for his kind remarks.

At Aberford School last month there were 197 names on the register, and the average attendance was 177.

At the annual meeting of the North of England Horticultural Society in Leeds on Wednesday a vote of condolence with the family of the late Mr Clayton, of Ulleskelf, was passed.

The 6.47 p.m. N.E.R. train from Leeds to Hull was considerably delayed at Gascoigne Wood on Sunday night owing to a breakdown of the engine. A fresh locomotive had to be sent from York.

AGRICULTURAL SOCIETY.—At the annual meeting of the Tadcaster Agricultural and Horticultural Society it was announced that on last year's show was a gain of £38 7s. 10d. It was decided to hold the 37th annual show on Wednesday, July 30th. Mr C. B. Lamb, of Inholmes, Tadcaster, was appointed president, Mr C. C. Scholefield chairman, and Mr W. H. Green vice-chairman. Messrs M. Thomlinson and Son were re-appointed secretaries.

TADCASTER CHORAL SOCIETY CONCERT.—The Tadcaster Town Hall was crowded on Wednesday night on the occasion of a choral and orchestral concert by the Tadcaster Choral Society. The chorus, numbering 40 voices, was under the conductorship of the Rev. C. Daly Atkinson (vicar of Wighill), and the band was composed of members of the York Symphony Orchestra. Coleridge-Taylor's "Hiawatha's Wedding Feast," the chief item in the programme, was given a very creditable rendering. The chorus sang with spirit and freedom of expression, though the tone was at times uneven in quality. The singing of the sopranos was especially good. The tenor soloist was Mr Tom Roberts, of Castleford. The effective work of the orchestra contributed greatly to the success of the performance. The rest of the programme included partsongs by the chorus, a violin solo by Miss Guy, of York, songs by Mr Roberts, and one or two orchestral pieces. Miss Sykes acted as accompanist.

South Milford School had the best attendance of all the schools in the district last month. The percentage was 96.35 against 80 for January, 1913.

Ison's Eye & Ear Dispensary LIMITED.

71, GREAT GEORGE ST., LEEDS

MR. THOS. ISON, OCULIST and AURIST.

THIS INSTITUTION was ESTABLISHED in 1871. The system of working is the provident one, each patient paying a small periodical fee whilst under treatment, and they may, therefore, justly expect to receive the prompt care and attention which in many instances in charitable institutions is too often omitted. The treatment is of a mild and safe character, without operation or the use of Ear Drums, Ear Cornets or other mechanical or painful appliances. Another advantage appertaining to this dispensary is its system of treatment by correspondence, by which sufferers at long distances, and in isolated positions can have the advantage of Mr ISON'S advice and remedies forwarded through the post. No case is undertaken unless there be a reasonable hope of cure, or benefit to the patient.

Attendance at Leeds every Tuesday, from 10 to 7 on Alternate Saturdays, Feb. 21st and Mar. 7th.

Hours 10 to 7. Other days by appointment.

TREATMENT WITHOUT OPERATION. ARTIFICIAL HUMAN EYES fitted from 15s. SPECTACLES and EYE PRESERVERS, 3/6 to 10/6. Gold Frames from 20s.

SPECIAL NOTICE.—There are many cases of failing eyesight which can be speedily remedied by mild local treatment, thus dispensing with the use of glasses.

ROTHWELL & DISTRICT JOTTINGS.

What is to be the outcome of the Gilchrist lectures at Garforth? The absence of facilities for what he described as "intellectual recreation" was commented on by Mr E. H. Foster, who was no doubt expressing the opinion of numerous residents, but the institute movement in Garforth has been such a failure that probably any attempt to resuscitate it would meet with disencouragement. The establishment of three clubs in the urban area has made provision for the recreation of a section of the male part of the community, and it is doubtful that room exists for another institution. If all classes of the community could be persuaded to act together something might be accomplished, but a large sum of money would be required to provide suitable premises, in which there would be facilities for social intercourse, physical and intellectual recreation, etc.

The Gilchrist lectures have been attended by very large audiences, and they have furnished evidence that a good many people are not above continuing their education, so, as a first step, I would suggest to the committee the formation of a Literary Society—a permanent institution, which would continue the work so admirably begun in connection with the Gilchrist lectures. Monetary assistance would, I believe, be forthcoming, and, if it were not possible to persuade the Gilchrist Trust, to again oblige Garforth, good lecturers could be engaged to fill the programme. This is an easy, cheap, and safe way of setting to work, and out of it a greater enterprise might arise.

An amusing story concerning the old Vicar of Manston, who was for over fifty years in the parish, was related at a bazaar at Crossgates by Mr J. W. Morkill, Chairman of the Skyrack Petty Sessions, who at one time resided at Austhorpe Lodge. One Sunday, he said, an anthem was to be given in the church, and that was rather an event, involving much thought and practise. The great moment arrived, and the organist played the opening bars, but when he tried to stop one unruly note persisted in making itself heard. The aged Vicar looked up at the organ loft, stroked his long beard, and, in sepulchural tones, said "Put in that stop." The sound from the organ however, continued, and again the Vicar said "Put in that stop." Then from behind the red curtain in the organ loft a head appeared and a voice was heard—"I've put her in, but she wain't stop buzzing."
